"To make provision for the needs of commerce, shipping, and navigation of the port, to promote, develop, construct, reconstruct, alter, repair, maintain, equip and operate all waterfront properties including piers, wharves, sea walls, docks, basins, channels, slips, landings, warehouses, floating and other plants or works, dredge, and reclaim land, construct, equip and operate terminal trackage with sidings and turnouts and railroad connections between docks, piers and other port structures, and connect the same with main line tracks, and to establish, equip and operate all other facilities or aids incident to the development, protection and operation of the port, as may be deemed proper and desirable in its judgment, and it may modify its plans from time to time as the requirements of commerce, shipping and navigation may demand, and as part of such development and operation to provide for tugs, dredges, fireboats, barges, cold storage plants, and all other publicly owned facilities or appliances incident to the operation of the port, of such number and character, and in such places as the board may deem feasible and proper.

"To take charge of, control, and supervise the Port of Oakland, including all the waterfront properties, and lands adjacent thereto, or under water, structures thereon, and approaches thereto, storage facilities, and other utilities, and all rights and interests belonging thereto, which are now or may hereafter be owned or possessed by the city of Oakland, including all salt or marsh or tide lands and structures thereon granted to the city of Oakland in trust by the state of California for the promotion and accommodation of commerce and navigation."

It is not claimed by intervener that there was not then or that there was not at any time subsequent remaining sufficient unexpended and unapplied funds of said bond issue to pay the estimated expense of said lease contract or that the proceedings adopted by said city are in any way faulty, but it is claimed that the expenditure of public moneys for the construction of said warehouse for the uses to be made of it by the lessee amounts to lending the credit of the state, which is inhibited by article 4, § 31, State Constitution, in aid of said lessee in its private business enterprise, and, further, that it amounts to taxation for private purposes, which is a violation of the federal Constitution as well as of the State Constitution.

Public notice of intention to lease to the highest bidder, for a term of ten years, the filled parcel of tide lands, which is the subject of this proceeding, comprising approximately seven acres, together with a warehouse to be erected thereon by said board at the cost of approximately $400,000, and calling for bids thereunder, was duly published and circulated. The notice sets out the form of lease adopted by said board, which is very full as to its purpose and the mutual obligations of lessor and lessee. It provides, among many other things, that said warehouse shall be used for the purpose of receiving, storing, warehousing, preparing, and otherwise handling goods and for shipping the same and for other industrial uses which will promote commerce and shipping, but for no other purpose without the written consent of the lessor. The lessee is limited in the conduct of his business by the purposes above mentioned. The lessee shall be required to route for shipment by water from said Fourteenth street wharf terminal, adjacent to said premises, all goods which shall be owned or the shipment of which shall be controlled by the lessee, and which shall be shipped by water in the conduct of said business, whether produced or packed at said warehouse or elsewhere, and which can be conveniently shipped from said terminal and not in excess of the cost to the lessee or consignee at which such goods may be shipped from any other established cargo pier, dock, or terminal in general use in San Francisco or in Alameda county, to destination, including the cost of freight to, and the tolls and other regularly established charges incident to the handling of goods through, and the shipment of said goods from, such other established cargo pier, dock, or terminal. The lessor is required to maintain and operate said Fourteenth street wharf terminal in an efficient manner and as a public terminal for the accommodation of shipping by rail and water, including the handling of general cargo freight subject to what appear to be reasonable conditions. The lessee shall guarantee that the amount of goods which shall be routed and shipped by it annually during each of the first four years of said lease, over and through said terminal, shall not be less than 50,000 tons, and, in the event that said tonnage shall be less than 50,000 tons, the lessee shall pay to the lessor an amount equal to 30 cents for each ton of such deficiency as full compensation for nonperformance of its agreement; provided, that the lessor shall be relieved from full compliance with the terms of said lease in the ratio that the existence of conditions which expressly excuse performance has cut down the tonnage. The lessee shall agree that during the term of said lease it will exert its best efforts to cause all vessels necessary or convenient for the shipment of its goods to call at said terminal for the purpose of receiving shipments of goods which said lessee agrees to ship; also to pay all taxes, assessments, or charges which may be levied by the state, county, or city or any other tax or assessment levying body upon any interest or possessory right which the lessee may have in or to said land or improvements thereon and pay all taxes or assessments and charges levied upon goods, merchandise, fixtures, appliances, and equipment owned by said lessee. The board of port commissioners agrees to continue to cooperate with the United States government in carrying forward to completion an extensive plan of channel and harbor improvements adopted by the Congress of the United States and approved by the President April 28, 1928, making provision for extended harbor improvements in anticipation of the greatly increased volume of shipping originated by said Fourteenth street wharf terminal and the erection of said warehouse, which is to be further increased by other structures and improvements for the convenience of shipping generally in accordance with the program adopted by said board of port commissioners.

Upon the execution of the lease, the lessee is required to deposit $60,000 in gold coin as security for the faithful performance of its terms. We have set forth so much of said lease as tends to show that said warehouse was constructed and is to be used for a purpose in aid of and promotive of commerce and navigation.

The board, as a preliminary requisite, having found that it was necessary and convenient for the promotion and accommodation of shipping and commerce that said warehouse building be erected pursuant to the plan of harbor development adopted by it, and that it was consistent with the requirements of commerce and navigation that it be leased to a person or corporation shipping large cargoes of products and merchandise to foreign as well as domestic ports, accepted the bid of $34,598, annual rental, offered by Rosenberg Bros. & Co., a corporation, pursuant to said published notice of intention to lease said premises, and awarded the lease to said corporation. It is alleged, and not denied, that said Rosenberg Bros. & Co. is a responsible private corporation engaged in the business of packing, processing, and shipping dried fruits and related products, and that the general cargo and package goods annually shipped by said lessee equals in quantity and tonnage that of any other shipper on the Pacific Coast; that said Rosenberg Bros. & Co. owns or controls numerous large warehouses and packing plants located in the main on waters and transportation systems tributary to the western waterfront of said city of Oakland; that said corporation annually ships in excess of 50,000 tons of general cargo and package goods; that said corporation proposes to install in said warehouse shipping equipment, partitions, and other fixtures employed in the warehousing of dried fruits and related products in order that such products may be stored, processed, packed, and shipped directly from said Fourteenth street wharf terminal on ocean-going vessels to various ports of the world. In addition to said annual rental of $34,598, it is estimated that the earnings on the minimum guaranty of 50,000 tons per year will be in excess of $35,000. This added tonnage, it is claimed, will be sufficient to induce large steamship companies to make the port of Oakland a regular port of call, and this circumstance will in turn cause shippers to bring their products and merchandise to said port for shipment, thus increasing the revenue and tolls of the city of Oakland and aiding and assisting the general scheme and plan of establishing a permanent harbor that will rank in commercial importance with the leading harbors of the Pacific Coast.

[1] Intervener assails certain provisions of the lease, and seems to see in them a covert design on the part of the parties thereto to promote the private interests of Rosenberg Bros. & Co., rather than a purpose to aid the welfare of the harbor project. We have examined the provisions of the lease, and it appears upon its face to be a fair attempt to execute the trust imposed upon the board by the bond issue proposition and the charter amendment. The fact that certain provisions of the lease by which the parties make an effort to provide for a fair adjustment in case of failure to comply with certain covenants in the event that fortuitous circumstances should prevent a compliance therewith may also tend to create in the mind of the lessee a temptation to resort to equivocal conduct in an effort to gain an unfair advantage is not sufficient ground to support the conclusion that such a result was contemplated by the lessor or that the lessee would be influenced thereby. The lease appears to be reasonable, and no difficulties will be encountered if the parties thereto are disposed to interpret it in the light of the circumstances in which it was executed and the purposes which both the lessor and lessee covenanted to promote. It is to be presumed that they will so act.

[2] The questions of the necessity for the improvements and the adoption of the method by which they will be accomplished are matters resting in the judgment of the governing body, and courts will not interfere with the exercise of its judgment unless it appears that its proposed plans are not only not the best that might be adopted, but that they are so inadequate and impracticable as to inevitably result in a waste of public funds. In other words, the judgment of the board as to the necessity for the construction of the building and the methods employed for its construction will not be disturbed except in cases where the exercise of judgment or discretion is shown to have been unquestionably abused.

[3, 4] Intervener contends that the clause of the lease which grants to the lessee said building "for the purpose of receiving, storing, warehousing, preparing and otherwise handling goods and for shipping the same and for other industrial uses which will promote commerce and shipping" gives to the lessee the right to use said building for unlimited purposes which may not at all correlate with the carrying out of the trust with which said board is charged by the express provisions of the charter of said city of Oakland. We do not think that the literal language of the lease is reasonably susceptible of such a construction. Certainly the lease cannot be so construed when read as a whole and in connection with the grant to the city, the charter, and the ordinance of the city in submitting the bond proposition to a vote of the people. The erection of said building and the letting of the same for the purposes set forth in said lease must have some relation to and connection with, or be promotive of the accomplishment of the main purpose, to wit, the development, improvement, and upbuilding of a harbor with all the wharves, piers, warehouses, and other facilities and conveniences essential to its business success and growth in order to receive judicial approval. That said lease contract authorizes an improvement and conveniences consistent with the scheme of developing and improving said harbor we entertain no doubt.

Intervener places much emphasis upon the fact that the board had no control of the management of said private corporation and for that reason the present transaction falls within the rule announced in Egan v. San Francisco, 165 Cal. 576, 133 P. 294, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 754. Cases of this character are not in point. The board in the instant case does not propose to participate in or share in the profits arising from the operation of the business conducted by Rosenberg Bros. & Co., nor is its interest in said corporation's financial success in any degree different from the interest that a landlord may ordinarily feel in his tenant's success. The Rosenberg Bros. & Co. transaction constitutes but a single unit in a comprehensive plan adopted with the purpose of improving and developing a harbor in which deep water vessels may find anchorage, promotive of commerce and navigation, and not with the primary purpose of promoting the business success of said corporation, although such a result may be an incident of said purpose. The board is primarily interested in the development and commercial success of said harbor, and, as to it, it exercises exclusive control. Its relation with said corporation is that of landlord and tenant. Nor is there impressive persuasiveness in the claim that said warehouse building cannot, in the light of the situation presented, be lawfully leased for the exclusive use of said corporation on the theory that exclusiveness as to control would destroy its public character.

In the case of In re Mayor of New York, 135 N. Y. 253, 31 N. E. 1043, 31 Am. St. Rep. 825, involving a proceeding to condemn wharf and other properties as a part of a plan of putting under public ownership all wharves and piers in the city of New York, the question of exclusive use was disposed of in the following pertinent language:

"If the necessity for exclusive use exist, such necessity ought to be recognized by the city and the attempt to supply such necessity is an attempt to fulfill a public duty. The fact of exclusive use by the lessee must be considered with reference to all the other property of a like nature possessed by the city and at which all necessary and proper facilities may be afforded for the remainder of the commerce of the port.

"* * * The circumstances surrounding the case must be viewed in all aspects. The act plainly contemplates through all its provisions the fact that there will always remain under the direct control and possession of the city sufficient piers and docks for the accommodation of all commerce which may seek our port and which has no special pier or dock leased to the owner of the vessel desiring dock facilities.

"Considering the large extent of the property of this description owned and to be owned by the city, together with the fact that there is no absolute direction to the city to lease the smallest portion thereof to anyone, we become at once convinced that the leasing which will be actually carried on under this mere permission will amount to no more than a special regulation of the manner in which a comparatively small portion of the whole property of this nature owned by the city shall be used for the legitimate ends of commerce.

"This mere permission to use property by leasing it to others, when the whole surrounding circumstances are examined, cannot be regarded as providing for its private use.

"When used by lessees under the facts already stated, the use is a public one. The use is public while the property is thus leased, because it fills an undisputed necessity existing in regard to these common carriers by water, who are themselves engaged in fulfilling their obligations to the general public; obligations which could not otherwise be properly or effectually performed. And in filling the necessity for such accommodations, the city or the state is only performing its public duty."

Also directly in point is Marchant v. Mayor, etc., City of Baltimore, 146 Md. 513, 126 A. 884.

The object of the board in erecting said warehouse was not the promoting of the business of drying and processing fruits, but it was built with the view that it would develop said harbor and harbor commerce, which is clearly a public purpose.

[5] It cannot be successfully argued that the public had the right to occupy each and every portion of said expansive tide land area granted to said city. If this were so, a lessee would have no security of possession. Public property in the control of a private party may, nevertheless, serve a public purpose as an aid to, or a part of, a general plan. The contention of intervener that said warehouse cannot be leased for an exclusive use to said corporation can find support only upon the assumption that said warehouse and site constitute the whole and all there is of the project. Such is not the case. It is but a unit of a comprehensive plan. The board is commanded by said city charter "to make provision for the needs of commerce, shipping and navigation of the port, to promote, develop, construct, reconstruct * * * and operate all waterfront properties, including piers, wharves * * * warehouses * * * and operate all other facilities or aids incident to the development * * * of the port as may be deemed proper and desirable in its judgment." (Italics supplied.) Said board is not attempting to lease or pass into the exclusive use of a private corporation all or any considerable part of the vast land acreage upon which other warehouses must be constructed as provided by charter as the commercial growth of the harbor shall require. The present warehouse, which intervener claims is not immediately needed, is but the beginning of an extensive plan of harbor improvement. Provision should be made in all cases for future growth.

Intervener further objects to the uses which are to be made of said warehouse, claiming that they are not strictly warehouse uses. We think this objection is not well taken. Said warehouse is for the accommodation of a vast fruit-growing section of the state, and offers as an outlet to said producers the highways of the sea. As a medium of commerce, it thus serves a public use. That said private corporation was awarded the lease does not make its possession any more exclusive than the possession that ordinarily passes with any other leasehold. A proper regard for the laws of health and sanitation require that a building or warehouse in which dried, processed, and related fruits are to be stored awaiting shipment during the summer season should be separate and apart from buildings in which hides, tallow, cured fish, and other articles of commerce of a noisome character are stored. The equipment necessary for ventilation and refrigeration and the conveniences essential for repacking and reprocessing and caring generally for such commodities may require an arrangement of the floor spaces which would constitute obstructions in the storage of general merchandise. Nor does the objection against leasing the whole of a publicly owned warehouse, rather than a portion thereof, appear to possess merit. It is admitted that Rosenberg Bros. & Co. are very extensive shippers of many varities of dried, cured, and processed fruits. It may be that one warehouse will not be sufficient in a short time to properly accommodate them as shippers. If their business, present or prospective, would warrant the board in its judgment to construct a warehouse to be used in the housing of merchandise pending transportation, we see no good reason why it should not do so. If others wish the same, or any accommodation whatsoever, doubtless provision will be made for them on equal terms with said corporation. It will be remembered that said warehouse is to be at all times conducted in a manner not inconsistent with the promotion of the commerce of said port and the board retains supervisory control over the uses to which said warehouse will be devoted. It will also be borne in mind that the building is the warehouse type, agreeing in construction with others now built or to be built, and the lessee is required upon expiration of its lease, if the lessor so requires, to remove from said building all partitions, equipment and other conveniences it may have placed therein, thus leaving the floor space of said warehouse open and ready for the storage of miscellaneous merchandise.

Intervener has cited a number of cases which hold that statutes attempting to authorize cities or counties to engage in the manufacture and sale of cement, or to issue bonds and donate them to a private manufacturing enterprise for the purpose of encouraging the establishment of factories or private industries within the taxing district in which said factories are proposed to be located, are void. Such cases as City and County of San Francisco v. Boyle, 195 Cal. 426, 233 P. 965, have no bearing upon the principle of law which must rule the decision in the instant case.

A number of cases are to be found in which the principle of law here involved was applied to situations quite analogous to the instant case, and the said several courts held that the power sought here to be exercised was a power properly conferred upon the governing body. The case of Veterans' Welfare Board v. Jordan, 189 Cal. 124, 208 P. 284, 22 A. L. R. 1515, answers many of the objections urged by intervener against the power of the board of port commissioners to enter into the lease which is here under attack. It cannot be doubted that said board is fully authorized to construct warehouses for purposes which intervener terms general uses by the public. It is the use which is to be made of said warehouse which furnishes the grounds of intervener's protest. In the Veterans' Welfare Board Case, supra, this court adopted as a part of its decision the language of the Supreme Court of the United States pronounced in Green et al. v. Frazier et al., 253 U. S. 233, 40 S. Ct. 499, 64 L. Ed. 878, in sustaining the validity of the Home Building Association of North Dakota, which, because of its appositiveness to the several questions raised in the instant case, is reproduced:

"What is a public purpose has given rise to no little judicial consideration. Courts, as a rule, have attempted no judicial definition of a 'public' as distinguished from a 'private' purpose, but have left each case to be determined by its own peculiar circumstances. Gray, Limitations of Taxing Power, § 176. 'Necessity alone is not the test by which the limits of state authority in this direction are to be defined, but a wise statesmanship must look beyond the expenditures which are absolutely needful to the continued existence of organized government, and embrace others which may tend to make that government subserve the general well-being of society, and advance the present and prospective happiness and prosperity of the people.' Cooley, Justice, in People v. Salem, 20 Mich. 452 [4 Am. Rep. 400]. Questions of policy are not submitted to judicial determination, and the courts have no general authority of supervision over the exercise of discretion which under our system is reposed in the people or other departments of government. Chicago, B. & Q. R. R. Co. v. McGuire, 219 U. S. 549, 569 [55 L. Ed. 328, 31 S. Ct. 259]; German Alliance Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 233 U. S. 389 [58 L. Ed. 1011, 34 S. Ct. 612, L. R. A. 1915C, 1189; see, also, Rose's U. S. Notes].

"With the wisdom of such legislation, and the soundness of the economic policy involved we are not concerned. Whether it will result in ultimate good or harm it is not within our province to inquire."

It appearing to this court that said lease and contract was lawfully entered into and is valid, subsisting contract between the parties thereto, and no sufficient legal cause having been shown why said auditor of the city of Oakland should not attach his certificate to said lease and contract, it is therefore the order of this court that a writ of mandate do issue commanding said auditor to attach his official certificate to said lease and contract in the manner and as provided by the charter and laws of said city of Oakland.

O'CONNELL v. LAMPE et ux. (L. A. 10134.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 28, 1929.

1. Landlord and tenant ⚷92(1)—Lessee's payment of rent was consideration for irrevocable right to purchase leased premises in accordance with option.

Payment by lessee of rent for full term of lease constituted sufficient consideration for lessee's irrevocable right to purchase the leased premises for specified price in accordance with option.

2. Specific performance ⚷57—Specific performance is proper remedy to require lessor to convey premises to lessee electing to exercise option to purchase.

Specific performance is proper remedy in case of lessor's refusal to convey premises to lessee electing to exercise option to purchase, if contract is certain in all its terms, fair and just in all its parts, and not a hard or unconscionable bargain.

3. Specific performance ⚷49(2)—Mere inadequacy of price is not, in absence of statute, ground for refusing remedy of specific performance.

In absence of statute on the subject, mere inadequacy of price or inequality in value between the subject-matter and the price is not a ground for refusing the remedy of specific performance.

4. Specific performance ⚷49(2)—Inadequacy of consideration sufficient to defeat right to specific performance relates to time of formation of contract (Civ. Code, § 3391, subd. 1).

Inadequacy of consideration, in order to defeat right to specific performance by virtue of Civ. Code, § 3391, subd. 1, must relate to the time of the formation of contract rather than date on which option to purchase was exercised.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edward T. Bishop, Judge.

Action by John A. O'Connell against Herman Lampe and wife. From a judgment for defendants and an order denying the entry of a different judgment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

John L. McGonigle and Tanner, Odell & Taft, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Dan M. Critchley, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WASTE, C. J. This appeal of the plaintiff from a judgment and decree refusing to order and direct the specific performance of an agreement to convey real property, and from an order denying the entry of another and different judgment, was placed upon a special calendar of this court upon an order to the respondents to show cause why said judgment should not be reversed, or that such order be made as might be meet in the premises. At the time of the placing of the cause upon said calendar, and the entry of the order to show cause, it appeared that the appellant's brief had been filed herein, but that no brief had been filed on behalf of the respondents, although the time for the filing of such brief under the rules of this court had long since expired. The order to show cause was, therefore, submitted upon the calling of the special calendar on points and authorities presented by the appellant.

On December 5, 1921, the respondents, by written instrument, let and demised the property in question to the appellant for a period of five years, at a monthly rental of $70, with the right of a renewal or extension for a similar period on the same terms, if the lessee were not in default. The lease, by its further terms, gave the lessee an option to purchase the leased premises during the five-year period for the sum of $8,000, the option to take effect immediately from the date upon which the lessee took possession.

Upon the execution and delivery of the lease, the lessee entered into and was thereafter in sole possession of the premises, and at the time of commencement of the action was conducting a general grocery business thereon. He paid the monthly rental, faithfully performed all the terms and conditions of the lease, and made valuable improvements on the property. On April 8, 1926, and prior to the expiration of the lease, the lessee exercised his right of option by tendering to the lessors the agreed purchase price and demanding a conveyance of the premises. On the refusal of the lessors to accept the tender and to specifically perform, the lessee brought this action, alleging, among other matters, the adequacy of the agreed purchase price of the premises. By their answer respondents denied the allegation of the complaint touching the reasonableness and adequacy of the purchase price. The evidence tended to show that the property was worth approximately $8,000 in 1921 when the lease was executed. It was stipulated by the parties, however, that the property was reasonably worth $12,000 at the time appellant elected to purchase it. The trial court denied the relief prayed for in the complaint, finding that the "lease and option contract was in effect a continuing offer, which was not accepted by plaintiff until April 8, 1926, and that the offer or agreement to pay $8,000, was at that time no longer an adequate consideration." It also purported to find, as a mixed finding of fact and conclusion of law, that the payment of $70 a month by way of rental, pursuant to the terms of the lease, "was not in excess of the monthly rental value of the premises, and therefore did not furnish an adequate consideration for the option for the purchase of the property." Because of these findings the judgment denying specific performance must be reversed.

the lessee by this lease, was not a mere offer without consideration. There was a valuable consideration moving from the lessee to the lessors. Contrary to the conclusion of the trial court, the payment by the lessee of the rent for the full term was the consideration for the lessee's irrevocable right to purchase the leased premises for the specified price, if he should elect to do so. Gordon v. Dufresne (Cal. Sup.) 271 P. 1066. Upon his doing so, what was before an option right became an executory contract for the sale and purchase of the property. Cates v. McNeil, 169 Cal. 697, 147 P. 944; Vassault v. Edwards, 43 Cal. 458, 464; Pomeroy's Specific Performance of Contracts (3d Ed.) § 169, p. 432. Such optional contracts are almost universally enforced, if fair and resting on adequate consideration, after the parties having the privilege of accepting them have exercised their rights in such a mode as to bind themselves by the contract. Even though unilateral before, on the exercise of the option such contracts become mutual. An option to buy land, perhaps more than any other form of contract, contemplates specific performance of its terms; and it is the right to have them specifically enforced that imparts to them their usefulness and value. (Note to section 169, Pomeroy's Specific Performance of Contracts, supra.) Specific performance is the proper remedy in such cases, if the contract is certain in all its terms, fair and just in all its parts, and not a hard or unconscionable bargain. Hall v. Center, 40 Cal. 63, 67.

[3, 4] In those jurisdictions in which there is no statute upon the subject the rule is, as stated by Professor Pomeroy, that mere inadequacy of price, that is, inequality in value between the subject-matter and the price, is not a ground for refusing the remedy of specific performance. Morrill v. Everson, 77 Cal. 114, 115, 19 P. 190; 2 Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence (4th Ed.) § 926. But section 3391, subd. 1 of the Civil Code provides that specific performance cannot be enforced against a party to a contract if he has not received an adequate consideration. "It is therefore put beyond the reach of successful argument that the laws of the state of California declare to its courts of equity that they shall deny the equitable relief of specific performance when they find an inadequacy of price standing alone." O'Hara v. Wattson, 172 Cal. 525, 535, 157 P. 608. While there seems to be a conflict among the authorities, the better rule appears to be that questions relating to the fairness and adequacy of the price must be referred to the inception of the agreement. Pomeroy's Specific Performance of Contracts, supra, §§ 177, 178 et seq. The accepted rule in this state is that the question of the inadequacy of the consideration relates to the time of the formation of the contract —that is, at the time the contract was made. Morrill v. Everson, supra, at page 116; Andersen v. Charles, 52 Cal. App. 290, 293, 198 P. 641; Keim v Lindley (N. J. Ch.) 30 A. 1063, 1086; 25 R. C. L. 210, par. 10. The trial court in this case departed from the rule and found an inadequacy of price, not at the time the lease was entered into and the option granted, but at the date on which the option to purchase was exercised. There is no finding of any unfairness or undue delay on the part of the lessee.

The judgment, and the order denying the motion of the plaintiff below for the entry of another and different judgment, are, and each is, reversed.

SNYDER v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR SAN DIEGO COUNTY et al.

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 30, 1929.

1. Insane persons 🔑13—Order for appointment of guardian for incompetent, made on day petition was filed, held void for failure to give statutory notice, notwithstanding recital that notice was given (Code Civ. Proc. § 1763).

Order appointing guardian for incompetent person, shown by record to have been made on the same day the petition for appointment of guardian was filed, precluding possibility of five days' notice of hearing as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1763, held void for want of jurisdiction, notwithstanding recital in order that notice of hearing had been given according to law.

2. Insane persons 🔑13—In proceedings to determine incompetency and appoint guardian, giving of statutory notice of hearing is jurisdictional (Code Civ. Proc. § 1763).

Giving of five days' notice of hearing on petition for appointment of guardian for incompetent person as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1763, is jurisdictional, and without it court has no power to adjudicate question of incompetency or appoint guardian of estate of incompetent person.

3. Insane persons 🔑13—Appearance of person charged with incompetency and consent to appointment of guardian held not waiver of statutory notice of hearing; incompetent being incapable of waiving notice (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1763, 1764).

Personal appearance of incompetent before the court in proceedings to determine incompetency and consent to appointment of guardian for her estate held not to amount to waiver of notice of hearing required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1763, so as to confer jurisdiction on court, since party charged with mental incapacity is incapable of waiving statutory notice or consenting to order under section 1764.

4. Insane persons 🔑39—Failure to give incompetent statutory notice rendered order for appointment of original guardian's successor void (Code Civ. Proc. § 1763).

Order appointing guardian of estate of incompetent to succeed former guardian, who resigned, held void for want of jurisdiction, where incompetent was not given five days' notice of hearing as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1763.

5. Insane persons 🔑71 — Court held without authority to cancel commissioner's certificate of sale of incompetent's land on foreclosure, where purchasers were not made parties.

Court in suit by incompetent held without authority to cancel commissioner's certificate of sale, on mortgage foreclosure, of incompetent's property, on ground that mortgage under which sale was made was procured by fraud, where purchasers of certificate were not made parties.

6. Insane persons 🔑27—Supreme Court on certiorari by incompetent to review orders determining incompetency and appointing guardians held without jurisdiction to adjudicate validity of mortgage on incompetent's property.

Supreme Court in original certiorari proceedings by incompetent to review orders of court adjudicating incompetency and appointing guardians held without jurisdiction to determine validity of mortgage as against property of incompetent or to cancel commissioner's certificate of sale on foreclosure, even if all necessary parties were before court.

Original proceeding by Alzeda R. Snyder, an incompetent person, by H. William Hess, her guardian ad litem, for writ of certiorari, to be directed to the Superior Court in and for San Diego County, Department No. 4, and Hon. C. N. Andrews, Judge, to review certain orders decreeing petitioner incompetent and appointing guardians. Orders annulled.

H. William Hess, for appellant.

CURTIS, J. This is an original application to this court, brought by Alzeda R. Snyder, an incompetent person, by H. William Hess, her guardian ad litem, directed to the superior court of the county of San Diego, praying for an order requiring said superior court to certify to this court a full transcript of the records and proceedings in the matter of the guardianship of Alzeda R. Snyder, an incompetent person, and that upon a review of said proceedings this court annul two certain orders made therein; in one of said orders, dated March 8, 1926, the said Alzeda R. Snyder was declared an incompetent person, and Albert E. Miller was appointed guardian of her estate; and in and by the other of said orders, dated April 8, 1927, Lucy Harris Murphy was appointed guardian, the said Albert E. Miller having resigned as such guardian, and his resignation, after the settlement of his account as guardian, having been accepted by said superior court. Upon the filing of said application or petition, this court made its order directing said superior court to certify to this court all the proceedings of record in said court in the matter of said guardianship. Said order has been complied with and said proceedings are now before us, duly certified as required by law and the previous order of this court.

[1, 2] The ground upon which petitioner asks for the annulment of said orders is that the court never acquired jurisdiction of the person of said incompetent person or of her estate to make either of said orders, for the reason that no notice, as required by section 1763 of the Code of Civil Procedure, was ever given prior to the granting of either of said orders. We will first consider the order of March 8, 1926. It appears from the return of the respondents, as well as by the allegations of the petition, that on that day the said Albert E. Miller filed a petition in said superior court, containing the necessary averments for the appointment of a guardian of the estate of the said Alzeda R. Snyder as an incompetent person, and asked therein for the appointment of himself as such guardian. On the same day the court made an order fixing the time for hearing said petition for 2 p. m. of said day. Said order provided "that said incompetent person be produced before the court at the time fixed herein for the hearing of said petition and that no notice of said hearing be given." The order appointing the said Albert E. Miller guardian recited "That notice of this hearing has been given according to law and the order of the court; that the allegations of said petition are true; that said Alzeda R. Snyder appeared personally before the court and consented to the appointment of a guardian of her estate." It appears from the foregoing that no notice was given to the said Alzeda R. Snyder of the time and place of hearing the petition of Miller to have her declared an incompetent and himself appointed the guardian of her estate, but that said incompetent person did appear personally in court and consented to the appointment of a guardian of her estate. It is true that said order contained a recital "that notice of this hearing has been given according to law and the order of the court." The only order contained in the proceedings certified to us, bearing upon the notice given Mrs. Snyder, was that of March 8, 1926, which provided that "no notice of said hearing be given." The further fact is shown by the record that the order appointing the guardian was made on the same day the petition for such appointment was filed. It was therefore impossible to give the five days' notice of the hearing of said petition as required by section 1763 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In spite of the above recital regarding notice contained in the order appointing the guardian, it must be held that from the whole record before us it conclusively appears that the notice required by the section of the Code just mentioned was not given. In the case of McGee v. Hayes, 127 Cal. 336, 59 P. 767, 78 Am. St. Rep. 57, the order therein considered which was an order appointing a guardian of the estate of an incompetent person, contained a recital that "he [the alleged incompetent] 'was duly notified of the time and place of the hearing of the petition heretofore filed herein.'" The court, however, found from the record that the only notice given or served was a copy of a certain order, which the court also found to be insufficient, and, in spite of the recital in the order regarding due notice given, held that the appointment of the guardian was void for failure to give the notice required by section 1763 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The giving of this notice is jurisdictional, and without it the court has no power to adjudicate the question of the incompetency of a person brought before it charged with being incompetent, or to appoint a guardian of the estate of such person. McGee v. Hayes, 127 Cal. 336, 59 P. 767, 78 Am. St. Rep. 57; Estate of Schulmeyer, 171 Cal. 340, 345, 153 P. 233; Estate of Espinosa, 179 Cal. 189, 175 P. 896; Grinbaum v. Superior Court, 192 Cal. 528, 221 P. 635.

[3] The next question is whether Mrs. Snyder's appearance in court at the time of the hearing and consenting to the appointment of a guardian of her estate amounted to a waiver of the required notice and gave to the court jurisdiction over the proceedings to have her declared incompetent and to appoint a guardian of her property. This same question was before this court in two different proceedings, and on each occasion it was held that a party charged with mental incompetency is incapable on the trial of the issue as to such incompetency of waiving the statutory requirement as to notice or of consenting to an adjudication of incompetency. McGee v. Hayes, 127 Cal. 336, 59 P. 767, 78 Am. St. Rep. 57; Guardianship of Sullivan, 143 Cal. 462, 77 P. 153. In the first of these cases the order appointing a guardian recited "that the said William L. McGee appeared in person at the hearing of said petition, on this day, and requested that said petition be granted." The court in passing upon the validity of the order appointing a guardian of his estate held said order to be void. In doing so it used the following language: "The presence of the incompetent could not supply the requirement of the statute that he should be served with notice of the hearing; he was incapable by reason of his incompetency to consent to the jurisdiction of the court or waive any of the steps necessary to confer jurisdiction upon the court, or to make any request that the petition be granted."

In Guardianship of Sullivan, supra, the court said, on page 466 of the opinion (77 P. 154): "The only question was as to whether or not there was such mental incompetency on the part of Mrs. Sullivan as to make it essential for the protection of herself and her property that a guardian should be appointed. The statute does not contemplate that any such adjudication should be made upon the agreement of the party alleged to be incompetent. If the party is in fact mentally incompetent, his request or consent that he be so adjudged is unavailing for any purpose. He is incapable of making any such request or giving such consent. McGee v. Hayes, 127 Cal. 336 [59 P. 767, 78 Am. St. Rep. 57]. If he be not in fact incompetent, his agreement that he is incompetent does not make him so, and the statute authorizes the appointment of a guardian on this ground only where, after full hearing and examination, it appears from the testimony that the person is in fact incapable of taking care of himself and managing his property. Code Civ. Proc. § 1764. The consent of the alleged incompetent was therefore unavailing for any purpose, except perhaps as evidence upon the question of incompetency." These authorities undoubtedly settle in this state the question of the power of a person accused of being incompetent to waive the notice prescribed by the statute, and to consent to an adjudication of incompetency. They expressly hold that such a person cannot waive the statutory notice nor consent to an order declaring him incompetent, and that an order made without giving the statutory notice is void, even when the alleged incompetent person appears in court in person and consents to the making of such order. The order of March 8, 1926, purporting to appoint Albert E. Miller guardian of the estate of said incompetent person was void.

[4] The same consequences must follow the order of April 8, 1927, appointing Lucy Harris Murphy the guardian of said estate to succeed Miller. The court not having acquired jurisdiction of said incompetent person or of her estate authorizing it to appoint Miller guardian of her estate, it would have no power to appoint a successor to Miller, except after proceedings had wherein all the requirements of the statute providing for the giving of notice to the alleged incompetent were complied with. The petition for the appointment of Mrs. Murphy was by the court, by an order made on April 4, 1927, set for hearing on April 8, 1927, and provided that a citation issue for the appearance of Mrs. Snyder and that it "be served personally upon said ward at least three days prior to said hearing." As before stated, the code section provides that notice of the hearing must be given at least five days before the hearing. The return to said citation shows that it was served upon Mrs. Snyder on April 4, 1927, which would not give the required five days' notice to her of said hearing. The court therefore never acquired jurisdiction to make the order appointing Mrs. Murphy guardian of Mrs. Snyder's estate. It follows, then, that each of said orders is void, and should be annulled.

[5, 6] In addition to the petition filed herein asking for the annulment of said orders, and subsequent to the filing of such petition, the petitioner by her guardian ad litem, H. William Hess has filed what she terms and designates as "Supplemental Data as to Relief Prayed For." In this instrument, among other things, the petitioner makes it to appear that after the appointment of Miller as guardian certain litigation instituted by him and affecting real property claimed to be owned by petitioner was compromised, and as a result of such compromise, the petitioner was awarded said real property subject to a prior mortgage; that Miller, as such guardian under order of court, sold the interest of petitioner in said real property for the sum of $9,500, to be paid $1,500 in cash and the balance evidenced by a promissory note for $8,000 secured by a second lien by means of a trust deed, upon said read property; that subsequently thereto the first mortgage was foreclosed, and the said real property was sold to William H. Sweetland and Adina May Sweetland under said judgment of foreclosure by H. J. Place, a commissioner appointed by the superior court of the county of San Diego, and that said Place had issued to said William H. Sweetland and Adina May Sweetland, his wife, a commissioner's certificate of sale of said real property, which certificate of sale has been recorded in the office of the county recorder of said county. It is further alleged in said supplemental pleading that said first mortgage was procured through trickery and device practiced upon Mrs. Snyder by persons who were the predecessors in interest of Sweetland and wife in the ownership of said first mortgage, and that the latter were at all times aware of the fraudulent origin of said first mortgage, and had notice that the same grew out of and resulted from certain transactions by and through which Mrs. Snyder was defrauded of property the value of which exceeded the amount of the promissory note secured by said first mortgage. Petitioner therefore asks for the cancellation of said commissioner's certificate of sale, and for other relief against him and the Sweetlands. None of these last-named persons are made parties to this proceeding, and the record does not show that notice of the pendency of these proceedings has been given to any of them, and no appearance has been made herein by any of said persons. Any order which we might make, therefore, in response to the prayer of this supplemental pleading or petition would be ineffectual for any purpose as against said parties for want of notice to them. But even if said parties were properly before this court upon notice duly and regularly served upon them, this court has no jurisdiction, either appellate or original, to entertain such a proceeding or to grant any relief thereunder. The validity of said mortgage as against the property of petitioner and the rights of the holders thereof and those of the purchasers of said real property at said foreclosure sale cannot be determined in this proceeding. The petitioner may have a good cause of action against said parties for the cancellation and annulment of said mortgage, but such action must be brought in the proper tribunal, and can only be finally determined after due notice is given to all parties interested therein.

For the reasons stated in this opinion it is ordered and decreed that those two certain orders of the superior court of the county of San Diego, in the matter of the estate and guardianship of Alzeda R. Snyder, an incompetent person, one of which is dated March 8, 1926, and purports to appoint Albert E. Miller guardian of said estate, and the other of said orders dated April 8, 1927, purporting to appoint Lucy Harris Murphy guardian of said estate, to succeed the said Albert E. Miller, are hereby annulled.

SHADY v. MERCANTILE ARCADE REALTY CO. (L. A. 9509.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 30, 1929.

1. Landlord and tenant ⟜232—Lessor, reducing rental for preliminary period conditionally, could recover from delinquent lessee balance due under modified agreement, plus amount of reduction, plus rental for subsequent months.

Lessor, reducing rental $200 per month for first eight months of lease on condition that lessee would faithfully perform covenants of lease during period of reduced rental, held entitled to recover balance due under modified rental agreement to end of reduced rental period and time of lessee's abandonment, plus $200 a month for that period, and full rent for subsequent months, where lessee became delinquent in paying rentals during the reduced rental period, and failed to give ten days' notice of intention to cancel as required by contract, and asserted claim to deposit on ground that lease was fraudulent.

2. Appeal and error ⟜1117—On motion of appealing defendant for judgment on findings, court must increase plaintiff's recovery where findings so require (Code Civ. Proc. § 663).

Where defendant not only appealed from the judgment, but moved for judgment on the findings under Code Civ. Proc. § 663, reviewing court is obliged to modify judgment as the findings require, though modification is in plaintiff's favor.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Guerin, Judge.

Action by J. Shady against the Mercantile Arcade Realty Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Bertin A. Weyl and S Laz Lansburgh, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Burnett Wolfson and Louis L. Swarthe, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. In this cause, paragraph I of the judgment is amended to read as follows: "That in the action entitled 'Mercantile Arcade Realty Company, a corporation, plaintiff, v. J. Shady, defendant,' numbered 160209, Mercantile Arcade Realty Company, a corporation, do have and recover of and from J. Shady the sum of four thousand six hundred eighteen and 44/100 (4,618.44) dollars, together with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent. per annum from the date hereof until paid; together with costs and disbursements of said Mercantile Arcade Realty Company, a corporation, incurred in said action, amounting to the sum of $71.30."

Paragraph II of said judgment is modified to read as follows: "That in the action entitled 'Mercantile Arcade Realty Company, a corporation, plaintiff, v. J. Shady, defendant,' numbered 167550, the said Mercantile Arcade Realty Company, a corporation, have and recover from said J. Shady the sum of twenty-nine hundred four and 75/100 (2,904.75) dollars, together with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent. per annum from the date hereof until paid."

As so modified, it is ordered that the said judgment be and the same is hereby affirmed, with costs to appellant. This judgment is so modified and affirmed for the following reasons:

First, it will be noted that the parties plaintiff and defendant have been transposed; the Mercantile Arcade Realty Company, a corporation, being known in the judgment as the plaintiff and J. Shady being known as the defendant. In this opinion said corporation will be called the company.

Said company leased, as of February 15, 1924, to defendant, shops 5 and 6 in the Arcade Building, Los Angeles, for a term of ten years, at a combined rental of $900 per month. In May, 1924, an amended agreement was executed by the parties, changing the spread of said rental but without changing the total amount thereof. The change provided for a rental of $700 per month instead of $900 per month between May 1 and December 31, 1924, with a rental of $1,000 per month for the succeeding sixteen months; then the old rate of $900 per month was to reattach. This concession, however was dependent upon the faithful performance of the covenants of the lease during the period of reduced rental. The right to cancel the leases was also given the defendant, provided he gave a written notice to that effect ten days prior to December 31, 1924, and provided also that he relinquished to the company the sum of $2,850, theretofore deposited with it as security for the faithful performance of the covenants of the lease on his part.

The findings show that in all these particulars Shady fell short of his covenants. He paid the October rental long after it was due. He paid only half of the November rental and none of the rental for December, abandoning the premises altogether on December 27, 1924. He failed to give the ten-day notice of his intention to withdraw from the contract. He failed to relinquish his claim to the $2,850 pledged as security as above stated. He adopted a contrary line of conduct altogether, by suing on December 22, 1924, to cancel said leases for fraud, and asked as well for the return to him of said sum of $2,850 so pledged.

The court found against him on all these issues and specifically established the integrity of the leases and decreed them to be binding and subsisting at all times herein. The company sued Shady in two actions—the first for the balance due on the rent for the months of November and December, 1924, at the rate of $700 per month, and January, 1925, at the rate of $1,000 per month, and for certain other undisputed items relating to charges for electricity, etc., aggregating $181.11, and for the sum of $200 per month with interest for the eight months beginning May 1, 1924, and ending December 31, 1924; the second action was for the original rate of $900 per month rental for the months of February, March, and April, 1925.

These two causes of action and the action by Shady for a cancellation of the leases were consolidated and tried together. The judgment denied all relief to Shady on his cause of action, but the company was given only partial relief, confined to the balance due under the modified rental agreement up to December 31, 1924, and attorneys' fees. Nothing was allowed it on the $200 per month reduced rental claim nor upon the claim for rental subsequent to December 31, 1924.

[1] From the above facts found by the court there is no escape from the conclusion that plaintiff company is entitled on the findings to judgment for the $200 per month because of the failure of Shady to live up to the conditions upon which the right to said reduction was to come into being, to wit, the prompt payment when due of the reduced rental. Shady, in fact, not only failed to pay, but repudiated the leases altogether. The company was also entitled to judgment for the rent from January to April, 1925, inclusive, for the same reason. Shady did not elect to cancel within the required time, nor did he relinquish his claim to said $2,850, pledged as security for the faithful performance of the covenants on his part to be kept and performed. On the contrary, he sought to repudiate the leases and reclaim this sum. Having failed in these efforts, he must submit to the legal consequences.

[2] Appellant not only appealed from the judgment, but moved for judgment on the findings as provided under section 663 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Under this state of the record there is nothing to do but to modify and affirm the judgment as above ordered.

McCOLGAN v. BANK OF CALIFORNIA NAT. ASS'N et al. (S. F. 12087.)★

Rehearing Granted Feb. 28, 1929.

1. Principal and agent 🔑43(1)—Agency, unless coupled with interest, terminates on principal's death.

Agency terminates on death of principal, unless agency is coupled with an interest.

2. Principal and agent 🔑43(2)—"Power, coupled with an interest," involves beneficial interest in subject or power given as security.

To create a "power coupled with an interest," which will survive death of principal, there must coexist with the power a beneficial interest in the subject which is enforceable in the name of the attorney in fact, or a power must be given as security for payment of money other than that arising as compensation through the exercise of the power, or as security for the performance of some act of value.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Power Coupled with an Interest.]

3. Brokers 🔑9—Contract between landowner and land company for subdivision of land into lots and sale thereof at minimum price, dividing profits over stated amount, held not to give company interest, surviving death of principal.

Contract by which landowner placed property in hands of land company to be subdivided into lots, and sold at not less than minimum price, with provisions for division of profits over stated amount, and for owner's limitation of amount of improvements which might become charged against the land, held, to create agency which terminated on death of property owner, and not to give company interest in land involving "power coupled with on interest," which survives principal's death.

4. Brokers 🔑9—Power to subdivide land and sell lots, retaining portion of profits over certain amount, is not coupled with an interest.

One authorized to lay off land into lots and sell the lots dividing the proceeds above a certain amount with the owner does not have a power, coupled with an interest, such as will survive the death of the owner of the land.

5. Principal and agent 🔑43(2)—Agent must have interest derived from power or property in question to give him "power coupled with an interest."

In order that a power may be a "power coupled with an interest," agent must have an interest derived from the power or from something else in the property in reference to which the power is given; mere payment in consideration of power being insufficient.

6. Brokers 🔑9—Provision in contract authorizing agent to subdivide and sell lots that agreement was coupled with interest held ineffectual to give agent interest surviving owner's death.

Contract by which landowner authorized land company to subdivide land into lots charging improvements to the land, and selling the lots at a minimum price, dividing proceeds over stated amount, did not give land company a power coupled with an interest in the land surviving owner's death by virtue of provision in contract that "this agreement is coupled with an interest, and is only revocable by the consent of the parties hereto."

7. Trusts 🔑25(1)—Trust will not be impressed on realty to secure performance of personal contract, unless intent to do so is expressly stated.

Trust will not be impressed on realty to insure the performance of a purely personal contract, in the absence of words expressly showing such an intent.

8. Trusts 🔑1—Trust must require some act on part of trustee inuring to beneficiary.

Trust must have a purpose, and require for its fulfillment some act on the part of the trustee inuring to the beneficiary.

9. Trusts 🔑30½(1)—Contract authorizing land company to subdivide land into lots, and sell lots to prospective purchasers, held not to create trust upon land.

Contract between landowner and land company by which the company was to subdivide land into lots, and transfer the property to purchasers which it should procure, held, not to create either express or resulting trust, since no act was required on part of land company as trustee inuring to any beneficiary.

10. Brokers 🔑77—Land company, authorized to subdivide property into lots, and sell lots, charging owner's share of profits with moneys advanced, held not entitled to lien for advancements, where no profits were ever realized.

Land company, which failed to realize any profits for landowner under contract whereby it undertook to subdivide lots and sell them, retaining sufficient to liquidate its claim for money advanced from landowner's share of profits, held not entitled to lien for moneys advanced, though contract gave express lien for moneys advanced for particular purpose of laying out streets.

11. Brokers ⚷77—Land company held not entitled to lien for expenses in carrying property under contract given lien for moneys advanced for subdividing tract and laying out streets.

Land company, authorized to subdivide land into lots, and sell the lots, retaining part of profits, and deducting from owner's share sufficient to liquidate claims for moneys advanced him, and given lien for expense of subdivision and laying out streets, held not entitled to lien for expenses in "carrying" the property, in view of rule that the expression of the one is the exclusion of the other, especially where no profits had been realized.

Preston, Curtis, and Langdon, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Action by R. McColgan against the Bank of California National Association, the Co-operative Land Company, and others. From a judgment in favor of defendant last named, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

For opinion of the District Court of Appeal, see 267 P. 151.

George D. Collins, Jr., of San Francisco, for appellant.

John L. McNab and Byron Coleman, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This cause was transferred to this court for hearing and determination after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District, Division 1, for a more mature consideration of the question involved, and a more extended examination of the authorities than we were able to give in the limited time permitted for the consideration of the petition for the transfer. After such consideration and examination, we are satisfied with, and adopt as the opinion and conclusion of this court, the opinion and conclusion of the other court, as announced by Mr. Justice pro tem. Parker, and concurred in by Justices Tyler and Knight:

This is an appeal from a final judgment and decree to the extent that the judgment is against plaintiff and in favor of defendant Co-operative Land Company, a corporation. The action, as instituted, was against other defendants, but since then plaintiff has acquired all of the interest of the remaining defendants.

The action was one to quiet title. The court below found and decreed that plaintiff was not entitled to have his title quieted against Co-operative Land Company, and found necessarily that said Co-operative Land Company had and has an interest in the real estate in controversy valid and substantial, and by the decree confirmed.

The entire controversy hinges about the construction of certain contracts, and the one definite question to be answered relates to the nature of the power created by these contracts. Therefore, with some particularity of detail, we relate the facts as the record here discloses them.

At the outset, we do not deem it necessary to give any description of the property involved other than to state that it comprises certain tracts of land situated in the town of Mayfield, county of Santa Clara, Cal. The land involved is rather extensive, and a surveyed description of it long, and no useful purpose can be served by further particularization. The real estate was formerly owned in fee by one Percy Beamish, and both parties here derive their title through him. It is conceded that the title of Beamish was good and sufficient, and comprised the fee. On October 28, 1904, Beamish entered into a contract with the Co-operative Land & Trust Company (a corporation). Here it may be noted that this corporation subsequently changed its name to Co-operative Land Company, respondent here. To avoid further specification or confusion, whether referring to it before or after the change of name, this corporation will hereinafter be called the land company. This contract was substantially as follows: Beamish, in consideration of the covenants and agreements on the part of the land company, and in consideration of services and money advanced by said land company, by the terms of this agreement, agrees to place the following described property in the hands of the land company, with power to control the same as hereinafter stated: [Here follows description of the lands, being lands here involved.] Beamish further covenants and agrees that the control of said property shall remain and be exclusively in the hands of the land company until the lands are finally sold and disposed of, and all the terms and conditions of this agreement are fulfilled, settled, and adjudged, and all the affairs in connection therewith fully concluded. Out of the proceeds of the sale of said property, it is agreed and understood that Beamish shall receive not less than the sum of $300 per acre, and the tract contains approximately 20 acres. Beamish covenants and agrees to give, and does give, full power and authority to the land company to lay out streets and avenues on the property, and subdivide said property into lots and acres, or in any way, and to sell the same in any part or parts, piece or parcel, or in any manner, the land company sees fit, and Beamish ratifies and confirms all acts and deeds of the land company in regard to laying out of streets, subdivisions, and sales. Beamish further agrees to make a good and sufficient deed to any part of said land to any party named by the land company.

Beamish agrees that the land company shall have full power and control of the selling price of the land, and that the land company may fix or change said price at will, provided, however, that the prices to be fixed for subdivisions by the land company shall not be fixed so as in the aggregate to produce a less sum than $9,000 for the entire tract, plus the amount to be expended in improvements as hereinafter stated by the land company. If at any time it shall be necessary to reduce the prices of subdivisions of said tract below the figure stated, it is understood and agreed that it may be done only after the written assent of Beamish shall have been given. Beamish covenants and agrees to give the land company 5 per cent. commission on the selling price of said land, also that one-half of the net profits on the sales of said land above the average price of $300 an acre shall belong to the land company, after deducting 5 per cent. commission on the gross selling price. Also that all interest on sales, mortgages, and notes above the average price of $300 per acre shall be considered as profits, and equally divided between the parties. No division of profits shall take place until Beamish shall have been paid $6,000, plus all taxes paid by him, and the land company shall have been reimbursed for money expended in making the improvements herein specified. Thereafter the profits shall be divided every 90 days.

All deeds shall be given by Beamish or his trustee for that purpose created, or their heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns. All trust deeds, mortgages, and notes shall be made to Beamish, and the same and all papers in connection therewith shall be deposited with, and kept by, First National Bank of Palo Alto in trust for all parties concerned; and for said purpose it is hereby agreed that said bank shall be the trustee of the parties hereto.

It is agreed that all expenses and costs of surveying said tract and the cost of laying out, grading, turnpiking, and graveling, and other improvement of streets, is to be paid for by the land company, and is to be considered and become a charge against the land, and added to the net selling price of $300 per acre; provided, however, that the land company shall begin the work of improving said tract within 30 days from the signing of the contract, and shall complete the same, and place said tract on the market for sale within 3 months thereafter. It is further agreed that the land company shall expend no greater sum in making said improvements than $500 without first obtaining the consent in writing of Beamish; it being the purpose of this clause to give Beamish the power to limit the amount which by improvement may become a charge against the land.

It is agreed that all taxes shall be paid by Beamish and be a charge on the land, and added to the net selling price of $300 per acre. The expense of advertising and selling the land shall be at the proper cost and charge of the land company. At any time Beamish may demand a statement of account and conditions from the trustee and the land company, and it shall be the duty of either or both to furnish such a statement when demanded.

It is further agreed that the terms of sale may be cash, or that purchaser of land may pay one-fourth in cash at time of sale, one-fourth in one year, and one-half in two years after the date of sale, with privilege of paying any amount at any time, any unpaid balance of the purchase price to be secured by mortgage on the property sold, with note bearing interest at 8 per cent. per annum; or sales may be made on contract for deed on the payment of one-tenth of the selling price in cash, and the balance in twenty-four monthly payments, with interest at 6 per cent. added pro rata to each monthly payment. Where a mortgage is given, the mortgagee to pay the taxes; where contract for deed is taken, the purchaser is to pay the taxes.

This agreement is coupled with an interest, and is only revocable by the consent of the parties hereto; but it is understood that for breach of covenant either party may rescind.

On February 28, 1905, a rider was executed by the parties to this agreement and affixed to the first contract. This rider provided that the land company shall have, and is thereby given, power to execute contracts for the sale of the land described, which said contracts shall be binding upon Percy Beamish. All contracts, however, are to be made subject to the terms of the first agreement, and this authority is to be considered and construed as a part of the original agreement.

On the 6th day of November, 1908, this contract with the rider was recorded in miscellaneous records of Santa Clara county.

Thereafter on June 10, 1907, Percy Beamish entered into another contract with the land company, which latter contract is substantially as follows:

Beamish, in consideration of the agreement thereafter contained, and for and in consideration of the contract of October 28, 1904, makes these additional covenants and agreements to be added to, and make a part of, the agreement of October 28, 1904, and this present agreement shall be made a part of, and construed with, the former agreement, and, whenever the agreements may conflict, this later agreement shall control.

Beamish agrees that the land company shall have full power and control of the selling price and terms of sale of the lands, and may make and fix or change said price at will, and this control of the selling price by the land company shall be absolute, and Beamish ratifies and confirms all that the land company may do in making agreements of sale of said land and fixing the price thereof.

It is further agreed that, after Beamish has been paid the full sum of $6,000 as provided in original contract, all money received thereafter for the sale of the land shall be divided equally between the parties. The land company waives the 5 per cent. commission as specified in the original contract. It is further agreed that all expenses of surveying and subdividing the land, and the cost of laying out, grading, turnpiking, and graveling, laying sidewalks, water pipes, and other improvements of streets, commissions of agents other than the land company, advertising and selling said tract, shall be paid equally share and share alike by the parties hereto. There is then a provision that an outstanding mortgage in the sum of $2,250 shall be paid by Beamish, together with the taxes for 1906 and 1907.

It is then agreed that the land company may retain from the one-half of net profits that may become due to Beamish a sufficient sum to pay the mortgage referred to or to make partial releases thereof, together with interest and taxes thereon. It is also provided that the land company shall retain from the Beamish profits sufficient sums to liquidate any claim for money that has been advanced to Beamish by the land company. All sales made by the land company heretofore are ratified and confirmed.

It is understood by this agreement that it is the intention that it shall be so considered and construed that all the expenses of any kind and nature attending the sale of the land shall be borne equally between the parties, and that thereafter the net profits shall be divided share and share alike, providing the share of the net profits belonging to Beamish shall be first charged as hereinbefore specified.

This contract was likewise recorded on November 10, 1908, in miscellaneous records of Santa Clara county, Cal.

On March 12, 1912, Percy Beamish conveyed the real property by deed of trust to R. McColgan and C. H. Williams, as trustees for D. A. McColgan as beneficiary, and as security for a loan to Percy Beamish. On March 22, 1915, the trustees under the trust deed conveyed the property by deed to D. A. McColgan. Thereafter, on or about September 19, 1924, plaintiff, R. McColgan, became the record owner of said property by reason of various mesne conveyances subsequent to said conveyance to D. A. McColgan by the trustees.

Prior to the commencement of this action, there had been fully paid to the land company all expenses and costs of surveying and subdividing the tract of land, and said Beamish also fully paid the land company all expenses and costs of laying out, grading, turnpiking, graveling, and other improvement of streets mentioned in the clause of the contract as being a charge on the land. The charge and lien given said land company by said contract were fully satisfied and discharged by said payments.

From time to time the land company advanced for other purposes, in accordance with the terms of the contracts, sums amounting to $3,252.62, and the accrued interest thereon up to October 1, 1924, equals $1,914.15. Also the land company advanced moneys for the use of Beamish in the sum of $1,916.43, and the interest thereon computed $1,650.29. No part of either of the sums advanced or the interest on either has been repaid.

Percy Beamish died on March 14, 1916.

The judgment and decree of the trial court adjudged as follows: That plaintiff is the successor in interest of Percy Beamish in and to the lands involved; that plaintiff is entitled to take nothing by the action, and is not entitled to have his title quieted as against the land company; that the land company is the owner of an interest in said real property in accordance with the terms and conditions of the contracts hereinbefore set forth; that the land company is entitled to a charge and lien against the property and the proceeds of any sales thereof as security for the repayment of $3,253.62 principal and $1,914.15 interest, and also is entitled to a lien and charge against the half interest in the property remaining in Percy Beamish and the proceeds of any sales in the sum of $1,916.43 principal and $1,650.29 interest; that the land company is entitled to carry into effect, and fully perform, and cause to be fully performed, the provisions of the contracts with Percy Beamish; that under the terms of the first agreement Percy Beamish, or his trustee for that purpose created, was to execute all deeds that might be necessary under the performance of the contract; that by the terms of the contract it was agreed that First National Bank of Palo Alto should be trustee of the parties.

The decree then provides that the land company is entitled to demand and receive and cause to be executed and delivered by plaintiff any and all deeds and conveyances which may be necessary to secure to purchasers from the land company a good and sufficient title, such deeds to have the same force and effect as if executed by Percy Beamish in his lifetime, and if, upon demand, plaintiff shall neglect or refuse to execute and deliver such deeds and conveyances, or in the event of the death or incapacity of plaintiff the land company is entitled upon application to the court to have appointed a trustee or administrator under the orders of the court to execute the necessary deeds, and in the event of the appointment of such trustee or commissioner, all the expenses in connection therewith shall be charged to plaintiff, his personal representative, successor or assigns. Any balance over and above all of these claims and charges and expenses, if any there be, to which Percy Beamish may have been entitled during his lifetime, shall be paid to plaintiff.

The record before us consists of the judgment roll and the engrossed bill of exceptions, which latter shows the fact herein stated to the effect that the amounts hereinbefore referred to have been paid; that is to say, the bill of exceptions discloses that the amounts listed as costs of surveying and subdividing the tract, and all expenses and costs of laying out, grading, turnpiking, graveling, and other improvement of streets, have been fully paid and discharged.

Appellant's reasons advanced on this appeal are stated thus: Either taken separately, or read together, the contracts are nothing more than agreements of agency by which plaintiff's predecessor, Beamish, as owner of the land, gave to the land company exclusive right to sell the land for a compensation, to be measured by the price realized; that, Beamish having died in 1916, the power of the agent land company at that instant ceased, and the agency came to an end.

Next appellant urges that in any case defendant land company is not entitled to a lien upon the land as decreed.

Without further analyzing the contention of appellant, as regards the first claim, the question presented is whether the agency created, or the power given, was or was not coupled with an interest.

[1] If the rights of the respondent land company were all embraced within a mere naked agency, it is settled that the agency ceased with the life of Beamish. If, however, we find what in legal parlance is denominated an agency or power coupled with an interest the conclusion is different.

This brings us, therefore, to an inquiry as to what an agency coupled with an interest means. In Mechem on Agency (2d Ed.) §§ 570–575, we find the subject well discussed. The author finds a general loose use of the word "interest," and cites illustrations. Those illustrations pertinent to this discussion may be given, viz., (1) an interest, not amounting to a property or estate in the thing itself, but still an interest in the existence of the power or authority to act with reference to it, not for the purpose of earning a commission by the exercise of the power, but because the agent has parted with value, or incurred liability, or assumed obligations, at the principal's request or with his consent, looking to the exercise of the power as the means of reimbursement, indemnity or protection; (2) an interest or estate in the thing itself, concerning which the power is to be exercised, arising from an assignment, pledge, or lien created by the principal, coupled with which is the power to deal with the thing itself in order to make the assignment, pledge, or lien effectual.

These two interests illustrated differ from each other in the fact that in the latter the agent has an estate or interest in the subject-matter of the power, while in the former his interest is rather in his right to exercise the power over the thing in order to make it available for the security or protection contemplated. Each of these illustrations might be called a power coupled with an interest, and each has been so called, though the interest in the respective cases is of a different nature. The leading case on the subject, and the one most quoted and relied upon, is the case of Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat. 174, 5 L. Ed. 589. The opinion was written by Chief Justice Marshall, and the reasoning thereof stands unchallenged, and, in fact, both appellant and respondent here concede the controlling force of the decision. The opinion reads:

"We hold it to be clear, that the interest which can protect a power, after the death of a person who creates it, must be an interest in the thing itself. * * * The words themselves would seem to import this meaning. 'A power coupled with an interest,' is a power which accompanies, or is connected with, an interest. The power and the interest are united in the same person. But if we are to understand by the word 'interest,' an interest in that which is to be produced by the exercise of the power, then they are never united. The power, to produce the interest, must be exercised, and by its exercise, is extinguished. The power ceases, when the interest commences, and therefore, cannot in accurate law language, be said to be 'coupled' with it. * * * The interest or title in the thing being vested in the person who gives the power, remains in him, unless it be conveyed with the power, and can pass out of him only by a regular act in his own name."

[2] In a review of the authorities, it will be found that on almost every occasion when the question of a power, coupled with an interest, has arisen, the case of Hunt v. Rousmanier has been accepted as the leading authority. Without reviewing these cases, we may turn to the California authorities on the subject, which are in complete accord in accepting the rule of Hunt v. Rousmanier, supra; Barr v. Schroeder, 32 Cal. 609; Flanagan v. Brown, 70 Cal. 254, 11 P. 706; Cox v. Hughes, 10 Cal. App. 553, 102 P. 956; Boehm v. Spreckels, 183 Cal. 247, 191 P. 5; Todd v. Superior Court, 181 Cal. 414, 184 P. 684, 7 A. L. R. 938. From all of these authorities but one conclusion may be reached. However it may be phrased, the rule remains that to create a power coupled with an interest there must coexist with the power a beneficial interest in the subject thereof which is enforceable in the name of the attorney in fact and will survive the constituent; or the power must be given as security for the payment of a sum of money other than that which arises as compensation through the exercise of the power, or as security for the performance of some act of value. Todd v. Superior Court, supra.

the rule, we conclude that the respondent acquired no interest in the subject-matter of the contracts, namely, the lands; and, having acquired no interest coupled with his power, the power was terminated upon the death of Beamish. This conclusion is compelled from the language of the contracts themselves. For instance, in the original contract, which remains in that respect unchanged, the land company was restricted in the amount to be expended without first obtaining the consent of Beamish; and it was expressly stated that the purpose of this clause was to give Beamish the power to limit the amount which by improvement may become a charge against Beamish's land. Likewise it was agreed that deeds were to be given by Beamish or his trustee for the purpose named. Further still, the agreement provides specifically "Beamish covenants and agrees that the control of the property shall be exclusively in the hands of the land company until finally sold, etc.; the phrase thus italicized being indicative of an agency; likewise the provision in the first contract for commissions.

The rider of February, 1905, in no way changes the relationship. The final agreement, rather than altering the legal relationship of principal and agent, tends to confirm its existence. A fair reading of the last contract indicates its purpose to be only to enlarge the powers of the agent, manifestly on the theory that, in the absence of those later provisions, no such powers were originally given. It will likewise be noted that in this last agreement, while the land company was to receive its compensation in a mode exclusive of commissions as such, nevertheless the contract expressly provides for commissions to agents other than the land company.

Scrutinizing carefully the provisions of all the contracts, it cannot be found where the land company has acquired, or was given by Beamish, the slightest vestige of interest in the lands themselves. By various methods of construction, natural and forced, it might be held that a relationship possibly greater than that of mere principal and agent resulted from the agreements. But no interest in the premises such as contemplated in the doctrine of a power coupled with an interest can be created in the land company.

In Walker's American Law of Real Estate Agency (2d Ed.) at page 23, § 16, we find the law again stated thus:

"An interest in the land itself, as distinguished from the proceeds of it, is the distinguishing feature of a power coupled with an interest."

[4] One authorized to lay off land into lots and sell, the proceeds above a certain amount to be divided with the owner, has not a power coupled with an interest. Le Moyne v. Quimby, 70 Ill. 399; Atlantic Coast Realty Co. v. Townsend, 124 Va. 490, 98 S. E. 684; Hall v. Gambrill (C. C. A.) 92 F. 32.

[5] In order that a power may be a power coupled with an interest, the agent must have an interest derived from the power or from something else in the property or thing in reference to which the power was given; that he paid a valuable consideration for the power will not be enough. Coney v. Sanders, 28 Ga. 511, 513.

In passing, it may be noted that in most of the decided cases the question is presented on facts similar to those in the case at bar. It should be borne in mind that the doctrine of agency, coupled with interest, is in itself an exception to the general rule that the power of the agent ceases upon the death of the principal. As an exception, it should not receive a construction that would destroy the rule. It would be economically unsafe to extend the rule to the end that a condition might result where the real estate of a nation should be held under agency or power given by deceased persons. To have property and property rights controlled and handled under the principalship of past generations is manifestly destructive of progress, and can result only in chaos and confusion.

In Hicks v. Post, 154 Cal. 22, 96 P. 878, we note this language applicable here:

"The case is simply one of an agency to sell land. * * * The agent, in the hope and belief that he will be able to sell the land at a profit, * * * agrees to and does make certain expenditures upon the land. If he is able to make the sales he will be reimbursed for these expenditures out of the proceeds of the sales. If he fails to make the sales he loses the expenditures which he has made. This is the element of chance which necessarily inheres in a contract of this character."

The agency in the instant case was first conferred in 1904, and the record indicates that it still remains unexecuted in full. There is nothing to indicate that any of the powers were executed, though we may assume that some lots have been sold and other things done. There is nothing inequitable in the doctrine of Hunt v. Rousmanier, supra, or in its application. One desirous of subdividing the property of another can purchase the same, and thus end all questions of agency or power. Or, if unable to do so, he may readily secure a sufficient interest to protect his investment against sudden revocation. Or, in lieu of either of these, he may still, with his eyes open, take the chances.

[6] In support of its claim that there was a power coupled with an interest, respondent contends that the language of the contract should govern. The contract, as noted, reads:

"This agreement is coupled with an interest and is only revocable by the consent of the parties hereto."

This may be influential in determining the revocability of the agreement by either party, and particularly by Beamish during his lifetime. It may be conceded that Beamish could not revoke the power conferred under the agreement. However, this would not have the effect of avoiding the rule that the power came to an end upon the death of Beamish. The statement in the contract that the agreement that the power is coupled with an interest means nothing. Evidently the one drawing up the agreement had some idea that to give the agreement the capacity of survival after Beamish's death the power must be so coupled. Yet the bare statement did not accomplish this result. The fact is not to be established by a mere characterization. The statement is a general, loose one. It may reasonably mean that the interest remained in Beamish, in the absence of anything to the contrary in the contract appearing. Surely there is nothing to indicate what the interest is; and, if we did accept the phrase in the contract as binding, we would still be left to surmise as to what actually passed to the land company other than the naked power.

[7-9] Respondent argues that, if it is determined that the agency or power was not coupled with an interest, and therefore ceased on the death of Beamish, nevertheless the facts show that an express trust was created in the lands, and that such trust should be enforced, and was equitably enforced by the terms of the decree herein. All of the cases hereinbefore cited negative this contention.

In the case of Miller v. Lerdo Land Co., 186 Cal. 1, 198 P. 778, a situation sufficiently similar to permit quotation arose. There the court says:

"Respondent's rights * * * are: That he shall receive one-third of the selling price of any and all of the said lands; that this one-third of the selling price shall be paid to respondent at the times and in the manner and according to the same terms as the remaining two-thirds are paid to appellant. * * * It is apparent * * * that the contract conferred upon respondent nothing more than a right to one-third of the proceeds when * * * sold. There is a distinction between an interest in the land itself and an interest in the money obtained from the sale of the land. * * * The contract relied upon by respondent * * * does not, by any possible construction, purport to pass a present interest in the lands to respondent nor to provide for the holding of the lands or any interest therein for the benefit of respondent, nor is there anything from which any such intention can fairly be inferred. There is, therefore, no express trust."

A trust will not be impressed upon the realty to insure performance of a purely personal contract in the absence of words expressly manifesting such intent. A trust, whether express or resulting, must have a purpose, and require for its fulfillment some act on the part of the trustee inuring to the beneficiary. Here there is no act required of Beamish other than to transfer the property to purchasers procured by the land company when and if procured. We hold this not to be a trust upon the land.

[10] Lastly, appellant attacks the judgment and decree which impresses a lien upon the property for certain sums of money. The contract provided for a lien as follows:

"It is further covenanted and agreed that all expenses and cost of surveying and subdividing said tract, and the cost of laying out, grading, turnpiking and graveling and other improvement of streets, is to be paid for by the land company, and is to be considered and become a charge against the land."

The engrossed and certified bill of exceptions before us states that plaintiff proved to the satisfaction of the trial court that all charges incurred for purposes in the clause recited have been fully paid and discharged before the commencement of the action. The lien impressed upon the property by the decree, pursuant to the findings, is for advancements and expenditures for other purposes. The contract specifically provides that the land company shall retain from the one-half of net profits due Beamish sums sufficient to liquidate any claim for money advanced to him. For the sum found to have been advanced, the court below decreed a lien against the lands in favor of the land company. The contract will not justify such a lien, and impressing it upon the lands as against the plaintiff is unsupported by any authority. Indeed, none is cited. This is purely a matter of accounting between Beamish and the land company, and, if no profits accrue, there is no fund out of which the land company may be reimbursed. It is obvious that the main purpose of the arrangement was to subdivide the lands and sell the same. This was the understanding of the land company, and, if the undertaking failed to the extent that there were no profits, the contract of Beamish to repay moneys only out of the profits did not then become a burden upon the lands.

[11] The remaining sum of money for the repayment of which a lien is impressed upon the lands is, as expressed in the findings, money advanced "to carry said property in accordance with the terms of the contracts." There is absolutely no provision in the contract to which these advancements refer. The nature of these advancements is not disclosed. The clause of the contract last set forth determines the kind and character of expense chargeable to the land. The ancient rule of construction "expressio unius," etc., applies. Whatever the term "carrying the property" may mean, no lien or charge arises against the land by virtue of moneys expended in that enterprise under the contract.

Respondent at the oral argument agreed that the main point in the appeal was the determination of whether or not the land company acquired any interest in the lands under the contract. No attempt has been made by respondent to justify the lien.

The judgment is reversed.

PRESTON, J. I dissent. The opinion as written is based upon a misconception of the legal effect of the contracts between Beamish and the land company. It is true that the original contract provided that the cost of laying out, grading, turnpiking, graveling, and other improvements was to be a charge against the land, and that the expense of advertising and selling the land should be at the proper cost and charge of the land company only, but this arrangement was changed by the supplemental contract to the effect that the above-enumerated items and the expense of advertising and selling said tract should be paid equally share and share alike by the parties to the contract; the only exception being that the Semino mortgage of $2,250 should be borne exclusively by Beamish. It was further provided in the later contract that the party of the second part was given exclusive management and control of said property and should retain from one-half of the net proceeds belonging to Beamish a sum or sums sufficient to liquidate the said Semino mortgage and "to liquidate any claim for money that has been advanced to the party of the first part by the party of the second part."

It is again specified in said contract: "It is understood by this agreement that it is the intention that it shall be so considered and construed that all the expenses of any kind and nature attending the sale of said tract of land herein described shall be borne equally between the parties hereto and that thereafter the net profits shall be divided share and share alike between the parties hereto, provided that the share of the net profits belonging to the party of the first part shall be first charged with the mortgage, taxes and interest, hereinabove mentioned, and also for any money advanced by the party of the second part."

Under the findings of the court, the amount found due the land company was composed of two sets of items; one for Beamish's part of the carrying charges, and the other for advances in money made to him by the land company. It will thus be seen that the land company had as against Beamish bona fide claims for money, claims which have an independent existence and which are in no sense claims that were to be due only upon the exercise of the power conferred by the agency. In other words, the only construction which can be placed upon the contract is that the net proceeds of any sales made by the land company were to be held by the land company as security for the item or items of the character hereinabove specified. That is, this is not a case where the agent was to earn a commission and to get other kinds of compensation only upon the exercise and completion of the power conferred by the agency. This is no such case, and the principle governing it is altogether different from that set forth in the authorities cited in the opinion. Indeed, the case of Todd v. Superior Court, 181 Cal. 406, 417, 184 P. 684, 688 (7 A. L. R. 938), the chief case relied upon in said opinion, recognizes the distinction here involved, by use of the following language: "It is well settled, therefore, that in order to constitute an irrevocable power of attorney there must coexist with the power a beneficial interest in the subject thereof which is enforceable in the name of the attorney in fact and will survive the constituent; or the power must be given as security for the payment of a sum of money other than that which arises as compensation through the exercise of the power; or as security for the performance of some act of value."

This case comes under the second clause of said paragraph, to wit, power that is given as security for the payment of a sum of money arising other than as compensation through the exercise of the power. This principle is also recognized in Norton v. Whitehead, 84 Cal. 264, 24 P. 154, 18 Am. St. Rep. 172, and it is the principle first set forth in Posten v. Rassette, 5 Cal. 469, and stated as follows in Marziou v. Pioche, 8 Cal. 522, 536: "Where an agent, for the collection of debts, or the sale of property, advances money to his principal before he collects the debt, or sells the property, it must be presumed, from the nature and character of the transactions, that the parties intend the agent shall have a lien for his advances, unless there is 'an express stipulation' to the contrary. It makes no difference whether the advances be made before or after the power is given, so they are approved by the principal. And when the principal, as in this case, expressly gives the power, for the very purpose of providing the means to return the advances made by the agent, there would seem to be no doubt as to the irrevocable character of the power. 5 Cal. 469, Posten v. Rassette."

Of course, in a case where the only interest of the agent is compensation to be gained from the proceeds of the sale of property the subject of the power, there is no agency coupled with an interest; but, as above pointed out, that is not the case before us. Happily Mr. Justice pro tem. Parker, in a case written since the writing of the opinion about to be adopted by this court, made the distinction for which I here contend. Lane Mortg. Co. v. Crenshaw (Cal. App.) 269 P. 672, 679, 680. In that case a mortgage company, having a 20-year lease upon a building, for sufficient consideration had been given an agency to control the said building and to lease the same, and was to receive a commission of 5 per cent. It was there held that inasmuch as the 20-year lease was a thing of value that might be jeopardized by the taking away of the agency to manage the building, the agency was one coupled with an interest. The subject is thoroughly considered, and from the opinion we quote the following: "We think that there is hardly a case that can be made to which these principles could have a more direct and fitting application than the case at bar. The Lane Company has a 20-year lease in the entire second floor of the 12-story building which is the subject of the power. That this is an interest there can be no question. (Union Trust Co. v. Reed, 213 Mass. 199, 99 N. E. 1093; Inyo Water Co. v. Jess, 161 Cal. 516, 119 P. 934; Walther v. Sierra Ry. Co., 141 Cal. 288, 74 P. 840; Payne v. Neuval, 155 Cal. 46, 49, 99 P. 476; Friedman v. Macy, 17 Cal. 226; Dahlberg v. Haeberle, 71 N. J. Law, 514, 59 A. 92; Brickill [Brickell] v. Atlas Assurance Co., 10 Cal. App. 17, 101 P. 16; 16 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law [2d Ed.] 1102.) The interest does not arise only upon the execution of the power, as was the situation in Hunt v. Rousmanier, supra, or Todd v. Superior Court, supra. It is a live, active, valuable interest, coupled with the power to the extent that if the power did not exist the interest would be subject to destruction or forfeiture. The lease, as hereinbefore pointed out, would be totally valueless in the absence of compliance with the provisions of the original land lease. The powers granted the Lane Company in their total amount to no more than placing in the hands of the company directly the means of preserving its said interest. This manifestly constitutes such a power as Chief Justice Marshall refers to in Hunt v. Rousmanier, namely, a power forming part of the contract and security for the performance of an act deemed valuable. The power in the present case was expressly made irrevocable and expressly tied to the entire transaction in the creation of the leasehold interest. We would concede that if the Lane Company merely held an agency to collect rents and retain 5 per cent commission the agency would be revocable. But the mere fact that, incidental to the execution of the coupled power, an additional interest is created in the proceeds thus derived in no sense impairs the coupling of the power and interest theretofore existing."

Coburn v. Davis, 201 Iowa, 1253, 207 N. W. 586, 587, illustrates the class of case in which the opinion as written seems to place the one before us. In said case the agent agreed to sell lots belonging to his principal and was to receive as compensation only a commission earned from such sale. It was held, of course, that the agency was not coupled with an interest, but in disposing of this question the court intimates that it might be different if it were a case like the one before us, for it is said: "Appellant cannot be said to have acquired an interest in the subject-matter of the contract. He was to incur no expenses for which appellee was to reimburse him. He did not hold the contract as security for the payment of any sum to become due thereunder, and his sole and exclusive right and duty was to sell the lots and to account for the proceeds received therefor after deducting commissions."

There is also another theory upon which the judgment of the court below may well be sustained; that is, the theory that this transaction formed an equitable lien or mortgage in favor of the land company. A clear statement of this doctrine is found in the case of Nau v. Santa Ana Sugar Co., 79 Cal. App. 685, 691, 250 P. 705, 707, where, quoting from Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, vol. 3 (3d Ed.) § 1235, it is said: "Every express executory agreement in writing, whereby the contracting party sufficiently indicates an intention to make some particular property, real or personal, or fund, therein described or identified, a security for a debt or other obligation, or whereby the party promises to convey or assign or transfer the property as security, creates an equitable lien upon the property so indicated, which is enforceable against the property in the hands not only of the original contractor, but of his heirs, administrators, executors, voluntary assignees, and purchasers or encumbrancers with notice."

See, also, the recent case of Hunt v. Curry, 153 Tenn. 11, 23, 282 S. W. 201, 205, from which we quote the following: "It has been said by this court that every express, executory agreement in writing, whereby the contracting party sufficiently indicates an intention to make some particular property therein described or identified a security for a debt or other obligation, or whereby the party promises to convey or assign or transfer the property as security, creates an equitable lien on such property, good against the original contractor, his heirs, representatives, voluntary assignees, or purchasers or incumbrancers without notice. ([Southern] Ice & Coal Co. v. Alley, 154 S. W. 536, 127 Tenn. 173.)"

From the above it clearly follows that, while here there was not an express lien given, there was an agency coupled with an interest or else an equitable lien created. Upon either theory the judgment of the court below should be sustained. In this connection it might also be noted that the interest of Beamish in these lands passed out of his hands by foreclosure proceedings in 1915. Beamish himself died in the year 1916. D. A. McColgan succeeded to the interest of Beamish directly, and the land company was allowed to proceed for seven years after this date and for six years after the death of Beamish before the present claimant, R. McColgan, came upon the scene. The land company was during all this time in exclusive possession of the property, and he took title subject to all equities in favor of said company. I am unable to see how, upon any theory of equity or justice, R. McColgan can prevail in this case without paying the items claimed by the land company. The judgment should be affirmed.

RILEY v. HEUER.

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 28, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⚷1002—Conflicting evidence will not be construed to upset jury's verdict.

Supreme Court will not construe genuinely conflicting evidence so as to upset verdict of jury and judgment of court thereon.

2. Wills ⚷55(5)—Jury's finding of testamentary incapacity of testator, suffering from tuberculosis and from psychosis, held sustained.

Evidence of tuberculosis of all testator's vital organs, of psychosis or toxic condition causing insanity by poisoning system, and of his dislike of wife and apparent hallucinations as to her conduct, held to sustain jury's finding of testamentary incapacity at time of execution of will excluding wife and giving all his property to sister.

3. Wills ⚷337—Refusal of new trial, in will contest, for testimony of testator's relatives as to his statements concerning bad conduct of wife, whom he excluded from will, held not abuse of discretion.

In proceedings for contest of will in which testator excluded his wife, trial court's refusal of new trial for testimony of testator's sister-in-law and mother as to his statements concerning his wife's bad conduct and cruel treatment towards him held not abuse of discretion, since testimony should have been produced at trial in exercise of due diligence, and merely indicated continuance of hallucinations on part of testator.

4. Trial ⚷352(8)—Failure of foreman to attach signature to answer to special issue did not render verdict defective, where foreman signed at bottom of verdicts and verdicts were assented to.

In action tried on special issues, failure of foreman of jury to sign his name after jury's answer to first of three special issues held not to render verdict defective, where foreman's name appeared after other issues and at bottom of the verdicts, and foreman read the verdicts aloud in open court and they were assented to by the jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Proceedings by Mabel Estella Heuer for the probate of the will of Norman Sidney Riley, deceased, contested by Margie Dee Riley. From a judgment denying probate, proponent appeals. Affirmed.

P. H. Johnson, of Sacramento, for appellant.

T. A. Farrell, of Sacramento, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. Contest of will before probate. Norman Sidney Riley died in the Veterans' Hospital, Livermore, Cal., on January 19, 1928. On January 16, 1928, three days previously, the instrument here in question was published. It was prepared by an attorney by the name of Callaghan, residing at Livermore, and was witnessed by him and also by a young man in the employ of said Veterans' Hospital. The sole legatee of the will was Mabel Estella Heuer, a sister of decedent, and her husband, James C. Heuer, was named in said will as executor. The will was prepared in the office of the attorney before consultation with decedent upon information furnished by the said James C. Heuer. Admittedly the information respecting the whole document, except as to one or two spaces left blank until the time of execution, was given to said legatee above mentioned and by her transmitted to her husband and by him to the said attorney.

The contestant is Margie Dee Riley, the widow of decedent. The grounds of contest are unsoundness of mind and undue influence. Both proponent and executor remained in the sickroom during the execution of the document. The verdict of the jury was in favor of contestant on both issues, and judgment denying probate to the document as the will of decedent followed. The legatee and proponent has appealed from said judgment.

[1, 2] A careful reading of the record fails to disclose any reason whatsoever for the reversal of this judgment. Counsel presenting this appeal did not try the case in the court below, and but for his known sincerity we would make still greater dispatch of this appeal. It must be borne in mind that this court will not construe genuinely conflicting evidence so as to upset the verdict of the jury and the judgment of the court thereon. On the contrary, we do just the opposite. With this rule in mind, an examination of the record shows a veritable avalanche of evidence that decedent, prior to execution of the will and for some days previously, was in a settled condition of mental unsoundness to such an extent as to prevent him from making valid testamentary disposition of his property. This abundantly appears from the lips of three physicians and some six or eight intimate acquaintances, with practically no disinterested evidence whatsoever to the contrary. Ample evidence also was introduced justifying the conclusion that decedent was possessed with the delusion that his wife was the cause of his condition and had been otherwise unfaithful and derelict. The jury was well warranted in believing that for some years past an estrangement had existed between decedent and the members of his own family, who, the record discloses, consisted of his mother, his sister, and at least one brother. Repeatedly declarations had been made by decedent to the effect that he did not want them or any of them to have any of his property.

Decedent was a soldier during the late war, and as a result of poisonous gases his lungs and other vital organs were affected, and this trouble in later years developed into tuberculosis. For some period of time next before his death he suffered from what the doctors say was tuberculosis of practically all the organs of his body. About the year 1925, Margie Dee Riley was employed by the government as a nurse. In the early part of the year 1927 decedent and said nurse intermarried. The evidence shows, that, adhering to his purpose not to leave any of his property to his blood relatives, he did, on October 17th of that year, at a time when his mind was sound, deed his real property, consisting of a house and lot in Sacramento, to his wife and assigned to her his policy of insurance issued to him by the government of the United States, placing the documents in escrow for delivery upon his death.

During the greater part of the married life of decedent and contestant they were happily mated, but it appears that on or about January 6, 1928, the condition of decedent had grown so much worse that he was at that time in practically a dying condition with tuberculosis, as above stated, of all his vital organs. He was at that time suffering from what is known as psychosis, a toxic condition, which means insanity due to absorption of the poison produced by disease other than a true disease of the mind. In this case the toxic condition was caused by the absorption of pus throughout the body, which affected the mind of decedent, which condition resulted from tuberculosis of the lungs, intestines, intestinal tract, bladder and kidneys. At about the above-mentioned date, decedent took a violent dislike to his wife, charging that she was the cause of his physical condition and attributing to her all kinds of humiliating and disgraceful conduct. It is true that proponent claims that this belief on the part of decedent may have been well founded, but there is ample evidence to show that the jury was warranted in believing that it was wholly unfounded and was in fact but a delusion or hallucination of mind on the part of decedent. The evidence was abundant from which the jury concluded that the wife was dutiful and affectionate and had borne her part faithfully and well and was greatly humiliated by the sudden aversion on the part of decedent toward her.

About this said 6th day of January, 1928, decedent caused some third party to request the proponent to come to his house, whereupon she came and practically took charge of the sickroom; contestant, the wife, remaining in the kitchen but still doing all she could for the comfort of decedent. A deep ill-feeling developed between the wife and sister during this period, so much so that it resulted in a free for all hair-pulling fight on or about January 7, 1928, over the papers which had theretofore been delivered in escrow for the benefit of the wife; the sister having undertaken to get possession of them.

On or about the 10th day of January, 1928, decedent was removed to the Veterans' Hospital. The doctors who saw him on and about this day and friends and acquaintances who saw him during the same period all pronounced him of unsound mind, stating that his conversation was incoherent and there was a wild look in his eyes; that he often failed to recognize his friends and physician. Those acquaintances who saw him later in the hospital were of the same opinion for similar reasons, as was also the physician in charge of the hospital. One of the subscribing witnesses had no opinion as to the sanity or insanity of decedent, and the attorney, the other subscribing witness, gave unconvincing evidence on that question, due no doubt to lack of acquaintance with and knowledge concerning decedent.

If the evidence in this case was not sufficient to uphold the verdict of unsoundness of mind, it would be hard to imagine a case that could be upheld. The evidence amply warranted the belief that decedent was either in a settled state of mental unsoundness on account of his disease and impending dissolution, or that he was suffering from the hallucination or delusion which directly affected the claims of his wife. Estate of O'Connor, 51 Cal. App. 339, 196 P. 792.

[3] The first and most important ground of appeal seems to be that the court erred in denying a motion for a new trial based upon the affidavits of Bertha M. Riley, a sister-in-law of decedent, and Lillian Riley, the mother of decedent, to the effect that they apparently for the first time had visited decedent in the hospital after the making of the will and a day or two before his death, and there had a conversation with him in which he stated that he wanted the old past differences existing between himself and the family to be forgotten and renewed his love for his family, and then and there stated that his wife was well provided for and he did not want her to have any of his property and had arranged it so that she would not get anything; that he used a great deal of vile language respecting his wife, to the effect that she was immoral, degenerate, and "the vilest scrappings of the earth"; that she had threatened to kill him and had admitted she poisoned his food and much other similar language. In view of the fact that these affiants were relatives of the proponent and apparently in constant association with her and willing to aid her, due diligence would have elicited this information earlier; and in view of the further fact that the affidavits, if credited, show no more than a continuation of the hallucination against the wife above described, we cannot see any abuse of discretion whatsoever in the action of the court in refusing to grant a new trial.

[4] The further point that the verdict was not in proper form is untenable. The form of the verdict was as follows:

"Question: Was Norman Sidney Riley on the 16th day of January, 1928, and at the time of the alleged execution of the document purporting to be his last will and testament and filed herein for probate as such, of sound or unsound mind?

"Answer: Unsound.

"Question: Did the deceased at the time of the execution of the proposed will possess testamentary capacity?

"Answer: No.

"F. H. Dickson, Foreman.

"Question: Was the execution of the alleged will of Norman Sidney Riley, filed herein for probate and dated January 16, 1928, obtained through the undue influence of Mable Heuer?

"Answer: Yes.

"F. H. Dickson, Foreman."

Appellant contends that the verdict as to unsoundness of mind was not properly authenticated, in that the signature of the foreman does not appear immediately following the answer to said special issue, whereas the next two questions following on the same page are answered by the signature of said foreman of the jury. In our opinion one signature alone at the bottom would have been a sufficient authentication of a verdict on all three interrogatories. Estate of Keithley, 134 Cal. 9-11, 66 P. 5. Moreover, the foreman himself read aloud in open court the verdicts and they were assented to by the jury.

We have read carefully the instructions given by the court. They were specific and ample, and not only with respect to the rights of the contestant, but equally with respect to the rights of the proponent. The specific criticisms made we do not deem of sufficient importance to require any detailed discussion. The issue of undue influence thus becomes unimportant and need not be discussed.

PEOPLE v. ELLIS. (Cr. 3176.) ★

Rehearing Denied Feb. 28, 1929.

1. Infants 🔑20—Instruction that presumption that defendant in murder case was over 18 prevails until preponderance of contrary evidence is introduced held not erroneous (Pen. Code, § 190, as amended in 1921).

Instruction that death penalty may not be imposed on any one for murder committed before he was 18 years of age, but that burden of proof as to age is on defendant, and that law presumes defendant was over 18 years of age, and that this presumption must prevail unless preponderance of evidence convinces jury to contrary, held not erroneous, under Pen. Code, § 190, as amended in 1921, because of use of word "presumption," in view of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1959, 1961, as against contention that it should have stated that, if jury had reasonable doubt as to defendant's age, death penalty could not be imposed.

2. Criminal law 🔑421(3)—Person's age may be proved by his own testimony.

A person's age may be proved by his own testimony.

3. Infants 🔑20—Evidence that defendant in murder case was not under 18 held sufficient to show that jury could not have entertained reasonable doubt on question.

In prosecution for murder, in which sole defense was that defendant was under the age of 18 years when offense was committed, evidence that defendant was not under 18 years of age held sufficient to show that jury could not have entertained reasonable doubt on the question.

4. Criminal law 🔑1159(3)—Decision of trial court and jury, supported by substantial, though conflicting, evidence, will not be disturbed.

Decision of the trial court and jury on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed, where there is substantial evidence to support it.

5. Criminal law 🔑531(3)—Evidence held to warrant trial court's ruling that confession in murder case was voluntary, and therefore admissible.

In prosecution for murder, trial court's ruling that defendant's confession, made while under arrest, was voluntary and therefore admissible in evidence, held sustained by evidence.

6. Criminal law 🔑1169(7)—Proof of other offenses committed by codefendant, admitted solely against him, held not prejudicial to defendant.

In prosecution for murder, admitting evidence of other crimes committed by codefendant, and solely against him, held not prejudicial to defendant.

7. Criminal law 🔑1170(1)—After defendant's father denied making misstatements of defendant's age in school registration, and registration was signed by his mother, excluding father's testimony to purpose of misstatement held harmless.

In prosecution for murder, in which sole defense was that defendant was under 18 years of age when offense was committed, and prosecution, in rebuttal of testimony of defendant's father that he made no statement to school authorities as to age of any of his children, introduced in evidence school registration card, showing date of defendant's birth, signed by defendant's mother, rejection of father's testimony that misstatement in registration card was deliberately made for certain purposes held not prejudicial error.

8. Infants ⚷20—School registration and census cards, made out on information given by defendant's mother, held evidence of defendant's age beyond reasonable doubt, as respects death penalty for murder.

In prosecution for murder, where death penalty was inflicted, in which sole defense was that defendant was under 18 years of age, when offense was committed, school registration and census cards, made to school authorities of another state, and verified by or made out on information given by defendant's mother at a time when, in nature of things, truth would be stated, and for which sufficient foundation was laid, constituted evidence of defendant's age beyond a reasonable doubt.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Charles R. Barnard, Judge.

Allen Ellis and another were convicted of murder in the first degree, and the named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

William A. White, of Fresno, for appellant.

Glenn M. Devore and H. F. Briggs, both of Fresno, U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Emery F. Mitchell, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHENK, J. An information was filed, jointly charging Allen Ellis, Lowell Davis, and Bill Krieger with the crime of murder. Ellis and Krieger were jointly tried. The verdict found the defendant Krieger guilty of murder of the first degree and recommended life imprisonment. The defendant Ellis was also found guilty of murder of the first degree and the jury fixed the extreme penalty. This is an appeal by the defendant Ellis from the judgment of conviction, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

According to the written confessions of all three participants in the crime, each was 18 years of age and resided at Sanger. About 7 o'clock in the evening of June 13, 1928, the three left Sanger in a Ford roadster and proceeded to Fresno. As they passed through Selma, the suggestion was made by one of them that they "hold up somebody" in Fresno. After they entered Fresno, they rode around the city for a while, finally arriving, at about 10:30 p. m., in the vicinity of the end of the street car line in a section known as the "Normal district," where they saw a man alight from a street car. They drove around the block. Ellis and Davis got out of the automobile and walked some distance toward the man, who had left the street car and was proceeding to his home. Krieger remained away in the car. Davis was armed with a loaded billy, and Ellis had a .45 caliber automatic Colt's United States army pistol. Ellis and Davis met the man face to face, and Ellis ordered him to put up his hands. The man replied: "Go to hell." Whereupon Ellis fired the gun twice. The first shot did not take effect, but the second shot penetrated the vitals of Francis O. Weisert, a man engaged in the automobile business in the city of Fresno, and who had a wife and four children. The victim staggered to the ground, and died a few hours later as a result of the wound. After the shooting, Ellis and Davis jumped into the Ford roadster, and with Krieger as the driver, returned to their respective homes at Sanger. They were apprehended by police officers early on the morning of the next day.

[1] The sole defense of the defendant Ellis was that he was under the age of 18 years at the time the offense was committed. The jury found against him on this issue. In support of the appeal 18 errors are specified. Four of them only need be discussed. The first to be noted is the claim that prejudicial error was committed by the court in submitting a certain instruction to the jury relating to the burden of proof as to the age of the appellant. The pertinent portion of the instruction is as follows:

"You are instructed that every person guilty of murder of the first degree shall suffer death, or confinement in the state prison for life, at the discretion of the jury trying the case, * * * provided, however, that the death penalty shall not be imposed or inflicted upon any person for murder committed before such person shall have reached the age of 18 years; provided, further, that the burden of proof as to the age of said person shall be upon the defendant.

"From the foregoing you are to understand that it is not incumbent upon the prosecution to prove that at the time of the homicide the defendant, Allen Ellis, was over the age of 18 years. The law presumes that the defendant was over the age of 18 years. This presumption of the defendant being beyond the age of 18 years must prevail, unless from a preponderance of the evidence introduced you are convinced that any such defendant was under the age of 18 years at the time of the commission of the offense."

Section 190 of the Penal Code, as amended in 1921, provides that where the age of the defendant is in issue, "the burden of proof as to the age of said person shall be upon the defendant." It is insisted that the court erred in declaring that the law "presumes" that the defendant was over the age of 18 years. We are satisfied that the effect of the provision in said section 190 is that if there be no proof that the defendant was under eighteen years of age at the time of the commission of the offense, and no circumstance, such as the appearance of the defendant, is present sufficient to establish that he was under age, the jury would be bound to find that he was of the age of 18 or over.

There would seem to be no valid reason, and the appellant has suggested none, why the word "presumption" might not properly be used in this connection. Section 1959 of the Code of Civil Procedure defines a presumption as a "deduction which the law expressly directs to be made from particular facts." It is in the nature of evidence, and, unless conclusive, may be controverted by other evidence, but unless controverted the jury is bound to find in accordance with the presumption. Section 1961, Code Civ. Proc. A presumption is the equivalent of proof, without express or affirmative proof, and is conclusive in the absence of any evidence contravening it. See People v. Harris, 169 Cal. 53, 145 P. 520. When the law provides on whom shall rest the burden of proof, it establishes a rule as to which party shall first proceed and go forward with the evidence, or prove the issue, the presumption then being against the party having the burden of proof. 22 Corp. Jur. 83.

It is also insisted that the court erred in that portion of the instruction wherein the jury was told that the burden was upon the defendant to prove "by a preponderance of the evidence" that he was under the age of 18 years at the time of the commission of the offense, and it is contended that the instruction should have been that, if the jury should find from the evidence that the defendant had not reached the age of 18 years before the offense was committed, or if the jury should have a reasonable doubt on that point, then, under the law, the death penalty could not be imposed on the defendant. This point apparently has not been passed upon in this jurisdiction.

It is the established law of this state that, when the plea of insanity is interposed in a criminal case, the burden of proof is upon the defendant, and in order that the defendant may prevail on that issue the proof must be by a preponderance of the evidence. In the concurring opinion in People v. Harris, supra, it was well said at page 71 (145 P. 527): "When insanity is interposed as a defense, that one particular issue is removed from the operation of the rule of reasonable doubt. It forms an exception to it. Our law is this: If the jury entertain a reasonable doubt concerning the proof of any material issue in a criminal case, it must give the defendant the benefit of that doubt and acquit him, unless the particular issue be that of insanity. As to this issue a reasonable doubt is not sufficient to justify an acquittal at the hands of the jury, but they must be convinced that the defense of insanity is established by a preponderance of evidence." To denominate the plea of insanity a "defense" to crime is not strictly accurate. More correctly it is a special plea to the effect that, assuming the homicide to have resulted from the act of the defendant, he is not amenable to punishment under the law.

So, too, assuming the commission of the crime by the defendant, the plea of under age does not go to the question of guilt but only to the question of the amenability of the defendant to suffer the death penalty. When by legislative enactment the state has placed on the defendant the burden of proof as to the issue of under age, the law has established another exception to the general rule as to the quantum of proof required on an issue in a homicide case and has removed the issue of under age from the operation of the rule of reasonable doubt. Since the law has imposed the burden of proof by a preponderance of evidence on the defendant on the issue of insanity we discover no good reason for prescribing a different rule where the burden of proof is placed on the defendant on the issue of under age. Each is in the nature of a special plea and is interposed on the assumption that the commission of the overt act may be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.

The appellant seeks to have the rule in alibi cases applied here, and relies on such cases as People v. Winters, 125 Cal. 325, 57 P. 1067, where an instruction including the following was approved: "In other words, the defendant is not bound or required to prove an alibi beyond a reasonable doubt to entitle him to an acquittal. It is sufficient if the evidence upon that point, if any, raises a reasonable doubt in your minds of his presence at the time and place of the commission of the crime charged." From this state of the law in the case of an alibi, it is argued that the same rule should apply to an issue of under age. We cannot so conclude. The question of the presence of the defendant at the scene of the homicide is an inherent element in the prosecution's case and goes directly to the question of guilt, excepting, for example, in cases of homicide by poison and conspiracy to commit a felony. In other words, when an alibi is sufficiently established, an acquittal would necessarily result. On the other hand, when sufficient proof of the homicide is otherwise shown, adequate proof that the defendant was under 18 years of age at the time of its commission would not prevent a verdict of guilty. The proof of the age of the defendant in such cases would affect only the extent of the punishment, by relieving the defendant of the extreme penalty as matter of law.

[2, 3] If we were to hold otherwise on the point just discussed, nevertheless we would feel compelled on the record before us to conclude that the appellant had suffered no prejudice by reason of the instruction complained of. As proof of the age of the appellant at the time of the killing there was in evidence the statement of his age as eighteen made by the appellant to the officers soon after his arrest and in his signed statement to the same effect made before the trial.

A person's age may be proved by his own testimony. People v. Ratz, 115 Cal. 132, 46 P. 915; 10 Cal. Jur. p. 1054; 22 Corp. Jur. p. 171. As further proof of the defendant's age there was in evidence a verified statement, signed on March 25, 1923, by the mother of the defendant before a school census trustee in the state of Texas, showing that the defendant was born on June 4, 1910. There was also received in evidence an enrollment card, made by the superintendent of schools at Marshall, Tex., and constituting a part of the public records of his office, enrolling the defendant as a pupil, and assigning him to a particular public school. This document shows that the defendant was born on June 4, 1910. The father and the mother of the defendant testified at the trial that their son Allen was 17 years of age at the time of the commission of the crime. In rebuttal the prosecution introduced in evidence a document headed "Registration of Minors." This card was signed and sworn to by the defendant's mother at Sanger on October 4, 1927, before a registrar of minors, pursuant to section 1610 of the Political Code, and shows that Goldie Ellis, a daughter of these same parents, was born on February 2, 1911. With the defendant's written confession and the other documents in evidence, it is difficult to perceive how the jury could well entertain a reasonable doubt on the question of the defendant's age, notwithstanding the testimony of the parents given under these distressing circumstances.

[4, 5] The signed confession of the appellant was admitted in evidence over the objection of his counsel that the same was involuntary. In the early morning after the homicide, the appellant was interviewed at Sanger by Constable Street and Officer Tullis before the appellant was taken to Fresno. On cross-examination Constable Street testified that he told the appellant to tell the truth—that it was the best thing for him to do. Officer Tullis testified that he was present during the whole conversation, and that no such statement was made to the appellant by Constable Street. At that conversation the appellant refused to admit that he was in the city of Fresno on the evening of the homicide, and steadfastly maintained his position until he was questioned a second time some four hours later in the office of the chief of police at Fresno, when he was confronted with the fact that Krieger had confessed. He was then questioned again, and again asked if he was in Fresno the night before, to which he answered, "No." He was then advised that Krieger had told all about the commission of the crime.

The appellant then turned to Krieger and asked him, "Did you tell them?" to which Krieger replied, "Yes, go ahead, I have—I told them all about it already." The appellant then admitted that he participated in the commission of the crime. Neither Officers Street nor Tullis appear to have been present at the time of the confession, and it was not shown that any inducements were held out to Krieger to obtain his confession. Even as to the conversation between the appellant and Officers Street and Tullis at Sanger, the record discloses a conflict in the evidence as to which the decision of the trial court and jury will not be disturbed, where, as here, there is substantial evidence to support it. People v. Fowler, 178 Cal. 657, 174 P. 892. We therefore find no error in the ruling of the trial court, and the implied finding of the jury that the appellant's confession was voluntary.

[6] Counsel for the appellant states that perhaps the most serious error complained of is that wherein the court admitted evidence of other crimes committed by the defendant Krieger. When Krieger was questioned in the office of the chief of police in Fresno on the morning after the homicide, the history of his past life was quite thoroughly developed. He made full disclosure of his part in the crime under investigation and in the commission of other crimes, one of which was committed in conjunction with his father, who, after conviction was sentenced to San Quentin. It also appeared that Krieger's mother was at the time confined in the hospital for the insane at Stockton. The statement was reduced to writing, was read over, and signed by Krieger. It was admitted in evidence and read to the jury. This evidence was offered by the prosecution only as against the defendant Krieger, and he is not appealing.

It is insisted, however, by the appellant, that evidence of the other crimes committed by Krieger, three of which were robberies committed by Krieger within 60 days prior to June 13, 1928, had the effect of prejudicing the jury against the appellant. Evidence of other robberies committed by Krieger was offered by the prosecution against Krieger, on the theory that it tended to establish the intent on his part to commit the crime of robbery on the evening in question; for, it is insisted, unless it was proved that Krieger had formed the intent to commit robbery on that night, it might have been difficult to establish as against him the crime of murder in the first degree. There is authority for the respondent's position. Hillen v. People, 59 Colo. 280, 149 P. 250, 251.

The appellant relies upon People v. Arnold, 199 Cal. 471, 250 P. 168, wherein it was held that, where the crime of robbery was being committed by concert of action on the part of the defendants, the law does not require proof of intent to commit murder, and all that the law exacts is proof that a human being was killed by one of the participants in the robbery. But in that case the crime of robbery was brought home to the defendants. In this case Krieger was not present at the time and place of the homicide, and his intention to commit robbery was proper to be shown, in order to charge him with murder in the first degree. However, at all events, it is difficult to perceive how proof of other crimes by Krieger was prejudicial to the rights of the appellant, Ellis. Apparently such proof, together with the showing of his unfortunate home environment, had the opposite effect on the jury as against the defendant Krieger, for he was relieved of the extreme penalty.

[7, 8] When the defendant's father was called as a witness on behalf of his son, he testified that during the time he had lived in Marshall, Tex., he had never made any statement concerning the age of his children, and particularly that he did not make any statement to the school authorities in Texas as to the age of any of his children. He further testified that he did not write at all. In rebuttal the prosecution introduced in evidence the registration card made to the public school authorities at Marshall, Tex., showing the date of the birth of the appellant as June 4, 1910, and to which the name of A. R. Ellis had been signed by the mother. After the close of the rebuttal by the prosecution, the appellant's father was recalled, and it was sought to be proved by him that the date of birth of the appellant on the school registration card was a misstatement, deliberately made so, in order that the age of appellant might appear as one year older than he really was, to the end that the appellant's sister might be allowed to enter school.

Objection by the prosecution to this offered testimony was sustained on the ground that it appeared in evidence, by the testimony of this same witness, that he had nothing to do with reference to the school registration card, and it otherwise appeared that he did not sign his name thereto. Under these circumstances we find no prejudicial error in refusing to permit this witness to so testify. Furthermore, it is not clear how this proffered "explanation" would in fact explain the misstatement on the card to the appellant's benefit. Sufficient foundation was laid for the introduction of the registration and school census cards and since they were verified by or were made out on information given by the mother at a time when, in the nature of things, the truth would be stated, they constituted evidence of the appellant's age beyond a reasonable doubt.

Other alleged errors were assigned by the appellant, but those discussed are most relied upon. The others, upon examination, are found to be without merit and require no further notice.

STORELLI v. ROBERTSON, Constable. (Civ. 3605.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 21, 1929.

Mandamus ⚷4(3)—Justice court order, refusing to release from attachment property claimed as exempt, being appealable, writ of mandate was not available (Code Civ. Proc. § 1086).

Since petitioner had right to have reviewed on appeal to superior court order of justice court refusing to release from attachment property claimed by petitioner to be exempt, she was not entitled to writ of mandate to compel property to be released from attachment, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1086, regardless of whether she availed herself of such remedy.

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; W. T. O'Donnell, Judge.

Mandamus proceeding by Mrs. J. Storelli against James Robertson, as Constable in and for Vallejo Township, Solano County. From an adverse judgment, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

J. E. Colthurst, of Vallejo, for petitioner.

Lindauer & Horan, of Vallejo, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. This matter is before us upon an appeal from a judgment entered after an order had been made sustaining the respondent's demurrer to the plaintiff's petition for a writ of mandate. The petition for writ of mandate alleges that on or about the 5th day of January, 1927, James Robertson, as constable in and for the township of Vallejo, in Solano county, under a writ of attachment placed in his hands, where the petitioner was named as defendant, attached certain property belonging to the petitioner; that thereafter the petitioner claimed a return of said property as exempt from execution and filed a claim of exemption in the justice court of Vallejo township, from which court said writ of attachment was issued, and moved said court for an order releasing said property from attachment, but that the justice of the peace of said township has refused at all times to order said constable to release said property from attachment.

The demurrer to the petition was sustained on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to warrant the issuance of a writ of mandate. If the facts stated in the petition are correct, it shows that the petitioner had a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law. Under the Code provisions the petitioner had a right to have the order of the justice court refusing to release the property claimed as exempt reviewed upon appeal to the superior court. It does not appear in the petition that the petitioner ever sought to avail herself of such remedy. The fact that such remedy existed, whether availed of or not by the petitioner, precludes the issuance of a writ of mandate. Under section 1086 of the Code of Civil Procedure a writ of mandate will issue only where the petitioner has not a plain, speedy and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. See, also, 16 Cal. Jur. p. 784, § 17. The authorities are clear that when an appeal lies, unless there is some extraordinary circumstance rendering an appeal inadequate, mandamus will not lie. See annotations to section 1086 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in part 2 of Kerr's Cyc. Codes.

Finding nothing of merit in the appeal, the judgment of the superior court should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

CALIFORNIA PACKING CORPORATION v. LOPEZ et al. (Civ. 3664.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 19, 1929.

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; W. T. O'Donnell, Judge.

On petition for rehearing.

For former opinion, see 273 P. 587.

T. A. Farrell and George A. Work, both of Sacramento, and W. U. Goodman, of Fairfield, for appellants.

Rufus H. Kimball and Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, all of San Francisco, and Joseph M. Raines, of Fairfield, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. A petition for a rehearing of the above-entitled cause having been made to this court, it is hereby ordered that the same be denied; it is further ordered that the following paragraphs of the opinion herein filed the 22d day of December, 1928, be stricken therefrom, it being the opinion of the court that whatever rights appellants may have under the contract executed by the Wright Corporation to Manuel Lopez can only be reached by an action for damages:

"The undisputed evidence in this case also shows that the respondent purchased the land for value without notice of appellants' claim that the John Lopez estate or Manuel Lopez had any interest in said land.

"Appellants contend that Manuel Lopez was in possession of the premises in controversy at the time the Wright Corporation sold the same to the respondent and that such possession was notice to respondent. The authorities are uniform in holding that the possession necessary to put a purchaser on notice must be open, notorious and exclusive. Campbell v. Grennan, 13 Cal. App. 481, 110 P. 156. Notice to be effectual must be precise and complete enough to put the purchaser on his guard. Kowalsky v. Kimberlin et al., 173 Cal. 506, 160 P. 673. There is practically no evidence that tends in any degree to show notice on the part of respondent.

"Witness Tonnengen, superintendent of respondent, who, on behalf of respondent, made the examination of the property in controversy before its purchase by respondent, stated that in making that examination, he was accompanied by Wm. G. Wright, the president of the Wright Corporation and that Wright informed him that there were no incumbrances against the land, that Wright made no mention of the fact that appellants or either of them were in possession of said land or claimed any interest therein by lease or otherwise; nor did Tonnengen see Manuel Lopez on the land, nor anything indicating such possession. There is an entire lack of evidence showing that respondent had any notice or knowledge that appellants claimed any interest in the said one hundred acres, or were in possession of the same prior to its purchase thereof."

PASADENA NAT. BANK v. SHORTEN. (Civ. 6199.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 28, 1929.

1. Appeal and error 🔑1010(1)—Appellate court cannot disturb findings supported by evidence.

Where there was sufficient evidence to support trial court's findings complained of, appellate court cannot interfere with findings as made.

2. Bills and notes 🔑356—Bank crediting J., later connected with bank, with amount of defendant's notes, where J. did not deliver money to defendant as promised, was innocent purchaser.

Where defendant delivered notes to J., who promised to secure money from bank for defendant, and bank, with which J. later became connected, credited J. with full amount, and J. withdrew whole of such amount, bank was an innocent purchaser for value before maturity of notes.

3. Bills and notes 🔑443(3)—Where defendant made two notes payable to himself at bank and another payable to bank's order, and delivered them to J., who sold them to bank, bank was real party to bring action.

Where defendant executed two notes payable to order of himself at bank and another note payable to order of bank, and delivered them to J., who was to secure money from bank for defendant, and J. sold notes to bank, which gave J. full credit therefor upon its books, and J. later withdrew whole amount, bank was properly the real party to bring action on notes.

4. Bills and notes 🔑365(1)—All defenses were not available against bank purchasing notes, where, after bank started suit, directors put up moneys to protect bank.

All defenses to note were not available against bank, an innocent purchaser of notes, where, immediately after bank instituted suit on notes, bank directors, at demand of bank examiner, personally put up sufficient moneys to protect bank for full amount of notes.

5. Bills and notes 🔑380—That one to whom defendant delivered notes did not deliver money to defendant was not defense available against bank purchasing notes.

That one to whom defendant delivered notes did not turn over money received from bank on notes, as he had promised to do, was not a defense available to defendant against bank which purchased notes.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. T. O'Donnell, Judge.

Action on promissory notes by the Pasadena National Bank against Albert Shorten. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Faries & Williamson and Edwin Heizman, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Dunham & Thompson and Bicksler, Smith & Parke, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

YORK, J. Plaintiff bank obtained judgment in the superior court against defendant on three promissory notes, two of them being notes which the defendant signed and indorsed, and both were made payable to order of "myself at Pasadena National Bank"; both were for $2,000, and the third note for $1,250, signed by defendant, was made payable to the order of the Pasadena National Bank, Pasadena, Cal.

These three notes were delivered to one Irvin Jordan by defendant, and were turned over by Jordan to the plaintiff bank, who gave said Jordan full credit therefor upon its books, and the said Jordan withdrew the whole of said amount.

The peculiarity of the transaction can be briefly stated as follows: The defendant met said Irvin Jordan at the Standard Union Finance Corporation, with which organization said Jordan was then connected. Said Jordan informed him that he was about to become the principal owner of the Pasadena National Bank and that, if defendant would sign the notes, Jordan would secure the money for the said defendant at said bank. The defendant testified that he received absolutely nothing, excepting this promise from Irvin Jordan for said three notes. Thereafter, Jordan for a short time was in control of the Pasadena National Bank, but was ousted from control, and, according to the evidence, was for a time apparently a fugitive from justice. The plaintiff instituted suit upon these notes, and immediately thereafter at the demand of the bank examiner, the directors of the Pasadena National Bank put up, hurriedly and informally, but personally, sufficient moneys to protect the bank for the full amount of these notes. The action proceeded in the name of the bank.

The first objection of the appellant is that the trial court allowed an amendment to the complaint, which was an amendment to conform to the proof, to be filed at the time of trial. An examination of the record discloses the fact that the trial judge properly exercised his discretion.

The next point made by appellant is that the court abused its discretion in refusing to grant a continuance to the defendant after the filing of the amendment to the complaint. An examination of the record discloses that this was not an abuse of the discretion vested in the trial court.

[1] As to the third point reciting certain alleged errors in findings of fact, there was sufficient evidence to support each of these findings complained of; therefore, this court cannot interfere with the findings as made.

[2] The fourth point made by appellant, that the bank was not an innocent purchaser for value before maturity, is not well taken. There is no evidence that the bank itself was in possession of any information as to any fraud committed by Irvin Jordan on the defendant, and the notes were handed to the bank and accepted by the bank before the said Irvin Jordan became connected in any way with said institution.

[3] The fifth objection, that the bank is not the real party in interest, and the defendant, therefore, would not be protected by the judgment from further litigation, is not well taken. The notes were filed as evidence in the case, and the bank was properly the real party to bring the action.

[4] The sixth objection of appellant is that the directors became purchasers after the maturity of the notes, and that, therefore, all defenses are available against the bank, particularly the objection that the directors were either the purchasers after maturity with notice of fraud, or else the directors paid the full amount of the notes. The action was already commenced before the directors' money was deposited with the plaintiff bank, and the circumstances relating to that deposit do not establish that the directors either purchased or paid the notes.

[5] The other point of appellant that, as to the third note, there was a total failure of consideration, is answered by the record, which discloses the fact that this note was handed to Irvin Jordan for the purpose of having said Jordan secure money for the defendant, Albert Shorten, at the plaintiff bank. Jordan was to take the notes there and secure the money which he did. The fact, that the money was not turned over by Jordan to the defendant, as he promised defendant he would do, is not a defense available to appellant. The said Irvin Jordan was not, at the time of the transaction between himself and the appellant, either a director or officer of the plaintiff bank, his connection with the bank having occurred after that time.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

RELIANCE ACCEPTANCE CORPORATION v. LUNDBLADE. (Civ. 3693.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 21, 1929.

1. Appeal and error 🔑478—Allegations of answer to petition for supersedeas must be accepted as true, in absence of evidence.

The burden of proof being on petitioner for writ of supersedeas, allegations of answer to petition must be accepted as true, in absence of any evidence.

2. Appeal and error 🔑479(1)—Appellant not making timely effort to have sureties on undertaking to stay execution justify after service of notice of exception on his attorney held not entitled to supersedeas (Code Civ. Proc. § 1015).

Appellant, making no effort to have sureties on his undertaking to stay execution justify, nor to give undertaking with other sureties, within time allowed by law after service of notice of exception to sufficiency of sureties on his attorney, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1015, held not entitled to writ of supersedeas to require justification thereof on ground that he had no knowledge of such exception.

Action by the Reliance Acceptance Corporation against Fred H. Lundblade, doing business under the name of the Fred H. Lundblade Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. On appellant's application for a writ of supersedeas to require justification of sureties on his undertaking to stay execution. Application denied.

Henry L. Ford and W. Ernest Dickson, both of Eureka, for appellant.

Eugene S. Selvage, of Eureka, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. [1, 2] This is an application by the defendant for a writ of supersedeas. The parties have stipulated that the matter be submitted on the records and files. The facts, therefore, must be ascertained from an examination of the petition for the writ and the plaintiff's answer thereto. Since the burden of proof is on the petitioner, the allegations of the answer, in the absence of any evidence, must be accepted as true. The following facts, among others, are stated in the answer:

May 28, 1928, judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff against the defendant, petitioner herein, for $566.04 and costs. August 7, the defendant's motion for a new trial was denied. September 5, defendant served notice of appeal and thereafter filed an undertaking to stay execution. September 28, the plaintiff duly excepted to the sufficiency of the sureties on the undertaking and served notice thereof on counsel for the defendant. The defendant made no effort to have the sureties justify or to give an undertaking with other sureties until November 22, 1928, when the petition herein was filed. In such petition it is alleged that the defendant had "no knowledge of the said exceptance to his undertaking staying execution pending the said appeal, and thereupon through inadvertence he failed to have his sureties justify within the time allowed by law." It was unnecessary to serve the defendant personally with the notice of exception to the sureties, but it is required that service of such a notice "must be upon the attorney instead of the party." Code Civ. Proc. § 1015. In the language of the Supreme Court in Williams v. Borgwardt, 115 Cal. 617, 618, 47 P. 594, 595, "there is nothing to show either accident, surprise, inadvertence, or excusable neglect, and for this court to extend the relief asked would be equivalent to making a rule that the appellant may always neglect to follow the procedure prescribed by the statute, secure that upon his mere request this court will issue its supersedeas upon the filing of a bond to be approved by us. We do not think such practice should be sanctioned or encouraged. It would necessarily involve greater expense and inconvenience to respondents, and would seriously encroach upon the time of this court."

The application is denied.

PEOPLE v. WEAVER. (Cr. 1057.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 27, 1928.

As Modified, on Denial of Rehearing, Jan. 11, 1929.

1. Criminal law 🔑740, 1159(5)—In prosecution for passing fictitious check, claim of irresponsibility through illness held for jury, whose finding must be accepted by appellate court (Pen. Code, § 476a).

In prosecution under Pen. Code, § 476a, for passing fictitious check, claim that defendant was ill on date check was issued, and did not know of acts committed on such day, held for jury, and conclusion of jury, refusing to accept claim of mental aberration, must be accepted by District Court of Appeal.

2. False pretenses 🔑22—Issuance of fictitious check held not made lawful by payment of other checks before prosecution for passing check (Pen. Code, § 476a).

In prosecution under Pen. Code, § 476a, for passing fictitious check, proof that defendant took up or paid before trial all but one of various checks issued on bank in which defendant had no funds or credit did not relieve acts of defendant in issuing checks of their criminality, though such fact might be considered in mitigation of punishment.

3. False pretenses 🔑49(2)—Implied finding that defendant issued check with intent to defraud, and knowing he had no funds or credit with bank, held supported by evidence (Pen. Code, § 476a).

In prosecution under Pen. Code, § 476a, for passing fictitious check, evidence that defendant had neither funds nor credit in bank on which check was drawn, and had issued numerous fictitious checks on same date, held to support implied finding of jury that defendant issued check knowing he had no funds or credit with bank and with intent to defraud.

4. False pretenses 🔑51—Whether date of fictitious check was changed held for jury, in determining whether check proved was check alleged in information (Pen. Code, § 476a).

In prosecution under Pen. Code, § 476a, for passing fictitious check, question whether check was originally dated 1925, and changed to 1926, or whether originally dated 1926, and changed to 1925, held for jury under evidence, in determining whether check proved was check set forth in information, charging defendant with passing check dated 1925.

5. False pretenses 🔑6—Date of check is no element of offense of passing fictitious check (Pen. Code, § 476a).

Under Pen. Code, § 476a, prohibiting giving to another with intent to defraud of check by party knowing at time that he had not sufficient funds or credit with bank to meet check on its presentation, date of check is no element or ingredient of offense.

6. False pretenses 🔑38—Proof of false check alleged, dated 1926, held not material variance from information charging passing of fictitious check dated 1925, under evidence (Pen. Code, § 476a).

In prosecution under Pen. Code, § 476a, for passing fictitious check alleged in information to be dated October, 1925, proof of check alleged to be dated 1926 held not material variance, fatal to conviction, under evidence showing check delivered to prosecuting witness as set forth in information was check received in evidence, and that no other check had been delivered to prosecuting witness by defendant.

7. Criminal law 🔑1170(2)—Error, if any, in excluding testimony that defendant paid fictitious check, held cured by district attorney's introduction of same testimony through prosecuting witness (Pen. Code, § 476a).

In prosecution under Pen. Code, § 476a, for passing fictitious check, error, if any, in disallowing testimony by defendant that prosecuting witness was paid amount of check held cured by bringing out same testimony through questioning of prosecuting witness by district attorney.

8. Criminal law 🔑400(8)—Cashier's testimony that defendant, prosecuted for passing fictitious check, did not have funds or credit in bank, held not inadmissible as not best evidence (Pen. Code, § 476a; Code Civ. Proc. § 1855, subd. 5).

In prosecution under Pen. Code, § 476a, for passing fictitious check, testimony by cashier of bank on which check was drawn that defendant did not have funds or credit with bank to pay check held admissible, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1855, subd. 5, and not objectionable as not best evidence, where proof thereof, if required to be shown by records of bank, would have necessitated examination of many books of bank.

9. False pretenses 🔑49(1)—Testimony by bank cashier that he did not know defendant passing fictitious check supported implied finding that defendant had no credit with bank (Pen. Code, § 476a).

In prosecution under Pen. Code, § 476a, for passing fictitious check, testimony by cashier of bank on which check was drawn that he had no acquaintance with defendant, either before or at time check was delivered, or at any time thereafter, was sufficient to support implied finding by jury that defendant had no credit with bank whatever.

10. Criminal law 🔑354—Question to defendant, claiming illness causing mental lapse when fictitious check was passed, whether he had previously had similar illness, was properly excluded (Pen. Code, § 476a).

In prosecution under Pen. Code, § 476a, for passing fictitious check, defended on ground that defendant was ill on date check was passed, causing him not to remember what occurred, question to defendant as to whether he had ever before been in physical or mental condition resulting in mental lapses was properly excluded, as immaterial, in absence of defense of insanity.

11. Criminal law 🔑761(3)—"Stock" instruction of Code, requiring union of act and intent, or criminal negligence, for crime, was not erroneous as assuming criminal negligence was issue in prosecution for passing fictitious check (Pen. Code, §§ 20, 476a).

In prosecution under Pen. Code, § 476a, for passing fictitious check, where court instructed on essentials of crime as defined by statute, and that essential element thereof was intent with which check was delivered, "stock" instruction of Pen. Code, § 20, that every crime requires union of act or intent, or criminal negligence, was not erroneous as assuming criminal negligence was element in case.

12. Criminal law 🔑761(3)—"Stock" instruction that all persons are of sound mind who are not idiots or insane held not harmful, in prosecution for passing fictitious check (Pen. Code, §§ 21, 476a).

In prosecution under Pen. Code, § 476a, for passing fictitious check, defended on ground that defendant was unconscious of doing act by reason of temporary mental sickness, "stock" instruction of Pen. Code, § 21, that all persons are of sound mind who are neither idiots nor affected with insanity, held not harmful, as assuming defense of insanity was set up.

13. Criminal law 🔑815(4)—Conviction for passing fictitious check implied consideration of question whether check was postdated and prosecuting witness informed thereof, under instructions (Pen. Code, § 476a).

In prosecution under Pen. Code, § 476a, for passing fictitious check, where court instructed that, if defendant delivered check with knowledge that he had no funds or credit in bank, it is immaterial whether check was dated 1925 or 1926, providing check was taken without information that drawer had no funds, question whether prosecuting witness accepted check knowing it was not to be presented until year after date of delivery was presented to jury, and verdict of conviction necessarily implied that check was not postdated, and prosecuting witness was not informed that it was not to be presented for year.

14. Criminal law 🔑1173(1)—That defendant's rejected instructions were more specific held not ground for reversing criminal case, where evidence of guilt appeared conclusive.

That instructions proposed by defendant and rejected by court were on certain issues more specific and direct than those by court on same questions, and should have been preferred, is not ground for reversing criminal case, where evidence appeared to be conclusive of defendant's guilt.

Appeal from Superior Court, El Dorado County; George H. Thompson, Judge.

C. E. Weaver was convicted of passing fictitious check, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Theodore E. Bowen, of Los Angeles, E. Fitzgerald, of Placerville, and J. Edward Keating, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. Defendant was charged by information in the superior court of El Dorado county with the crime defined in section 476a of the Penal Code, in that, on the 10th day of October, 1925 he did (now quoting from the information) "willfully, unlawfully, knowingly, fraudulently, and with intent to defraud one Tim Haw, make, utter, draw and deliver to said Tim Haw a certain check and draft on a bank and depositary for the payment of money, to wit, the Placerville National Bank, which said check and draft was in words and figures following, to wit: 'Placerville, Calif. Oct 10, 1925. No. 78. The Placerville National Bank 90–971. Pay to the order of Tim Haw $50.00, Fifty and no/100 Dollars. C. E. Weaver.'" He was convicted by the jury of said offense. He moved for a new trial, but the motion was denied. He appeals from the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for a trial de novo.

The appeals are sought to be supported upon the claim that the evidence is insufficient to have justified his conviction, and that error was committed in rulings admitting and excluding certain testimony, and in the action of the trial court in the giving and the refusal to give certain instructions.

[1] 1. There is no merit in the contention that the record does not disclose evidence sufficient to support the verdict. The fact that the defendant issued the check or draft as alleged in the information, and the further fact that, when issuing and delivering the document to Haw, he had no funds in or credit with the bank upon which it was drawn, to meet or satisfy said check, stand in the record wholly undisputed. He, however, claimed at the trial, and undertook to sustain that claim by his own testimony alone, that, because of being ill on the day he issued the check, and of the effect of such illness upon his mind, he knew and remembered nothing of many of the acts he did on that day, and had no recollection of issuing and delivering to Haw the check in question. His illness on said day, he stated, proved, as it progressed, to be typhoid fever, from which he suffered and for which he was required to remain in a hospital in the city of San Francisco under medical treatment for a period of two or more months. But this phase of the case need not be given herein extended consideration, since it was a matter solely for the jury's determination. The verdict conclusively shows that the jury refused to accept the defendant's story of mental aberration on the day and at the time in question, and we, in turn, must accept the jury's conclusion in that respect. It will, though, conduce to a clearer understanding of the situation, as it was created by the several transactions with which the offense charged in the information was more or less connected, if the facts be in a general way stated.

The defendant had, for a period of time prior to the 10th day of October, 1925, been associated (for a time as a partner and then as superintendent of the mine) with another party in prosecuting operations in a certain mine situated not far distant from Placerville. During that period of time, he occupied, whenever remaining overnight in Placerville, a sleeping room in a rooming house conducted by said Haw in that city. At some time of the afternoon of said 10th day of October, he appeared at said rooming house, and, meeting Haw, handed to the latter a bar of gold bullion to keep for him until he later called for it. It appears that he was indebted to Haw in quite a sum, and that, between 6 and 7 of the evening of the day just mentioned, he returned to the rooming house, and, meeting Haw on the outside of and near said house, stated to the latter that he desired to pay him (Haw) a sum of money to be credited on his indebtedness to Haw. Thereupon the two entered the house and the defendant then prepared and signed the check which forms the basis of the information herein and delivered the paper to Haw, who thereupon returned the bar of bullion to the defendant. It may here be stated that the accused testified that he had no recollection of the circumstance of the return of the bullion to him, either by Haw or his wife, to whom (the wife), instead of Haw himself, he thought he had delivered the bar on the 10th of October. No trace of the bullion was ever discovered, and, so far as the record here advises us, no one actually knew or knows what finally became of it.

[2] It further appears that, on the same day (October 10th), the defendant issued five other checks, and another on the following day (October 11th), in favor of as many other different persons residing in and about Placerville, and delivered the same to the parties in whose favor, respectively, they were drawn. All the checks, save and except one, which was drawn in favor of and delivered to one Max Baer for the sum of $45, were drawn on the Placerville National Bank, in which the accused had never at any time had any funds, and with which he never at any time had any credit. In fact, the officers of said bank had no acquaintance whatever with the defendant. The check issued and delivered by defendant to Baer was drawn on the El Dorado County Bank, located at Placerville, in which the defendant had on deposit the sum of $3.12 only, and with which he had no credit. All the checks, with the exception of two, of which that issued and delivered to Haw was one, were postdated, viz.: "Oct. 10, 1926." All the checks were introduced in evidence in the order in which the testimony of those to whom, respectively, they were issued and delivered was given at the trial. The checks called for sums varying in amount from $5 to $50 and the total amount thereof was the sum of $225.50. The defendant was allowed to prove that he took up or paid all but one of the checks a day or two prior to the date of the trial. The fact, though, that he did so, if the court had deemed it, in view of the circumstances of the case, proper for that purpose, might have been considered as in mitigation of the punishment to be imposed, or upon the question of admission of the accused to probation; but it obviously in no measure or degree relieved the acts of the defendant in issuing the checks of their criminality, within the purview of section 476a of the Penal Code.

[3] As first above stated, the fact that the defendant issued and delivered to Haw the check upon which the information is founded, and the fact that he had in or with the bank upon which it was drawn neither funds nor credit with which to meet the same, were not and are not controverted. There is no ground for any doubt that there is sufficient evidence to support the implied finding of the jury that the accused issued and delivered the check to Haw, knowing at the time that he had no funds in or credit with said bank with which the check could or might be satisfied or met, and that he so issued and delivered said check with the intent to defraud Haw. Thus a complete offense under the section of the Penal Code upon which the information is based was made out.

[4, 5] 2. The defendant objected to the introduction of the Haw check in evidence on the ground that it was not the check pleaded in the information. The objection was overruled. A photostatic copy of the check appears in the transcript. The question thus raised and presented involves two points, viz.: (1) That the check received in evidence as in proof of the crime charged not being the check set forth in the information, the verdict, therefore, is without sufficient evidentiary support to uphold it; (2) that there is thus created a material variance, fatal to the judgment of conviction, between the pleading and proof. The variance claimed arises from the fact that, in the blank space for the designation of the year of the issuance of the check in the printed form of check used by the defendant for the preparation of the check, the final numeral or figure seems first to have been a "5," which, obviously, would make the date of the check, even with the date of its issuance, viz. "1925," and that (as also appears to be the fact) the writer of the check then attempted to change the date thereof, so far as the year was concerned, by substituting for and writing over the figure "5" the figure "6," thereby making the check bear date "Oct. 19, 1926."

The conclusion that the date line of the check was first made to read "1925," and thereafter changed to "1926," is based upon the opinion of the writer of this opinion, formed from such an inspection of the date line of the paper as the limited means of a nonexpert for the investigation of such matters will permit; but it is not at all impossible that an expert in the deciphering of hieroglyphical confusions, with the aid of instruments suitable to such purpose, might conclude that the figure "6" was first written, and then an attempt made to substitute the figure "5" therefor, in the manner above indicated. In any event, however, the question was one for the jury to determine. But the point as to the variance is of no material importance, in so far as is concerned the statement of the crime denounced by section 476a of the Penal Code. In other words, the gist of the offense defined in said section is entirely in the giving to another, with intent to defraud, any check or draft on a bank, banker, or depositary for the payment of money, by a party who knew at the time that he had not sufficient funds in or credit with such bank, etc., to meet such check or draft in full upon its presentation; the date of the check being, therefore, no element or ingredient of said offense. People v. Bercovitz, 163 Cal. 636, 638, 126 P. 479, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 667.

[6] This proposition, though, is not combatted by counsel for the defendant. The point that they make is that the variance is such that the defendant would be without legal protection against any future prosecution which might be inaugurated and pressed against him for the same offense. The evidence leaves no ground for doubting that the check delivered to Haw, and as set forth in the information, was the check received in evidence. Haw testified that he delivered the check on the day he received it to a Judge Shanklin. When shown the check as he was testifying, Haw stated that it was the check the defendant gave him on the 10th day of October, 1925; that he had not seen the check after handing it to Judge Shanklin until the preliminary examination of the accused on the charge stated in the information, held a short time before the trial and over two years after the check was delivered to him by the defendant. In the course of his examination he also stated that he "presumed" that the check shown to him while he was testifying for the people was the check he received from the defendant. There was no testimony that the defendant delivered to Haw any other check on the 10th day of October or at any other time. Indeed, no attempt was made to show that any other check was issued and delivered to Haw by the accused at any time.

As has been shown, the defendant relied for an acquittal solely upon the single defense interposed by him that, because of illness which affected his mentality, he had no recollection of having delivered any check to Haw. He did not deny that he delivered to Haw the check received in evidence. In the case of People v. Freeman, 29 Cal. App. 543, 156 P. 994, the accused was charged with and convicted of the offense charged against the accused here. In that case the date line of the check set out in the information read: "Brawley, Cal. 3—2 1915." The check, when offered and received in evidence, corresponded in all respects with the copy set out in the information, except that the figure "1" appeared in the date line, making it read: "3—12 1915," instead of "3—2 1915." The claim on behalf of the defendant there, as here, was that there was as to the check a variance between the allegations of the information and the evidence offered, but an objection on that ground for the defendant was overruled. The Court of Appeal, upholding the trial court's ruling, said, quoting from People v. Arras, 89 Cal. 223, 26 P. 766: "A material variance between the proof and the information arises when an acquittal of the defendant under the information would be no bar to a further prosecution for the same offense"—and, proceeding further, expressed the following views, which are peculiarly applicable to the instant case, in so far as the present consideration is concerned: "As we view the evidence, there could have been no question but that the check offered in evidence was the one by the use of which the crime charged was perpetrated; and we have no doubt at all but that the appellant would not be embarrassed, in making proof under a possible subsequent charge, made affecting the same check, that he had theretofore been convicted of the crime, and hence had been once in jeopardy. It follows, then, that the variance was immaterial."

[7] The court sustained objections by the district attorney to questions propounded by counsel for defense to Haw, designed to elicit information as to whether the defendant, after returning or being returned to El Dorado county, paid Haw the amount of the check. Even if such testimony was material (and it certainly was not), the error in disallowing it was, subsequent to the rulings complained of in that connection, cured by bringing out practically the same testimony through the questioning of Haw by the district attorney. As seen, Haw stated that, on the day immediately preceding the day on which the trial of this case was opened, the defendant paid him (Haw) all he (defendant) owed him.

[8, 9] The cashier of the Placerville National Bank, upon which the check to Haw was drawn, was, over objection by the defendant, permitted to testify that the defendant, either at the time he delivered the check to Haw, or at any time subsequent thereto, had no funds in or credit with said bank "to meet said check or draft in full upon presentation." The ground upon which objection was made and urged against the acceptance of that testimony was that, as offered, it was not the best evidence of the fact thus sought to be proved; the argument being that the only competent way in which the fact could be proved would be by the records or books of the bank. The testimony complained of was proper. The testimony was of a negative fact, which, if required to be shown by the records of the bank, might have necessitated the examination of every book, or many of the books, of the bank. This would of necessity have entailed much loss of time, inconvenience, and trouble. Because of this, the Legislature has declared that in such instances, in the trial of a case, one of the exceptions to the rule that there can be no evidence of the contents of a writing, other than the writing itself, is "when the original consists of numerous accounts or other documents, which cannot be examined in court without great loss of time, and the evidence sought from them is only the general result of the whole." Code Civ. Proc. § 1855, subd. 5.

In just such a case as this, the appellate court, in People v. Kawano, 38 Cal. App. 613, 614, 177 P. 174, held, we think properly, that the testimony of the "credit remittance man" of the bank in that case was proper and competent as in proof of the fact that the defendant had no funds in or credit with such bank at the time the defendant drew and delivered the check to the party named therein as the payee, or at any other time. But the defendant here lays particular stress upon the proposition urged by him that the statement by the cashier that he (defendant) had no "credit" with the bank involved the conclusion of the witness. Conceding the point to be well taken, it remains true that the cashier also stated that he had no acquaintance with the defendant, either before or at the time he delivered the check to Haw, or at any time thereafter, which statement itself constituted testimony sufficient to support the implied finding by the jury that the defendant never had with said bank any credit whatever.

[10] There was no error in the ruling sustaining the objection by the district attorney to the question asked the defendant by his counsel as to whether he (defendant) had ever before his attack by typhoid fever been "in a physical or mental condition" which had the effect of causing him "not to remember what occurred." As the learned trial judge stated, when ruling on the objection, the plea of insanity was not interposed by the accused. The claimed mental lapses of the defendant were, according to his testimony, alone due to a disease of a sporadic nature, one of the characteristics of which is a fever which ofttimes causes cerebral disorder to the extent of producing unconsciousness. The fact that the defendant might, previously to the occasion in question, have been seized with a similar disease, or any other sporadic malady, which, from the nature of its processes, causes mental disturbances in the patient, would impart no added significance to the fact, if it was a fact, that he was suffering at the time of the transactions involved herein from the mental derangement as claimed by him. Had he set up and undertaken to prove the defense of insanity, the question might have been proper, in that the testimony called for thereby might tend to prove at least periodical attacks of insanity.

There are a few other rulings regarding the evidence which are obviously so far removed from any legitimate ground for just criticism that they do not merit special notice herein.

[11] 3. There is no merit in the defendant's objections to the given instructions based on sections 20 and 21 of the Penal Code. The instructions are in the language of those sections. Section 20 reads: "In every crime or public offense there must exist a union, or joint operation of act and intent, or criminal negligence." The objection to the instruction embracing the language of that section is that it erroneously assumes that "criminal negligence" was an element in the instant case; that the instruction was misleading for the reason that the crime herein charged involves the element of specific intent; and that, "criminal negligence" being wholly foreign to said offense, the jury could gather from the instruction the erroneous impression or notion that, if there was no evidence to prove such intent, but there was some evidence showing that it was through negligence that the defendant delivered the check to Haw, a verdict upon that theory against the accused would be justified in law. The instruction on section 20 of the Penal Code is what may well be termed as a "stock" instruction, like the instruction on the doctrines of reasonable doubt and the presumption of innocence, and given by the trial court in every criminal case, where, as here, specific intent is an essential ingredient of the offense.

As to the essentials of the crime herein charged, the court instructed the jury in the language of section 476a of the Penal Code, defining said crime, and elsewhere in its charge explained to the jury in plain language that one of the essential elements thereof was the intent with which he issued and delivered the check to Haw. No jury composed of persons of common intelligence, on considering all the instructions given as a single charge upon the law, could for an instant suppose that "criminal negligence" was an element of the crime or was a question in the case.

[12] Nor is the objection interposed here to the instruction based on section 21 of the Penal Code tenable. The part of the instruction objected to is against the last sentence thereof, which is in the precise language of said section, viz.: "All persons are of sound mind who are neither idiots nor lunatics, nor affected with insanity." As to this, it is complained that the court thus assumed that the defense of insanity was set up. The instruction is another one of those statements, which a trial court generally gives to a jury in a criminal case in which a specific intent is an ingredient of the offense, which constitute "stock" instructions. It, like the one first hereinabove considered, involves an abstract statement of a legal proposition, and, as is manifest, simply enumerates generally the class or classes of persons who are, by reason of mental infirmity from some cause, incapable of committing crime. The defendant could not have suffered the least harm to his rights from the instructions, particularly in view of the fact that, while not pleading insanity, he did make the plea that at the time he delivered the check he was unconscious of doing that act by reason of temporary mental sickness.

[13] The court in effect submitted to the jury the proposition that, assuming that the check was postdated or intended to be postdated, so that it would not be ripe for presentation to the bank for payment until October 10, 1926, the burden was upon the defendant to prove that, when he gave the check to Haw, he informed the latter that the check was not subject to presentation for payment until the date mentioned. It is contended by the defendant that in that respect the instruction is erroneous; that, rather than on the defendant, it rested upon the prosecution to show beyond a reasonable doubt that at the time of the delivery of the check no understanding or agreement was had between Haw and the defendant, or no information given to the former that the date of presentation was to be postponed to the 10th day of October, 1926. The defendant offered and requested an instruction in accord with his contention regarding this question, but the court rejected it. There is language in some of the cases from which it may be inferred that the intention was to hold that the rule as it was stated by the trial court in its instructions in the present case is correct. People v. Bercovitz, 163 Cal. 636, 126 P. 479, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 667; In re Griffin on Habeas Corpus, 83 Cal. App. 779, 257 P. 458; People v. Wilkins, 67 Cal. App. 759, 228 P. 367. It would follow that the position of the defendant regarding the abiding place of the burden in such instances is unsound.

But, conceding that the burden was on the people to prove that Haw did not accept the check with the understanding that he was not to present the check for payment until October 10, 1926, for the reason that the defendant would not until then have sufficient funds in the bank to meet it, the fact is, assuming that it was postdated as claimed by the defendant, that the check, which was introduced in evidence by the people, was itself some evidence that Haw accepted it with such an understanding—indeed, evidence which might be sufficient to sustain a finding to that effect, unless it was controverted by other credible and more persuasive or convincing evidence. The court instructed the jury that, if the defendant delivered the check to Haw with knowledge by him (defendant) at the time of such delivery that he had no funds in or credit with the bank upon which it was drawn to meet it in full on presentation, "then in such case it is immaterial whether you regard said Haw check as dated either in 1925 or 1926, or with no certain date, for section 476a, Penal Code, covers checks or drafts either antedated or postdated or not dated, provided, however, such check or draft is taken by the defrauded taker without information given him that the drawer had no funds or credit." The plain converse of the proposition stated by the italicized portion of the language of said instruction is (and the jury must so have understood it) that, if Haw took the check with information that the defendant, at the time of the delivery of the check, had no funds in or credit with the bank to meet the check on its presentation for payment on the date of its delivery, or any subsequent time within one year from its delivery, the charge against the accused could not be sustained.

Thus the question whether Haw accepted the check with information that it was not to be presented for payment until October 10, 1926, was fairly and intelligibly put before the jury upon some evidence (the check itself, assuming that it was postdated as claimed), and it is therefore necessarily to be implied from the verdict that the jury considered that proposition and that their conclusion was that the check was not postdated and that Haw received no information from the defendant, at the time the check was delivered to him (Haw), that the check was not to be presented for payment until a year from the date of its delivery. And the court, by the same instruction, submitted to the jury the question whether the check was or was not postdated, in the following language of the instruction: "* * * Then, in such case, it is immaterial whether you regard (find) said Haw check as dated either in 1925 or 1926," etc. Of course, it must be understood that the court, by the statement that "it is immaterial" whether the check was dated in "1925 or 1926," was referring to the offense itself as defined by section 476a—that is, that the date of the check was not an element or ingredient of the crime itself. And, accepting the decision in the cases of People v. Freeman, supra, and People v. Arras, 89 Cal. 223, 226, 227, 26 P. 766, as laying down a sound rule as to variances between the pleadings and proof in criminal cases, the variance in the instant case, if there be a variance, in the legal concept of that term, is immaterial, since, as we have before stated, the evidence leaves no room for doubt that the check which the information alleges that the defendant delivered to Haw is the identical check that was introduced in evidence by the people to support the charge, and therefore, we may repeat, the defendant could suffer no embarrassment in supporting the pleas of former conviction and once in jeopardy, should any attempt be made hereafter to prosecute him for and convict him of the offense of which he is here accused.

In the case of People v. Edwards, 59 Cal. 360, the defendant was charged with the crime of burglary, and the information alleged that he entered a building "known as the store of one S. Loupe," etc. The evidence showed that the store was owned and belonged to "S. Loupe, L. Loupe, and A. Haas, partners doing business" in said building and store, but which was known as "Loupe's store." The Supreme Court, upon the plea on appeal that there arose a material variance between the information and the proof in that case, held the variance to be immaterial.

[14] The charge of the court contained a fair statement of the law and in language so clear that the jury could not have been led into any misapprehension as to the issues which the nature of the case required them to consider and decide. It would, of course, have been well if some of the instructions proposed by the defendant and rejected by the court had been given, since, upon certain of the issues, they were more specific and direct than those by the court upon the same questions. But for that reason alone there should not be a reversal in a criminal case, where, as here, the evidence appears to be so conclusive of the defendant's guilt as to amount almost to demonstration.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

On Petition for Rehearing.

HART, J. The petition for a rehearing of this cause will be denied for reasons hereinafter to be stated. Before presenting those reasons, however, there are certain modifications of the language of the opinion originally filed which should be and are hereby made.

On page 2 of the original opinion, line 6 from the top (58 Cal. App. Dec. 57, lines 22 and 23 from the top) the following language in parenthesis, is hereby stricken out: "(save the sum of $3.12 and no more)."

The following language on page 12 of the original opinion, lines 1, 2, and 3 from the top (58 Cal. App. Dec. 63, lines 24, 23, 22, and 21 from the bottom) is hereby stricken out: "so far as is concerned the nature of the proof required to establish a case for the People as against the pleas of former conviction and once in jeopardy is also immaterial," and the following language substituted therefor: "if there be a variance, in the legal concept of that term, is immaterial, since, as we have before stated, the evidence leaves no room for doubt that the check which the information alleges that the defendant delivered to Haw is the identical check that was introduced in evidence by the People to support the charge, and, therefore, we may repeat, the defendant could suffer no embarrassment in supporting the pleas of former conviction and once in jeopardy should any attempt be made hereafter to prosecute him for and convict him of the offense of which he is here accused."

The petition merely involves a repetition of the argument advanced in the briefs of counsel for the defendant in support of the points herein made. After a careful consideration of the petition, we have found no reason for departing from the conclusion announced in our original opinion upon said points. We deem it proper, however, to give further notice to the point that the trial court committed prejudicial error by allowing the witness Irish (the cashier of the bank upon which the check in question was drawn) to testify that the defendant, neither at the time the check was drawn nor at any other time thereafter during said witness' official connection with said bank, had any funds in or credit with the bank to meet said check upon its presentation for payment. In the petition it is said that the case of the People v. Kawano, 38 Cal. App. 613, 177 P. 174, cited in our original opinion as holding that the testimony of a bank officer actively connected with the bank in the management of its business that a party has no funds in or credit with such bank, is competent or legally proper for the proof of that fact, is in the facts, so clearly distinguishable from the instant case that it cannot stand as an authority supporting the ruling allowing the testimony by the cashier in this case; that the specific distinction between the two cases is this: That, in the Kawano Case, the "credit remittance man" of the bank concerned therein was specially charged with the duty of handling all business with "outside California banks"; that he testified that previous to giving his testimony, he had made a personal inspection of the books of the bank with reference to the particular account of Kawano, the defendant in said case, and that the latter had no account or credit with said bank at the time he drew the check involved in that case; whereas, so it is, in effect, declared by the accused here, the cashier did not testify nor was it shown that he had inspected the books of the bank or made any special investigation with reference to the defendant to ascertain whether he had any funds in or credit with the bank at the time the check was drawn or at any time thereafter to meet the same upon its presentation for payment. While this is all true, Irish did testify that he had been cashier of the Placerville National Bank from and including the day upon which the check was drawn continuously to the date of the trial in June, 1928; that he had no acquaintance whatever with the defendant during the period of time that he had been cashier of said bank, and, in fact, had never seen him until the day upon which he (defendant) was given his preliminary hearing on the charge upon which the information is founded; that he (the cashier) was "fairly" familiar with all of the books of the bank, and that the defendant had no account or credit with said bank at any time during his connection therewith as cashier. The irresistible inference from Irish's testimony, viewed in its entirety, is that he was sufficiently familiar with all of the books of the bank and the business thereof to justify him in declaring, as unequivocally and unqualifiedly he did declare, that the accused never at any time had any funds in or credit with said bank during Irish's occupancy of the office of cashier. The only real difference between the Kawano Case and this as to the present consideration is that, while the "credit remittance man" in the case first named gained his knowledge of the fact that Kawano had no funds in or credit with the bank therein concerned from an inspection of the books, in the instant case the cashier acquired his knowledge of the same fact as to the defendant from his general familiarity with the books of the bank and his intimate familiarity with the business of that institution, and from the further fact that he had never known the accused and never had seen him until a brief time before the date of the trial of this case. We can see no substantial difference between the situation in the Kawano Case and the situation in the present case regarding the matter in hand. It cannot be said that the cashier in this case any the less acquired his knowledge of the fact that the defendant had no funds in or credit with the bank of which he was cashier from his own perception than that the "credit remittance man" in the Kawano Case, thus acquired his knowledge with reference to the same fact regarding Kawano. But regardless of this latter consideration, we still adhere to the view expressed in the original opinion that this is an instance which comes within the provisions of section 1855, subdivision (5), of the Code of Civil Procedure.

There is, as to the facts, no analogy between the case of People v. Frey, 165 Cal. 140, 144, 131 P. 127 (cited by defendant), and this case. There the only evidence offered and received in support of the charge that the defendant, drawer of the check, had no funds in the bank upon which the check was drawn, was a notation in writing across the face of the check as follows: "No account." The opinion in that case stated that "there was no testimony on the part of any one connected with th ebank that the words 'no account' on the face of the check were written by any person connected with the banking corporation in Nevada, or by any one who knew or could know the facts," and held, therefore, that no case was made against the accused. Clearly, as we have already substantially stated, the Frey Case is far from being such a case as we have here.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 21, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court March 21, 1929.

1. Action ⟹27(2)—Complaint charging that landlord maliciously, oppressively, and wantonly disconnected water supply from tenants' dwelling held to charge breach of contract and not tort.

Tenants' complaint, alleging that landlord, after having rented to them a dwelling house including supply of water for domestic purposes, disconnected and destroyed such supply, held to charge breach of contract and not a tort, notwithstanding allegations that landlord acted maliciously, oppressively and wantonly and that complaint expressly disavowed seeking compensation for breach of contract and confined its object to recovery of damages for landlord's alleged tort.

2. Damages ⟹57—Motive of party in failing to carry out contract is immaterial on question of damages.

The motive of a party to a contract in failing to carry out its terms is immaterial, and fact that such motive may have been malicious and wanton does not authorize recovery of exemplary damages.

3. Judgment ⟹252(1)—Courts will not compel litigant to take relief which he expressly disclaims.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action by Charles Jones and wife against Michael J. Kelly. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

George D. Collins, Jr., of San Francisco, for appellants.

J. C. Flannery, of San Francisco, for respondent.

★Superseded by opinion of Supreme Court 280 P. 942.

PER CURIAM. Action to recover damages, both actual and exemplary, for the alleged destruction by defendant of the plaintiff's water supply; the parties occupying the relation of landlord and tenant. A demurrer, both general and special, to the amended complaint, was sustained without leave to amend, and judgment thereupon entered in favor of the defendant. The plaintiffs appeal.

[1] The complaint, after alleging the plaintiffs to be husband and wife, proceeds as follows:

"2. Aver by way of inducement to the cause of action for the trespass hereinafter alleged, that heretofore, to-wit, in the month of March, 1924, the plaintiffs hired from defendant and he let to them as his tenants from month to month, at a monthly rental, and for the use, occupancy and habitation of plaintiffs, as and for their home and dwelling place, the dwelling house and premises then and there owned by defendant and situated at No. 22 Harper street, in the city and county of San Francisco, together with a sufficient supply of water to the same, for the household and domestic uses of the plaintiffs in said dwelling house and home and for their drink, bathing, washing of clothes, and also for necessary toilet and culinary purposes therein.

"That thereupon and with the consent of defendant and upon said terms of tenancy, including said water supply, the said plaintiffs on the 15th day of March, 1924, and as said tenants entered into the possession and occupancy of said dwelling house as their home and habitation, and paid the said rental therefor to defendant until the trespass hereinafter alleged. That during all the times said premises were occupied by plaintiffs as said tenants the said water supply was necessary for said purposes and essential to the beneficial use and enjoyment of said dwelling house as a fit and suitable place of habitation for human beings. That accordingly, and by reason of the fact that said water supply was necessary for said purposes during the existence of said tenancy, the defendant furnished said plaintiffs, as tenants, with said water and in said dwelling house from said 15th day of March, 1924, until the time of the trespass hereinafter alleged, to-wit, on the 22d day of May, 1926.

"3. That while said dwelling house was occupied as aforesaid by plaintiffs, and during the continued existence of said tenancy, and while plaintiffs as said tenants were in the quiet and peaceable possession, occupancy and enjoyment of said dwelling house as their home, place of abode and habitation, and were then actually using said water supply therein solely for the necessary purposes hereinbefore stated, the said defendant, on the 22d day of May, 1926, without the consent of plaintiffs and against their will and without notice or warning to either of them, did wilfully, maliciously and with express malice and evil motive, wantonly, oppressively and solely for the malevolent purpose of annoying, inconveniencing, harassing and injuring the plaintiffs, cut off, disconnect, discontinue, terminate and destroy said water supply and entirely deprive the plaintiffs of the same, and did thereby seriously, maliciously, oppressively, wantonly, wilfully annoy, inconvenience and harass plaintiffs and greatly injure them in their feelings and inflict upon them by said wilful and malicious trespass very great trouble, severe hardship, detrimental privation, personal indignities and mental suffering, all of which is to their actual damage in the sum of three thousand dollars and in the further sum of two thousand dollars exemplary damages. That in support of said claim to exemplary damages the plaintiffs aver that this action is not brought for a breach of an obligation arising out of said contract of tenancy in failing to supply water to plaintiffs in said premises, but is brought solely to recover for said trespass in maliciously, oppressively and wantonly cutting off said water supply, to the great annoyance, harassment, hardship and injury of plaintiffs as hereinbefore alleged."

It is apparent from their pleading that the plaintiffs are attempting to recover as for an unlawful, willful, and malicious trespass upon allegations showing no more than a breach of contract. If for the moment we disregard the averment that the deprivation by defendant of plaintiffs' water supply was malicious, oppressive, and wanton, we have a complaint charging that the defendant, having rented to the plaintiffs a dwelling house, including a supply of water for domestic purposes, discontinued that supply, or, as the pleading has it, did cut off, disconnect, terminate, and destroy it. These allegations are not made concerning a stranger to the plaintiffs, who has intruded upon their premises and interfered with or destroyed the water conduits; nor of a person or corporation who has undertaken the duty of serving the public generally; but they are made concerning one who is merely under contract to supply the plaintiffs with water and has failed to do so by cutting it off without, so far as the complaint shows, any other interference with the plaintiffs' occupancy of the premises. The only obligation of the defendant is a contractual one, arising from the lease of the premises by him to the plaintiffs. The complaint expressly disavows seeking compensation for a breach of this obligation, and has ex industria confined its object and purpose to the recovery of damages for the alleged tortious act of the defendant described therein.

[2] The breach of duty charged being one of contract, its character as such is not changed by alleging it to have been maliciously, oppressively, and wantonly committed.

The motive of a party to a contract in failing to carry out its terms is immaterial. This is the rule at common law (Jones v. Steamship Cortes, 17 Cal. 487, 496, 79 Am. Dec. 142), and in general the law of California on the subject of damages may be regarded as a faithful reflection of the common law (8 Cal. Jur. "Damages," § 4, p. 735). In the work cited, it is said, at page 871 of the same volume: "In general, exemplary damages for breach of contract are not recoverable, and this has been held to be the rule even though the breach complained of be wilful. And in this connection it has been said that 'the rule as to damages in actions upon contract is the same, whether the breach be by mistake, pure accident or inability to perform it, or whether it be wilful and malicious; the motives of the party breaking the contract are not to be inquired into' (citing Baumgarten v. Alliance Assurance Co. [C. C.] 159 F. 275, Brown v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 54 Wis. 342, 11 N. W. 356, 911, 41 Am. Rep. 41). Where, however, the action is not on the contract, but is based upon the fraud by which it was induced, the fact that the contract fixes compensation does not prevent recovery of exemplary damages. And where the breach also involves an infraction of duty imposed by law it may be thus punished (citing Gorman v. Southern Pacific Co., 97 Cal. 1, 31 P. 1112, 33 Am. St. Rep. 157, and Mendelsohn v. Anaheim Lighter Co., 40 Cal. 657). Thus an action for wrongful refusal to supply irrigating water in violation of the constitutional obligation imposed on irrigating companies through the declaration that the use of water, rental or distribution shall be a public use subject to state control, is based on the constitutional obligation, and not on contract, so that punitive damages for the refusal may in a proper case be allowed (citing Lowe v. Yolo County Consol. Water Co., 157 Cal. 503, 108 P. 297)."

This difference in the measure of damages recoverable for breach of contract, breach of an obligation not arising from contract (tort), and a similar breach accompanied by fraud, oppression, or malice, is expressly recognized as the law of this state by sections 3300 (breach of contract), 3333 (tort), and 3294 (tort accompanied by malice, etc.), of the Civil Code, and by the very terms of the last-mentioned section exemplary damages are only allowed "for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract where the defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud or malice."

The appellant has cited several cases in which exemplary damages were recovered, in some of which a breach of contract was involved; but it will be found upon examination that in each of them the foundation for such judgment was a breach of duty other than the direct obligation of the contract. In some of the cases cited there is found the expression that a party may waive the breach of contract and recover for the tort. This does not mean that, where there is only a breach of contract the injured party has the option to sue either in contract or tort. It means merely that, where there is both a breach of contract and an unlawful act or omission, or where the breach itself consists of an act or omission otherwise unlawful, the injured party may waive the breach of contract and sue in tort; the advantage to him in doing so accruing in the shape of a more liberal measure of damages.

[3] We conclude that the complaint in the case at bar shows merely a breach of contract, for which the plaintiffs would be entitled to recover compensatory damages upon proper allegations and proof. If the allegations of the complaint concerning the lease and its breach could be given effect as directed to the failure of the defendant to furnish the supply of water agreed, a cause of action for breach of contract would be stated and the general demurrer to the complaint would have to be overruled; but, as we have seen, the plaintiffs emphatically disclaim seeking in this action relief for such breach, and they declare in their pleading (and again in their brief on appeal) that they are seeking damages for the alleged malicious tort of the defendant, and that their averments regarding the lease and the obligation of the defendant to furnish a water supply are made for the sole purpose of laying a foundation for such damages. Courts will not compel a litigant to take relief which he expressly disclaims. In the consideration of the general demurrer, therefore, the effect of the averments relating to the lease existing between the parties is to be confined to the specific purpose for which plaintiffs made them. So regarded, the complaint fails to state a cause of action, and the general demurrer thereto was properly sustained.

The judgment is affirmed.

McHUGH v. VOYCE et al. (Civ. 6571.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 30, 1929.

1. Municipal corporations 🔑484(1)—Warrant, assessment, diagram, and affidavit of demand and nonpayment of street improvement assessment made prima facie case of regularity of assessment, and burden was on property owners to prove contrary.

Under street improvement ordinance making warrant, assessment, and diagram with affidavit of demand and nonpayment prima facie evidence of regularity and correctness of assessment, introduction in evidence of such documents in contractor's actions to foreclose street improvement liens, and property owners' action to cancel assessments on which liens were based, made out prima facie case, and burden was on property owners to prove contrary.

2. Municipal corporations 🔑488, 489(5)—Any defects or irregularities in street improvement proceedings held waived by failing to appeal to proper public authorities.

Under curative provisions of street improvement ordinance property, property owners' failure to make any protest, objection, or appeal to the board of public works or supervisors, prior to date of publication of notice of award and to making of assessment, held to waive any such defects or irregularities.

3. Municipal corporations 🔑303(1)—Passage of San Francisco's 1913 street improvement ordinance held not to exhaust power given by charter so as to invalidate subsequent ordinance.

Passage of San Francisco street improvement ordinance in 1913 held not to exhaust power conferred on board of supervisors by city charter so as to invalidate 1918 street improvement ordinance as being in excess of charter authority.

4. Municipal corporations 🔑513(7), 568(3)—Evidence held insufficient to establish that street improvement contract was let without competitive bidding as result of conspiracy between contractors.

In contractor's actions to foreclose street improvement liens and action by property owners to cancel assessments on which liens were based, evidence held insufficient to establish that contract was awarded as result of unlawful conspiracy between street contractors to eliminate competitive bidding so as to render assessment void.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; C. P. Vicini, Judge.

Actions by Frank J. McHugh against Alfred Voyce, Jr., and others, and by Alfred Voyce, Jr., against Frank J. McHugh and others, which actions were consolidated and tried together. From the judgment Alfred Voyce, Jr., and others appeal. Affirmed.

Sawyer & Sawyer and F. W. Sawyer, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Grover O'Connor, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LUCAS, Justice pro tem. Four actions are involved in this appeal, three brought by Frank J. McHugh, a street contractor, against several property owners to foreclose certain street improvement liens created pursuant to the "1918 street improvement ordinance" of San Francisco, and one by said property owners against the same McHugh and members of the board of public works of San Francisco to cancel the assessments upon which the liens were based. In this latter action the said McHugh filed a cross-complaint similar to his complaints filed in the other three actions.

In all four actions the liens in question arose by reason of the same assessment proceedings. They were therefore consolidated and tried together. But one judgment was rendered. This was in favor of the said McHugh. From this judgment appeal is taken by the property owners, plaintiffs in one suit and defendants in the others.

[1] Under the provisions of the 1918 street improvement ordinance of San Francisco, in actions of this character, the "warrant, assessment and diagram, with the affidavit of demand and nonpayment, shall be held prima facie evidence of the regularity and correctness of the assessment and of the prior proceedings and acts of the Board of Public Works and of the Supervisors upon which said warrant, assessment and diagram are based, and like evidence of the right of the plaintiff to recover in the action."

At the trial there was offered and received in evidence in behalf of the respondent herein, and without objection by appellants, the warrant, assessment, and diagram, together with the affidavit of demand and nonpayment covering the liens in question. This made out a prima facie case in so far as the foreclosure suits were concerned and cast upon the appellants the burden of proving the matters set out in their answers. As to the action brought to cancel the assessments, the burden of proof at all times rested upon appellants.

[2] Appellants in their several pleadings attempt to contest the validity of the liens in question upon various grounds, and attack the validity and legality of the respective steps taken in the street improvement proceedings upon which the liens are based. At the trial they offered certain evidence relating thereto, to which offer objections were sustained by the trial court. Appellants now contend that in this the court erred, although they fail, with but one exception, to point out in their brief the particular rulings complained of. However, an inspection of the record reveals that all the rejected evidence related to proceedings had prior to the publication of the notice of award and prior to the making of the assessment.

The 1918 street improvement ordinance, which was offered in evidence but not fully set out in the record, contains two curative clauses. One is to the effect that all objections to any act or proceeding occurring prior to the date of publication of notice of award must be made to the board of public works, in writing, within a certain specified time, or they shall be deemed waived, and the other that no proceedings prior to the assessment shall be, by any court, held invalid for any error, defect, or informality in the same, provided (and this provision relates to both curative clauses) the resolution of intention has actually been published and notices of improvement posted. The ordinance also provides that after the contractor has completed the work and the assessment has been made, the property owner may then appeal to the board of supervisors and point out to them any defects or irregularities in the proceedings.

It is frankly admitted by appellants that none of them, at any time, ever made any protest, objection, or appeal, either to the board of public works or to the supervisors; neither did they show or attempt to show that the resolution of intention was not published nor that notice of improvement was not posted, as required by law.

Curative provisions similar to those contained in the 1918 ordinance have uniformly been upheld by the courts. Bienfield v. Van Ness, 176 Cal. 585, 169 P. 225; City Street Improvement Co. v. Pearson, 181 Cal. 640, 185 P. 962, 20 A. L. R. 1317.

Errors not jurisdictional are waived by failure to appeal to the proper board or authority. Federal Construction Co. v. Newhouse, 186 Cal. 284, 199 P. 519.

Under the above-mentioned provisions of the ordinance the appellants were afforded an opportunity to make their objections and point out to the proper authorities any defects or irregularities in the proceedings, and having utterly failed so to do, and there being no showing that the board of public works or the board of supervisors were without jurisdiction in the matter, it must be held that all defects and irregularities were waived, and that the objections to the proposed evidence offered by appellants were properly sustained.

[3] Appellants also attempted without success to introduce in evidence the 1913 street improvement ordinance, claiming that by the passage of said ordinance the board of supervisors exhausted the power conferred upon them by the charter and that the 1918 ordinance, under which the work was done, was in excess of charter authority. But the case of Cooper v. Reardon, 71 Cal. App. 649, 236 P. 180, in which a hearing was denied by the Supreme Court, definitely disposes of this contention adversely to appellants.

[4] It is alleged by appellants in their pleadings that by reason of an unlawful conspiracy between said Frank J. McHugh and other (unnamed) street contractors there was no competitive bidding upon the improvements in question, and that the assessment is therefore void, illegal, and against public policy. Much stress is laid upon this point for the reason that the 1918 ordinance provides that if at any time it is found that the person to whom a contract has been awarded has colluded with any party or parties for the purpose of preventing any other bids being made, his contract shall be void.

We are unable to find in the record, and appellants have not pointed out, any evidence in support of this allegation other than the testimony of the assistant secretary of the board of public works, found on page 49 of the reporter's transcript, to wit:

"Q. Were there any other bids? A. I don't think so; I don't recall.

"Q. Why don't you think so? A. Well, for the reason that it was a 'wherenot' and the ethics among the contractors is that no other contractor will bid on another man's 'wherenot.' That is the reason I don't think there was another bid."

The witness made no explanation as to what was meant by the term "wherenot," and none appears in the record, nor did he say that no other bids were in fact presented—he merely stated that he thought there were none, his reason for such thought being that a certain unexplained code of ethics existed among the contractors as above set forth. No attempt was made to show that the respondent McHugh was a party to or even knew of this code of ethics, or that he had ever in any way agreed to or recognized the same. Such evidence falls far short of proving unlawful conspiracy.

No collusion or conspiracy having been shown, it is not necessary to pass upon the question as to whether or not the curative provisions of the ordinance are applicable thereto.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 22, 1929.

1. Landlord and tenant 🔑288—Unlawful detainer is statutory proceeding not available for purposes not enumerated in statute.

The action of unlawful detainer is a statutory proceeding, designed to provide a speedy and summary remedy to determine right to possession of realty in cases specified in statute, and cannot be used for other purposes than those enumerated therein.

2. Landlord and tenant 🔑290(1)—To maintain action of unlawful detainer, conventional relation of landlord and tenant must be shown.

To maintain as action of unlawful detainer, the conventional relation of landlord and tenant must be shown to exist; the action being limited to cases in which tenant is estopped to deny landlord's title.

3. Landlord and tenant 🔑290(1)—Unlawful detainer held not maintainable by one claiming ownership and right of possession under deed from grantee of purchaser at sale on defendant's default in payment of note secured by trust deed (Civ. Code, § 2924; Code Civ. Proc. § 692).

Summary action of unlawful detainer held not maintainable by parties, claiming to be owners and entitled to possession of property under deed from grantee of purchaser at sale under Civ. Code, § 2924, and Code Civ. Proc. § 692, on defendant's default in payment of note secured by trust deed; conventional relation of landlord and tenant not existing between parties.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Miller, Judge.

Action by Samuel Klein and another against John Loeffler. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed, with direction.

C. M. Gill and A. H. Carpenter, both of Stockton, for appellant.

J. O. Stemmler, of Stockton, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. The original complaint herein sets forth a cause of action for forcible detainer by defendant of real property described in the complaint. The answer denies the allegations of the complaint, and alleges ownership and "the quiet, peaceable, open and notorious possession of said premises" by the defendant. In an amended complaint, made after trial, "so as to conform to the proof," it is alleged that at all times after October 11, 1926, the plaintiffs were the owners of the property and entitled to the possession thereof; that the "defendant, who, after having entered peaceably upon said real property as a gratuitous occupant thereof, holds possession of the premises hereinbefore described, and refuses to vacate said premises"; that the usual thirty-day notice to terminate the defendant's tenancy and the three-day notice to vacate the premises were duly served; and that the defendant refused to surrender possession thereof. The court found that at the time of the commencement of the action the plaintiffs were entitled to the possession of the property; that at all times after October 11, 1926, they were the owners thereof; that during that time the defendant "entered peaceably upon said real property as a gratuitous occupant thereof"; and that the alleged notices were duly served, but that defendant refused to vacate the premises and "is now holding possession of said premises wrongfully and unlawfully." Judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiffs for the restitution of the premises and the rental value thereof for one month. The defendant has appealed from the judgment.

There is no conflict in the evidence. It appears therefrom that on October 8, 1920, the defendant was the owner of the property described in the complaint; that on that day he conveyed the property to George F. Schuler, who thereupon executed a promissory note for $8,000, borrowed by the defendant from the Sacramento-San Joaquin Bank, and a deed of trust conveying the property to Frank A. Guernsey and Will E. Morris, as trustees, to secure payment of the note. On the same day and as a part of the same transaction, a separate written agreement between Schuler and the defendant was executed, by the terms of which the property was to be reconveyed to the defendant upon his payment of the note and interest within two years from the date thereof, and, upon defendant's default, Schuler was authorized to sell the property "in accordance with law and the provisions of the deed of trust, * * * or, * * * at his option, personally sell the said property in accordance with the provisions of section 2924 of the Civil Code and section 692 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and out of the proceeds of said sale * * * retain the amount due to him under this contract." The defendant failed to make payment, and on January 20, 1926, pursuant to the terms of the agreement, Schuler sold the property to Cora I. Weber, who thereafter conveyed it to Schuler and he to the plaintiffs.

[1-3] The respondents have not filed a brief, and no appearance was made for them at the time set for the oral argument. The amended complaint and the findings eliminate any question of forcible detainer, and the only question remaining is whether, under the circumstances shown, the summary action of unlawful detainer is maintainable. The conventional relation of landlord and tenant did not exist, but both parties claimed the ownership of the property. "The action of unlawful detainer is a statutory proceeding and is governed solely by the provision of the statute creating it. It was designed for the purpose of providing a speedy and summary remedy to determine the right to the possession of real property in the cases specified in the statute. It cannot be used for any other purpose than those enumerated therein." Bekins v. Trull, 69 Cal. App. 40, 45, 230 P. 24, 26. "In order that such an action mav be maintained the conventional relation of landlord and tenant must be shown to exist. In other words, the action is limited to those cases in which the tenant is estopped to deny the landlord's title. And when a defendant in an action which under our code is the equivalent of one in unlawful detainer proves the nonexistence of such relation, the plaintiff must fail." Francis v. West Virginia Oil Co., 174 Cal. 168, 170, 162 P. 394, 395. If the plaintiffs are the owners of the property and entitled to the possession thereof, they must establish those facts in an appropriate action in which the respective claims and rights of both parties may be put in issue and litigated.

The judgment is reversed and the trial court is directed to dismiss the action.

BROWN et al. v. DE CARLO. (Civ. 6463.)★

Rehearing Granted March 1, 1929.

1. Brokers ⚷44—Authority to sell property for commissions, reciting understanding that it is not exclusive contract, held not irrevocable.

Authorization to list and sell property with agreement to pay commission, should broker succeed in selling property, reciting understanding that authorization was not exclusive contract for 30 days, had neither time limit nor consideration, and was not irrevocable.

2. Brokers ⚷58—Broker obtaining contract signed by salesman for alleged purchaser who could not be compelled to purchase held not to have performed contract to sell.

In action for real estate brokers' commissions, evidence that brokers obtained agreement of purchase signed by real estate salesman for alleged purchaser without written authority to sign purchaser's name, and evidence raising inference that brokers procured only semblance of contract to secure further time, and that purchaser never signed agreement, so that he could be compelled to purchase, and that alleged purchaser's interest was assigned to another after defendants repudiated transaction, was sufficient to sustain finding that brokers did not perform contract to sell.

3. Brokers ⚷65(1)—Owner's signature to contract of sale, if obtained by broker's misrepresentations, cannot be used to owner's detriment as between owner and broker.

Brokers, suing for commissions for sale of property, are bound to act with good faith towards owner, and, if in any respect owner's signature to contract of sale was obtained by broker's misrepresentation, then, as between broker and owner, owner's signature cannot be used to detriment of owner.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Leon E. Gray, Judge.

Action by Clarence A. Brown and another, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Brown & Smedley, against Michael Alphonso de Carlo. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

R. H. Countryman, of San Francisco, for appellants.

C. Leonard Rosenberg, of Oakland, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. Plaintiffs sought by this action to obtain a judgment of $450 as real estate broker's commission. In general, it was the defense of the defendant that the plaintiffs had not succeeded in making a bona fide sale of the property, but had made a "wash" or pretended sale only. Judgment was in favor of defendant. The court in its written findings found that the appellants did not consummate a sale of the property; did not perform the contract by which the property was listed with them; did not produce a purchaser; and did not obtain a valid and binding contract from their alleged purchaser. Appellants argue several points of law in their briefs, but their attack upon the judgment is in reality a claim that the evidence is insufficient to support the court's findings.

[1] Our examination of the evidence convinces us that the court's findings are sufficiently supported by the evidence. Respondent in writing authorized appellants to list and sell certain property, and agreed to pay a commission, should appellants "succeed in selling it." The authorization concluded with the following: "I understand that this is not an exclusive contract for thirty days." It was dated September 6, 1926. The authorization was not of the kind that could not be revoked. It had neither time limit nor consideration. After the lapse of about two weeks or more, the respondent notified appellants that at 6 o'clock p. m. of September 25 the authorization to sell upon the terms therein detailed would expire. Thereafter, and at 8 o'clock p. m. on the said 25th day of September, the appellants came to the respondent and told him that they had succeeded in selling the property. Respondent accepted their statement in good faith, and approved what purported to be an agreement of purchase signed by the alleged purchaser,

At that time appellants had signed a $50 receipt specifying terms of sale. Below this receipt was the indorsement: "I hereby agree to purchase the above described property—on the terms—specified. * * * In the event of my failure to comply with the terms of this contract the agent may retain the said deposit and all my rights hereunder shall terminate." To this document the name of the alleged purchaser, J. C. James, had been written by N. C. Hart. The said Hart had no written authorization to sign James' name to the document. Hart was a real estate salesman in another office. James appears from the testimony to have been a favored and favoring client of Hart's real estate office. Three days thereafter respondent, in pursuance of a previous verbal promise, agreed in writing to pay 10 per cent. commission instead of 5 per cent. Finally, respondent repudiated the entire transaction. A week or more after this James assigned whatever interest he had to a man named Ulrich, and a tender of a prepared deed from respondent to said Ulrich was made, but respondent refused to consummate a sale to said Ulrich.

[2] The foregoing is but a skeleton of the testimony. Leaving out of consideration the various legal questions which are suggested by the foregoing statement, the evidence is sufficient to warrant the conclusion that the appellants had not performed the broker's contract within the time given them. It is quite susceptible of the inference that appellants procured only the semblance of a contract in order to pretend to have found a purchaser at the very latest time permitted them so as to give themselves more time to see what further might be done in the matter without risk but with profit to themselves. Within the time limit appellants never put James in a position where he was compelled to buy. They let James stay in the sheltered position where he could disclaim and repudiate his signature made by Hart, and that was not done until it was evident that respondent did not wish longer to sell at the price named. This was not performance, and Ulrich was produced too late. This question of fact determines the appeal, and makes unnecessary a consideration of those legal points touched upon by appellants, which are based upon the assumption that the alleged purchaser and contract were bona fide.

[3] It is also claimed that respondent is precluded from questioning the genuineness of the alleged purchaser and of the claimed contract of sale by reason of the fact that he indorsed his approval upon the document to which the name of James was thus signed. It is stated that, after the seller enters into a valid contract of sale with the purchaser procured by the real estate broker, the latter's commission is not thereafter dependent upon the performance of said contract by the purchaser. On the other hand, the appellants were bound to act with good faith towards respondent, and if in any respect respondent's signature was obtained by appellants' misrepresentation, then as between respondent and appellants his signature thus obtained cannot be used to his detriment. In other words, the question still is whether the appellants in good faith obtained a bona fide purchaser of the property within the time and for the terms as specified by the respondent. The evidence does not compel this conclusion, and the trial court's finding will not be disturbed.

It is ordered that the judgment appealed from be, and the same is hereby, affirmed.

GARVER v. COUNCIL OF CITY OF OAKLAND et al. (Civ. 6777.) ★

Rehearing Denied March 1, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 1, 1929.

Municipal corporations 🔑46—Constitutional provisions, prescribing method of city charter amendment, held exclusive and controlling over inconsistent charter provisions (Const. art. 11, § 8).

Const. art. 11, § 8, providing that city charter may be amended by proposals therefor submitted by legislative body of city on its own motion or on petition signed by 15 per cent. of registered electors, or both, and prescribing procedure to be followed, held exclusive and controlling over inconsistent city charter provisions.

Mandamus proceeding by Paul Garver against the Council of the City of Oakland and John L. Davie and others, members thereof, to compel them to transmit to the county clerk petition for submission to the people of a charter amendment. Writ granted.

Breed, Burpee & Robinson, of Oakland, for petitioner.

Preston Higgins, City Atty., and John W. Collier, Deputy City Atty., both of Oakland, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. A petition was filed on September 6, 1928, with the council of the city of Oakland to submit to the electors a proposal to establish a council-manager form of government for the municipality, and to amend certain sections of its charter. This proceeding is one in mandamus to compel the council and its members, who are made respondents, to transmit the petition to the county clerk of Alameda county for verification of the signatures thereon, and to provide the expense of making the verification.

It is provided by section 8 of article 11 of the Constitution that: "The charter of any city or city and county may be amended by proposals therefor submitted by the legislative body of the city on its own motion or on petition signed by fifteen per cent of the registered electors, or both. Such proposals shall be submitted to the electors only during the six months next preceding a regular session of the Legislature or thereafter and before the final adjournment of that session and at either a special election called for that purpose or at any general or special election. Petitions for the submission of any amendment shall be filed with the legislative body of the city or city and county not less than sixty days prior to the general election next preceding a regular session of the Legislature. The signatures on such petition shall be verified by the authority having charge of the registration records of such city or city and county, and the expenses of such verification shall be provided by the legislative body thereof. If such petitions have a sufficient number of signatures the legislative body of the city or city and county shall so submit the amendment or amendments so proposed to the electors. Amendments proposed by the legislative body and amendments proposed by petition of the electors may be submitted at the same election. The amendments so submitted shall be advertised in the same manner as herein provided for the advertisement of a proposed charter, and the election thereon held at a date to be fixed by the legislative body of such city, not less than forty and not more than sixty days after the completion of the advertising in the official paper. If a majority of the qualified voters voting on any such amendment vote in favor thereof it shall be deemed ratified, and shall be submitted to the Legislature at the regular session next following such election; and approved or rejected without power of alteration in the same manner as herein provided for the approval or rejection of a charter. In submitting any such charter or amendment separate propositions, whether alternative or conflicting, or one included within the other, may be submitted at the same time to be voted on by the electors separately, and, as between those so related, if more than one receive a majority of the votes, the proposition receiving the larger number of votes shall control as to all matters in conflict."

It is admitted that the petition is sufficient in form under the above section, and that it purports to have attached the signatures of more than 15 per cent. of the registered electors of the city.

The charter by article XXI also prescribes a method of procedure whereby initiative measures proposed by the electors of the city may be voted on at an election; and this article also provides that its provision, unless prohibited by the state Constitution, shall apply to the proposal, submission, and adoption of charter amendments. Respondents contend that this, rather than the procedure prescribed by the Constitution should have been followed in the present instance, and that the petition was consequently insufficient.

While the charter has the force and effect of law (Taylor v. Cole, 201 Cal. 327, 257 P. 40), and legislation may be enacted to facilitate the operation of self-executing provisions of the Constitution and to safeguard the exercise of rights thereby secured (Chester v. Hall, 55 Cal. App. 611, 204 P. 237), here the Constitution lays down a complete scheme of charter amendment with which the charter provisions are in many respects inconsistent, and which, if applied to such proceedings, would hamper rather than facilitate or safeguard the exercise of the rights granted to the electors by the Constitution.

The court, in Blanchard v. Hartwell, 131 Cal. 263, 63 P. 349, referring to the above section, said: "Since a procedure for the amendment of such a charter is expressly provided, the presumption would be (independently of the declaration that all the provisions of the Constitution are mandatory and prohibitory unless the contrary is expressly stated) that such mode is exclusive. Under such a Constitution this seems indisputable. The one mode of amendment is commanded, and all others are prohibited."

In State v. Kansas City, 233 Mo. 162, 134 S. W. 1007, the same question was involved, and it was held that the Constitution of Missouri, by expressly providing the manner of amending the charters of municipalities, was self-executing, and a different method provided by the charter of respondent city was consequently invalid.

We are satisfied that the provisions of the charter, in so far as they prescribe a method of amending the same, are in conflict with the provisions of the Constitution; that the latter are exclusive and controlling, and that respondents' contention to the contrary cannot be sustained.

In Garver v. Williams, as Auditor, etc. (Cal. App.) 273 P. 604, was presented the question whether the signatures to the petition involved in the present proceeding should be verified by the city clerk of the city or the county clerk of Alameda county. It was there held that the provisions of the above section of the Constitution, that "the signatures on such petition shall be verified by the authority having charge of the registration records of such city, * * *" referred to the county clerk of Alameda county, he being the only officer having charge of the registration records of the city of Oakland. This being true, the above, with the further provision, that "the expenses of such verification shall be provided by the legislative body thereof," make it the plain duty of the respondents to transmit the petition to the county clerk of Alameda county for verification, and to provide the expense of making the verification.

It is therefore ordered that a peremptory writ of mandate issue as prayed for.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by Chun Kam against L. J. Myers. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. Hatfield and V. L. Hatfield, both of Sacramento, for appellant.

Gaffney & Zagoren, of Sacramento, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendant in an action in assumpsit for the recovery of money alleged to have been received for the benefit of the plaintiff.

November 1, 1923, the plaintiff leased, for the term of one year, from the estate of L. W. Myers, deceased, a portion of the ranch known as "camp 1 of the home place," situated in Sacramento county. The expressed consideration for the lease was that the "party of the second part is to receive 50 per cent. of fruit, and 65 per cent. of vegetables [produced thereon]." The lease provided for neither the time nor the manner of dividing the crops. It was, however, assumed by the respective parties that the estate was to market the crops, and that the plaintiff was to receive his proportion of the proceeds after the necessary expenses were paid. Henrietta Myers, the surviving widow of said deceased, was duly appointed and qualified as the administratrix of the estate of her deceased husband, and served in that capacity until January, 1925. She then resigned, and the California Trust & Savings Bank of Sacramento was thereupon appointed, and continued to act as such administrator. The defendant is the son of Henrietta Myers, and acted as field manager of the ranch under the supervision of the administrator of the estate. In 1924, an account was opened in the California National Bank of Sacramento, which account was entitled "L. J. Myers, Special." In 1925, after the bank became the administrator of the estate, another account was opened in the name of "L. W. Myers, Deceased; Ranch Account, L. J. Myers." These special accounts were maintained "for running the ranch." They were for the benefit of the entire ranch, including the proceeds from camp 1 of the home place. Mr. Roy Blair, an officer representing the administrator, California Trust & Savings Bank, testified that the funds of these special accounts "were the property of the estate," and that L. J. Myers was authorized to draw upon these funds for the payment of claims against the farm account, but that the administrator reserved the right to approve or reject such claims.

Pursuant to the terms of the lease, the plaintiff farmed that portion of the ranch known as "camp 1," and delivered to the agent of the estate, at the river landing, all fruit and vegetables which were produced thereon. The record is silent as to the disposition of these crops, but it may be assumed they were sold by the estate, and the proceeds deposited in these special funds, together with the proceeds from the sale of products from other portions of the estate ranch. In the fall of 1924 a written statement, purporting to itemize the receipts and disbursements incident to the farming and marketing of crops from the ranch, was made out by the defendant and handed to the plaintiff. This statement contained a charge of $481.90, which was represented by the defendant to have been necessarily expended by the estate to release it from a contract requiring the delivery of this fruit to a marketing association. Based upon this statement, a check for $2,170.88 was drawn by the defendant against this special farm fund and delivered to the plaintiff as payment in full for his share of the crops of 1924. A similar transaction occurred with respect to the division of the proceeds of the sale of the crops of 1925. It is now claimed by the appellant that he was deceived and defrauded by the false entry of the alleged payment to release the estate from its obligation to deliver the crops to the marketing association, and that the respondent holds the sums represented by these items in trust for him as money had and received for his benefit.

[1] It will be observed that this is a simple action in assumpsit for money had and received. The action is not based upon fraud or tort. Neither the estate nor its representative is a party to the action. It was instituted against L. J. Myers in his individual capacity, and the sole question is whether he individually holds this money in trust for the appellant. An action in assumpsit for money had and received will lie against one who has been intrusted with a specific sum of money, or with property which has been converted into money or its equivalent, and which in good conscience should be returned to the owner. 19 Standard Ency. of Proc. 842, A; 2 R. C. L. 778, § 34; Biurrun v. Elizalde, 75 Cal. App. 44, 242 P. 109; In re Interborough Consol. Corp. (C. C. A.) 288 F. 334, 347 (32 A. L. R. 932). In the last-cited authority it is said: "Every person who receives money to be paid to another, or to be applied to a particular purpose, to which he does not apply it, is a trustee, and may be sued either at law for money had and received, or in equity as a trustee, for a breach of trust."

[2, 3] In the present case, however, neither the farm produce nor the money secured by means of its sale was intrusted to the respondent individually. Upon the contrary, the produce was delivered to the agent of the estate of Myers to be sold. Sometimes the respondent received delivery of the produce as that agent, and sometimes he did not. The respondent was a mere agent for the administrator of the estate, acting in the capacity of a farm manager, and handling the special farm fund subject to the approval of the administrator. There is no evidence that this farm fund was intrusted to the respondent, with directions to pay any specific sum to the appellant. In the handling of this farm fund the respondent was constituted a trustee for the benefit of the estate. His authority was limited to the payment of claims which were subject to the approval of the administrator. The evidence discloses no relationship of trustor and trustee between the appellant and the respondent. There was no privity of contract between them as individuals, or otherwise. This farm fund included the receipts from the sale of produce from the entire farm. The proportion of the net receipts to which the appellant was entitled depended upon an accounting between him and the estate. If an erroneous statement of expenditures resulted in the payment to him of less than the appellant was entitled to, the respondent did not profit by that error. The balance still remains in the fund belonging to the estate. If a controversy exists between the appellant and the estate as to whether their account should be charged with a sum alleged to have been necessarily expended to release the estate from its contract to deliver all fruit to a marketing association, then the estate should have a right to be heard regarding this matter. Under the circumstances of the present case it may not be said that the respondent, individually had or received any specific sum of money for the appellant, or that the respondent would be personally liable in assumpsit. 17 Cal. Jur. 606, § 4; Minor v. Baldridge, 123 Cal. 187, 55 P. 783; Whittier v. Home Sav. Bank, 161 Cal. 311, 119 P. 92; Miller v. Murphy, 78 Cal. App. 751, 757, 248 P. 934; Wells v. Collins, 74 Wis. 341, 43 N. W. 160, 5 L. R. A. 531; 21 R. C. L. 852, § 31.

[4] An agent is responsible to a third person for his wrongful acts. Civ. Code, § 2343, subd. 3. Ordinarily the remedy for such wrongful acts of an agent is by means of an action for damages for the tort. 2 C. J. 812, §§ 486, 498; Minor v. Baldridge, supra. A principal is also responsible for the wrongful acts of his agent which were performed in the course of his employment, as well as for the agent's willful omission to perform that duty. Civ. Code, § 2338; 21 R. C. L. 848, §§ 28, 30. In the present case, however, the principal was not made a party to the action. It does not appear from the record that the respondent profited by his alleged fraudulent statement. He makes no claim to any portion of the special farm fund. It does not appear that he withdrew the money which is claimed by the appellant. It must therefore be assumed that this sum still remains in the special farm fund, which the evidence indicates is the property of the Myers estate.

YOUNG et ux. v. BURCHILL et al.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 19, 1929.

1. Estoppel 🔑92(2)—Payee's acceptance without objection of delayed payments was not estoppel of right to exercise accelerated maturity clause of notes.

Payee's acceptance without objection of delayed payments held not to have constituted a waiver and estoppel of right to have exercised accelerated maturity clause of notes, since the refusal without notice to continue to accept such delayed payments did not constitute fraud.

2. Mortgages 🔑335—Agreement that default in payments should create option to insist on payment of whole debt is not "forfeiture."

Agreement that default in payments should leave it optional with creditor to insist on payment of the whole debt does not constitute a "forfeiture," in that there is nothing to forfeit or any penalty to be imposed.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Forfeit; Forfeiture.]

3. Mortgages 🔑338—Equity cannot relieve one from breach of agreement authorizing creditor in case of default to insist on payment of whole debt.

As respects right to injunction against sale under trust deed, a court of equity has no power to relieve one from the breach of a valid agreement providing that in case of default in payments creditor has option to insist on payment of whole debt unless fraud or improper conduct is proved; the election of such a right not in itself constituting fraud, deceit, or oppression.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by Leland T. Young and wife against W. H. Burchill and others. Decree for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed, and restraining order theretofore granted dissolved.

J. W. Bingaman and Ralph W. Arnot, both of Oakland, for appellants.

F. H. Arb, of Hayward, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. Appeal from a decree refusing to enjoin the sale of certain real property under a deed of trust. There is no dispute as to the facts. Plaintiffs and appellants were the owners of the real property here involved. On November 28, 1925, they executed to defendants Burchill and wife two promissory notes, one for the sum of $4,000 and the other for $500. Both notes carried interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum. The $4,000 note was, by its terms, payable in monthly installments of $45 commencing on December 28, 1925, and the $500 note was payable in the sum of $50 per month commencing on the 10th day of December, 1925. Each of said notes was in the usual installment form providing that payment first be applied to accrued interest and the balance to principal. Concurrently with the execution of said notes and to secure their payment, the plaintiffs executed a deed of trust of their real property to defendants Parsons and Haley, as trustees. Thereafter they commenced payments on the notes; the first being made on December 28, 1926, and the last on June 14th following. Each of the installments paid by plaintiffs was made subsequent to the due date and at periods varying from 6 to 16 days after they were due. Defendants accepted each of the delayed payments without any objection, and they never notified the plaintiffs that the payments would thereafter have to be made on the due dates. On July 1, 1926, 16 days after plaintiffs had made their last payment to defendants, the latter filed with the county recorder their notice of breach and election to sell under the provisions of section 2924 of the Civil Code as provided for under the deed of trust. This act was done without any notice to the plaintiffs and without any prior demand or notice to them that the defendants would require the installments to be paid on the due date. On the same day, however, defendants' attorney notified plaintiffs that defendants had declared a default and had elected to declare the full amount of the indebtedness due. The Bank of Hayward had been collecting from plaintiffs the payments they made upon the notes; the trustees being officers of that institution. On the day following the receipt of the notice referred to, plaintiffs visited the bank and offered to make certain payments, but they were informed that the notes had been withdrawn and further payments were refused. Thereafter, and shortly after the expiration of the notice of default and election, and when defendants were threatening to sell plaintiffs' property under the deed of trust, plaintiffs instituted this proceeding praying for an injunction to enjoin said sale. The trial court found that plaintiffs were not entitled to the relief sought or to any relief whatsoever. A temporary injunction, however, was granted, and the same has been in force pending the hearing of this appeal.

[1, 2] The main contention of appellants is that the action of defendants in accepting without objection the delayed payments constituted a waiver and an estoppel of their right to exercise the accelerated maturity clause of the notes, and that their refusal to accept any installments after so declaring said notes accelerated, excused plaintiffs from making any further payments. They also contend that the sale under a deed of trust amounts to a forfeiture, and the mere fact that it is brought about by accelerating a maturity clause of a note does not change it in fact from being a forfeiture, and that the rule announced in such cases as Boone v. Templeman, 158 Cal. 290, 110 P. 947, 139 Am. St. Rep. 126, and Myers v. Williams, 173 Cal. 301, 159 P. 982, apply. While the principle declared in the cases relied upon may properly be applied to vendor and purchaser contracts involving and authorizing forfeitures for breach of covenants as to time payments, it has no application to a case of the character here involved. Jump v. Barr, 46 Cal. App. 338, 189 P. 334. A provision for such accelerated maturity is not in the nature of a penalty or forfeiture, but simply an agreement as to the time when a debt shall become due and enforceable according to its terms, and is valid. Dunn v. Barry, 35 Cal. App. 325, 169 P. 910. Nothing contained in the contract is contrary to equity or good conscience. Parties may lawfully contract that interest as such shall be payable at stated periods of time, or stipulate that a default in payments shall leave it optional with the creditor to insist upon payment of the whole debt. Such an agreement contains no element of a forfeiture, for there is nothing to forfeit, or any penalty to be imposed. Nor does it fall within the application of any principle of equity for which relief against a forfeiture is sometimes extended. Whitcher v. Webb, 44 Cal. 127; Clemens v. Luce, 101 Cal. 432, 35 P. 1032. Here the defendant is claiming nothing by way of forfeiture that has been paid; he is simply exercising his right under a contract to decline to further extend his loan, for the reason that plaintiffs have failed to promptly comply with their agreement relating to the payment of interest. This he certainly has the right to do. The situation is entirely different from an agreement of sale wherein, upon failure of payment of an installment, the vendor is attempting to retain payments made and also the property itself, the subject of the sale. While it is the province of a court of equity to see to it that a party invoking its aid shall have dealt fairly before relief is given, there is nothing objectionable in a contract which provides in case of failure to make punctual payments of installments of principal and interest, the payment of the entire amount due shall be accelerated. Refusal without notice to continue to accept delayed payments does not constitute fraud, nor does it create an estoppel or waiver.

[3] The rule is well established that the acceptance of a payment of interest after default does not have this effect. 1 Wiltsie on Mortgage Foreclosure (4th Ed.) § 65. A court of equity has no power to relieve one from a breach of this valid agreement unless fraud or improper conduct is proved. 2 Jones on Mortgages (2d Ed.) § 185. As above stated, the election of such a right does not constitute fraud, deceit or oppression. The case of McCue v. Bradbury, 149 Cal. 108, 84 P. 993, cited by appellants as upholding a contrary doctrine, is not in point. In that case deceit and fraud were involved. Nor is there any merit in the further claim that the belated tender relieved plaintiffs from their default. After defendants had exercised their election to consider the whole amount due in conformity with the terms of the trust agreement, it was too late for plaintiffs to perform without the consent of defendants. The right of election accrued to defendants upon the default of plaintiffs, and there is no element in the case which would justify a court, upon the theory of waiver or estoppel, to deny defendants the right to rely and enforce the express terms of the agreement with reference to payments. Wiltsie on Mortgage Foreclosure (4th Ed.) § 59 et seq.

The judgment is affirmed, and the restraining order dissolved.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank C. Collier, Judge.

Action by the Los Angeles Land & Water Company, a corporation, against Mrs. Lewis Kane, Homer A. Hansen, and another, in which defendant Hansen filed a cross-complaint against codefendants. From a judgment for plaintiff and cross-complainant, cross-defendants appeal. Affirmed.

L. E. Dadmun, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Anderson & Anderson, of Los Angeles, for respondent Water Company.

Clyde Moody, of San Fernando, for respondent Hansen.

CRAIL, Justice pro tem. The plaintiff owned a tract of land containing about 2,700 acres, located in the San Fernando Valley, which for several years has been within the city limits of Los Angeles and which is subdivided into five-acre lots with streets running through it. The land is composed of the detritus washed down from the mountains, and is covered with a thin layer of soil, except that portion within the two washes or beds of the Big Tejunga creek. The plaintiff sold lot 2 of block 22 thereof to Homer A. Hansen by a deed which contained the following conditions: "Subject to the condition subsequent that no part of said property shall be used for the manufacture or sale of crushed rock, gravel or sand prior to January 31, 1934." All other sales in the tract were made subject to the same condition. On May 7, 1924, about 75 dwellings had been erected upon those lots. On that date the said Hansen executed a contract of sale of said lot to the defendant Mrs. Kane, subject to the same condition. She in her turn leased the lot to other defendants, who, with full knowledge of said conditions, began the construction of a rock-crushing plant upon said property in spite of a notice to all defendants calling their attention to said condition and that their rights in the lot would be forfeited. The plant was finished and operations begun when plaintiff brought this action, asking for the recovery of the property and an injunction. Hansen on his part filed a cross-complaint against the other defendants, asking the same relief. Answers were filed and a trial had, and thereafter a judgment was entered as prayed in favor of the plaintiff and also in favor of Hansen against the appellants. It is from this judgment that the appeal is taken; and appellants raise three points for reversal.

[1, 2] It is first contended that the condition is in restraint of trade and therefore void. Appellants claim that any contract which forbids or prevents the manufacturing of crushed rock is in restraint of trade in that particular line of business and void. It will be noticed that the restriction is against the use of the property. There is nothing to prevent the removal of the rock, gravel, or sand from the lot and doing with it whatever one chooses. It is the settled law of California that a condition subsequent prohibiting the carrying on of a particular business upon property conveyed is valid and will be upheld where the question of monopoly is not involved or the purpose of the condition is not unlawful, and possibly other exceptions which do not exist here. Southern Pacific R. Co. v. Blaisdell, 33 Cal. App. 239, 164 P. 804; Los Angeles Investment Co. v. Gary, 181 Cal. 680, 186 P. 596, 9 A. L. R. 115; 9 Cal. Jur. 356. With regard to the creation of a monopoly by the condition, that is a question of fact to be determined by the trial court, and the court found facts which preclude the possibility of a monopoly arising out of the condition. The evidence not alone sustains the trial court. We are inclined to say it could not have found otherwise.

[3] It is next contended that the plaintiff waived the condition by operating two rock crushers on the tract. The question of waiver is again a question of fact. The crushers were three-quarters of a mile and two miles distant from appellants' lot, were on the stone lands or reserved lands, and were in full operation when Hansen contracted to sell the lot to Mrs. Kane. There is no merit in this contention. In any event, neither this nor the preceding contention has any bearing upon the judgment of Homer A. Hansen.

[4] Lastly, it is contended that the condition is repugnant to the estate granted, and therefore void. In this regard appellants claim that "the condition not only attempts to prevent the manufacturing of crushed rock, gravel and sand, but prevents the grantee from selling from said land any rock, gravel or sand." As heretofore stated, there is no prohibition against the removal of rock, sand, or gravel from the premises or selling the same when removed. The prohibition is against the use of the property itself for the purposes of sale or manufacture. Again, in this case the violation of the condition, which was found by the trial court and which is admitted by appellants, is the operation of a rock-crushing plant for the purpose of manufacture and sale of the product. There are two conditions, one against the use of the property for the manufacture of, and one against the use of the property for the sale of, crushed rock, sand, and gravel. The prohibition against the use for sale might be rejected as void, yet the prohibition against the use for manufacture would remain in full force and effect. Appellants do not claim that the latter condition is repugnant to the estate granted.

There is no merit in the appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

In action to recover on assigned claims against corporation, fact that, during all of times that plaintiff's assignor was making advancements to corporation, said assignor owned all of corporation's stock, held not to authorize disregarding fact that corporation was a separate entity from assignor, in absence of evidence showing fraud or injustice.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by George J. Kniese against the Fairfax Incline Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 274 P. 383.

Martin Stevens, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Wm. T. Eckhoff, of San Francisco, and Geo. H. Harlan, of San Rafael, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant to recover a money judgment on certain assigned claims. The defendant appeared and answered, and a trial was had before the court sitting without a jury. The court made findings in favor of the plaintiff on his fourth count, and from a judgment entered thereon the defendant has appealed, and has brought up a bill of exceptions.

There are few disputed facts, but the most of the facts were developed on the trial by the testimony of G. C. F. Seidel, plaintiff's assignor. The defendant is a corporation having 10,000 shares of capital stock, all of which was, at the times mentioned in the pleadings, owned by G. C. F. Seidel. The corporation owns and operates a railroad about 1,400 feet long, running up the side of the mountain at Fairfax, in Marin county. The company has a full corporate organization. As a railroad corporation, reports, applications, etc., were duly made from time to time by it to the Railroad Commission. A formal set of corporate books was kept. On or about August 15, 1921, G. C. F. Seidel bought the corporate stock and took over the management. He was elected president, treasurer, and general manager. In addition to filling those offices, he did the manual work, made purchases, paid out moneys, and duly entered in the books a correct statement of his transactions, and, in the reports of the corporation, truly summarized those entries. He so continued to conduct the defendant's affairs until August 16, 1923. As of that date, as shown by the books, there was owing to G. C. F. Seidel $1,074.95. The court so found. There was apparently a full and complete record sustaining the finding; but we will pass now to the points made by the defendant.

The first four points presented by the defendant are but different methods of presenting one question of law. The defendant calls attention to those parts of the record which show beyond dispute that during all of the times that G. C. F. Seidel, plaintiff's assignor, was making advancements, said Seidel owned all of the corporate stock, and that therefore the corporation was but the corporate double of Seidel. Thereupon defendant further contends that the indebtedness sued upon was Seidel's debt; that, when he paid a debt, the debt was paid as against him, as well as against the corporation; and that the same person may not be both obligor and obligee. In this connection the defendant says a great deal about Rivers Bros. These statements are nearly all of them outside of the record. There is nothing in the record showing that any fraud or injustice has been worked as against Rivers Bros., or against any other person. In the absence of additional facts, the proof introduced would not warrant us in disregarding the fact that the corporation is a separate entity from G. C. F. Seidel. Erkenbrecher v. Grant, 187 Cal. 7, 11, 200 P. 641.

In making its award the court estimated the wages of G. C. F. Seidel at $200 per month. The defendant claims the estimate was too high. There was evidence to support it.

★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

Finally, it is claimed that G. C. F. Seidel admits that he received $4,037.13, and should have been charged that, instead of $3,125.05. Defendant is mistaken. He admitted that the corporation received $4,037.13, but he claimed that he received only $3,125.05, and the balance was used to pay corporate debts.

Summarizing what we have stated above, it is, we think, quite clear that, if G. C. F. Seidel was the bona fide owner of 75 per cent. of the capital stock of the defendant, and John Doe was the bona fide owner of 25 per cent. of the capital stock of the defendant, and, except with the change indicated, each and every other fact contained in the record was proved, just as stated above, then and in that event we do not believe it would be debatable but what the plaintiff should have been given the judgment which was given him. The mere fact that he owned all of the stock, standing alone, and not supported by any other fact or facts showing fraud or injustice, would not support a ruling reversing the judgment.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by George J. Kniese against the Fairfax Incline Railroad Company. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Wm. T. Eckhoff, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Martin Stevens, of San Francisco, and Geo. H. Harlan, of San Rafael, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from the judgment under consideration in the case entitled Kniese v. Fairfax Incline Railroad Co. (No. 6406) 274 P. 382, this day decided. The plaintiff has brought up a bill of exceptions which is more full and complete than the bill in the other case.

[1, 2] The stock in the defendant corporation was formerly owned by Rivers Bros., a corporation. While so owned, the railroad was operated at a loss. While the stock was owned by plaintiff's assignor, the road was also operated at a loss. During the period while the stock was owned by Rivers Bros., and during the period while it was owned by plaintiff's assignor, the deficits were paid by the respective owners of the stock, and the amounts so paid were carried on the books of the defendant as deficits, and were so reported to the Railroad Commission. The plaintiff's entire claim included the total of all deficits; that is, $2,405.63 while Rivers Bros. owned the stock, and $1,774.95 while plaintiff's assignor owned the stock. The last item was the subject-matter of the case above mentioned. The first item is the subject-matter of this case. In claiming to be reimbursed on that item, the plaintiff alleged that, at the time Rivers Bros. sold the stock in the defendant railroad, it assigned to G. C. F. Seidel its claim against the railroad of the advancements so made. The defendant denied that allegation. The trial court made a finding in favor of the plaintiff on the issue so framed. However, it did not stop at that point. It also made a finding that, at the time Rivers Bros. made the alleged advancements, it was the sole stockholder of the defendant, personally and primarily liable, and that it made such advancements in payment of its stockholder liability, and that at the time of its alleged assignment to the plaintiff's assignor Rivers Bros. had no claim to assign, and that plaintiff's assignor took nothing by the purported assignment.

As to this last finding the plaintiff asserts that it is wholly outside of the issues, it should be disregarded, and the trial court should be directed by this court to enter judgment on the other findings in favor of the plaintiff. It is true the finding is wholly outside of the issues, nugatory, and that the judgment must be reversed. However, we are not inclined to direct a judgment in favor of the plaintiff. The sale by Rivers Bros. to plaintiff's assignor was evidenced by a written instrument, which was signed by the vendor and vendee. It states what things were being sold, and what was being paid therefor. As to the things being sold, that paper describes them as including "the Fairfax Incline Railroad and the piece of land known as the 'Park' at the head of the Incline Railroad. * * *" No mention is made of any other property. Until that instrument had been reformed, and in the absence of fraud or mistake, there could not legally be any evidence as to the things sold except that paper. Code Civ. Proc. § 1856; Harrison v. McCormick, 89 Cal. 327, 330, 26 P. 830, 23 Am. St. Rep. 469. Under this state of the record it would seem that the trial court never had these facts in mind when it made the finding that Rivers Bros. assigned to G. C. F. Seidel any claim against the defendant for advancements made by Rivers Bros.

The judgment is reversed.

McKENZIE v. LOS ANGELES LIFE INS. CO. et al. (Civ. 3592.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 22, 1929.

1. Insurance 🔑618—As respects venue, original insurer, joined with its assignee, but not served, was not released, though complaint referred to single defendant (Code Civ. Proc. § 17; Civ. Code, § 14).

As respects right to change of place of trial, insurance company which assigned its assets and liabilities, and which was joined as defendant in action on accident policy together with its assignee, remained liable under the policy, and could be made to answer the demands of plaintiff's complaint, though it was not served with summons and did not appear, and complaint used singular number of "defendant"; singular including the plural under Code Civ. Proc. § 17, and Civ. Code, § 14.

2. Insurance 🔑618—Venue, as against original insurer, of insured's suit on accident policy, is in county where accident occurred (Const. art. 12, § 16).

Cause of action of insured under accident policy, as against original insurer, arises in county where injury occurred, and trial should take place there under Const. art. 12, § 16.

3. Insurance 🔑618—Venue of action on accident policy against defendant assuming liabilities of original insurer held properly laid in county of accident, though defendant entered into contract for assumption of liabilities in another county (Const. art. 12, § 16).

Venue of action by insured on accident policy against successor of original insurance company held properly laid in county where accident took place, though defendant had its principal place of business and entered into contract for assumption of liabilities in another county, and though original insurance company, joined in complaint, was not served with summons and did not appear, since defendant by its contract became obligated to perform insurance contracts at place where under the law its assignor was bound to render performance under Const. art. 12, § 16.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by James H. McKenzie against the Los Angeles Life Insurance Company and the People's Mutual Life Insurance Company. From an order denying a motion for change of venue, defendant last named appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 263 P. 338.

A. B. Weiler, of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. J. Henderson and W. A. Green, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. This cause is before us upon an appeal by the People's Mutual Life Insurance Company, a corporation, from an order made and entered in the trial court denying said defendant's motion for a change of venue.

On the 28th day of September, 1927, the plaintiff filed an amended complaint in this cause, from which it appears that the corporation known as the Mutual Indemnity Accident, Health & Life Insurance Company of California, and having its principal place of business at Los Angeles, Cal., was regularly incorporated on the 20th day of February, 1924; that thereafter, and on or about the 15th day of December, 1926, the name of said corporation was changed to that of Los Angeles Life Insurance Company; that on or about the 25th day of May, 1926, said corporation, while doing business under the name of Mutual Indemnity Accident, Health & Life Insurance Company of California, for a valuable consideration, issued to the defendant a policy of insurance, a copy of which is attached to the complaint, whereby it agreed to pay the plaintiff certain sums in the event of any injury occurring to the plaintiff, as provided and set forth in said policy of insurance, and thereby insuring the plaintiff against any injury that should be received from external, violent, or accidental means; that after the issuance of said policy, and on the 4th day of August, 1926, the plaintiff, while engaged in his work in the county of Sacramento, as a plasterer, was injured by reason of a scaffolding, upon which he was standing, slipping from under him and precipitating him to a sidewalk below, resulting in the fracture of the bones of the plaintiff's left foot, and also spraining the plaintiff's left ankle, etc.; that, at the time of the plaintiff's receiving the injuries above stated, the insurance policy referred to was in full force and effect, and the said Mutual Indemnity

Accident, Health & Life Insurance Company of California became charged with the duty of paying to the plaintiff the sums of money specified as indemnity in the policy of insurance issued by it to the plaintiff. It further appears that on or about the 31st day of May, 1927, the People's Mutual Life Insurance Company, a corporation, duly organized and existing under the laws of the state of California, and having its principal place of business in the city of San Francisco, duly authorized to transact an insurance business, assumed all the insurance contracts entered into by the said Mutual Indemnity Accident, Health & Life Insurance Company of California, and agreed to discharge all outstanding insurance contracts and liabilities incurred by the said Mutual Indemnity Accident, Health & Life Insurance Company of California, including, among said contracts of insurance so assumed, the liability of said Mutual Indemnity Accident, Health & Life Insurance Company of California, by reason of its policy theretofore issued to the plaintiff herein, as heretofore stated. It further appears from the allegations of the complaint that there became due and payable to the plaintiff under the terms of said policy of insurance the sum of $1,380, of which sum there has been paid $440, leaving a balance due in the sum of $940. It is for the purpose of obtaining payment of this latter sum that this action is prosecuted.

On the 22d day of October, 1927, the defendant and appellant, People's Mutual Life Insurance Company, filed a demurrer and its motion in said action, supported by an affidavit of merits, asking a change of place of trial of this cause from the county of Sacramento to the county of San Francisco, alleging as a reason therefor that San Francisco was the principal place of business of said defendant, and that the contract between the Los Angeles Life Insurance Company (formerly known as the Mutual Indemnity Accident, Health & Life Insurance Company of California) and the People's Mutual Life Insurance Company, whereby the latter company took over and assumed all liabilities theretofore incurred and then existing on the part of the said Los Angeles Life Insurance Company, was entered into in the city and county of San Francisco. This appeal is from the order of the trial court denying this motion for a change of place of trial.

The sole reliance of the appellant is upon the fact that the contract, by which it assumed the liabilities of the Los Angeles Life Insurance Company and agreed to pay all claims against the Los Angeles Company, was made in the city of San Francisco, and that, while such contract was made for and would inure to the benefit of third persons, it was only to be performed at the city of San Francisco.

[1] While the record shows that at the time the defendant People's Mutual Life Insurance Company, a corporation, appeared in this cause and made its motion for a change of place of trial from the county of Sacramento to the city and county of San Francisco, the defendant Los Angeles Life Insurance Company (formerly known as the Mutual Indemnity Accident, Health & Life Insurance Company of California) had not made any appearance, the complaint in the action does name said Los Angeles Life Insurance Company as well as the People's Mutual Life Insurance Company, as a defendant, and, while the complaint uses the singular term of "defendant," in paragraph VII thereof, and also in the prayer of the complaint, the allegations of the complaint include the Los Angeles Life Insurance Company (formerly known as the Mutual Indemnity Accident, Health & Life Insurance Company of California) as well as the appellant, and states a cause of action against said Los Angeles company. Under section 17 of the Code of Civil Procedure and section 14 of the Civil Code the singular term includes the plural, and, there being nothing in the complaint or in the record indicating that the plaintiff had ever consented to release the Los Angeles Life Insurance Company (formerly known as the Mutual Indemnity Accident, Health & Life Insurance Company of California) from its obligations under the policy of insurance issued to the plaintiff, that company, so far as the record shows, is still liable upon said policy, and may be made to answer to the demands of the plaintiff's complaint.

[2, 3] It is well settled that under the terms of section 16 of article 12 of the Constitution, when the accident occurred resulting in injury to the plaintiff, a cause of action arose in favor of the plaintiff against the Los Angeles Life Insurance Company, etc., and that the place of trial of said cause of action was and is at the place where the plaintiff suffered the injury, to wit, the county of Sacramento. This is definitely settled by the case of Robinson v. Order of Railway Employees, 53 Cal. App. 404, 200 P. 87. This cause of action then existed, and so far as the record shows still exists against the Los Angeles Life Insurance Company. There is nothing in the record which shows that the service of summons upon the Los Angeles Life Insurance Company was not contemplated, or that said Los Angeles Life Insurance Company (formerly known as the Mutual Indemnity Accident, Health & Life Insurance Company of California) was not made a defendant in good faith. That said company had not been served with summons and had not appeared in this action at the time the appellant filed its motion for a change of place of trial is wholly immaterial. A cause of action was set forth in the complaint which under the Constitution, and as shown by the case to which we have referred, was a cause of action against the Los Angeles Life Insurance Company, etc., triable in the county of Sacramento. This, of course, would preclude the right of the appellant to have the cause of action transferred to the county of San Francisco for trial, if the right so to do otherwise existed. However, the right of action, as shown by the pleadings, against the Los Angeles Life Insurance Company, was fixed when the defendant People's Mutual Life Insurance Company assumed to discharge its obligations. When it took over the business or policies issued by the Los Angeles Life Insurance Company, the People's Mutual Life Insurance Company became obligated to perform all and singular the acts covenanted and agreed to be performed by its assignor, and in so doing we think that it covenanted and agreed to perform those obligations so far as third parties are and were concerned, at the place where, under the law, its assignor was bound and obligated to render performance. In other words, by the contract of insurance assigned by the Los Angeles Life Insurance Company, etc., to the People's Mutual Life Insurance Company, and the liabilities thereunder assumed by the People's Mutual Life Insurance Company, the appellant became immediately charged with the duty of rendering performance, at the same place, with which its assignor, the Los Angeles Life Insurance Company, etc., stood charged and obligated.

For the reasons set forth therein, we conclude that the appellant herein was not entitled to a change of place of trial.

The order of the superior court is therefore affirmed.

I concur: FINCH, P. J.

HAMMOND LUMBER CO. v. HAW.★

1. Boundaries 🔑55—Obliteration of survey monument does not justify adoption of proportionate method of locating lost corner, where field notes refer to discoverable natural objects.

Obliteration of monument made in survey does not destroy survey, nor justify court in disregarding it or adopting proportionate method of locating common lost corner, where field notes refer to natural objects, which can be found along line mentioned, so as to locate place occupied by monument approximately.

2. Boundaries 🔑55—Evidence held sufficient to permit approximate location of quarter corners established under original survey, so as to justify rejection of proportionate method.

In action to determine location of boundary line between parties' timber lands, evidence held sufficient to permit approximate location of quarter corners, established under original survey, on the ground, so as to justify court in rejecting proportionate method of locating them, notwithstanding discrepancies between certain distances given in field notes and found by court.

3. Boundaries 🔑3(3)—Distances in field notes give way to natural objects noted and found on ground at approximately such distances.

Distances as recorded in surveyor's field notes must give way to natural objects, noted and found on the ground at approximately the distances given in such notes, in determining boundary.

4. Trial 🔑398—Contention that findings that plaintiff's allegations were untrue and that he owned lands described in complaint were inconsistent, held without merit, in view of answer.

Where defendant denied claiming interest in lands as complaint alleged, and court found that all allegations in answer were true, plaintiff's contention that findings that his allegations were not true and that he owned lands described were inconsistent and failed to give him relief prayed was without merit; defendant being entitled to finding that all allegations of complaint were untrue.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; George D. Murray, Judge.

Action by the Hammond Lumber Company against W. H. Haw. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Nelson & Ricks, of Eureka, for appellant.
Puter & Quinn, of Eureka, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. This action, while one in form for trespass and to quiet title to land, has for its object the determination of the location of the proper boundary line between certain timber lands owned by plaintiff and defendant. All the lands are situated in township 2 south, range 3 east, Humboldt base and meridian. The complaint contains two causes of action. The first alleges the ownership in plaintiff of the south half of the northeast quarter of section 10, township 2 south, range 3 east, H. M., and it recites that said land had growing thereon a large number of redwood trees. It then charges that defendant, with full knowledge of plaintiff's ownership, willfully chopped down, removed and carried away some sixty of the said trees, which were of the value of $1,203.51, and that defendant by such willful trespass became liable for treble damages under section 733, Code of Civil Procedure. The second cause of action alleges defendant claims an interest in the lands above described adverse to plaintiff, which claim is without right, and it is prayed plaintiff's title be quieted as against defendant. In his answer to the first cause of action, defendant denied that he entered upon the lands described in plaintiff's complaint at any time, and he likewise denied that he chopped down or removed any of the redwood trees growing thereon. He admitted title in plaintiff to the land described in the complaint, but denied that he claimed any interest therein adverse to the plaintiff. He further alleged ownership in himself of contiguous lands described as the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 10, and recited that all of the trees cut or chopped down by him were standing and growing within the boundaries thereof. Defendant prayed that plaintiff take nothing by his action.

The land of defendant adjoins the land of plaintiff for the distance of a quarter of a mile. The common boundary line between the two tracts is a line which runs theoretically east and west through the center of section 10. The difference between the contention of the parties is due to the fact that they do not locate the common boundary in the same position on the ground. It was plaintiff's contention at the trial that no known or recognizable monuments as established in the original government survey could be found which fixed the exterior boundaries of section 10 or which determined the location of any corners to said section or the quarter corners on the east, south, and west lines thereof, as the same had disappeared and could not be found, nor could the same be ascertained or determined from any calls contained in the original government notes, either as to courses or distances. Accordingly, and in order to prove its case, plaintiff introduced evidence to show that he employed a surveyor, one Lentell, who made a survey upon which plaintiff relied. This witness testified that according to his survey he could find no known, fixed, or recognizable monuments as established in the original government survey nor could he determine the location of the corners to said section or the quarter corners on the east, south and west lines thereof from any calls contained in the original government notes, either as to courses or distances and that in consequence he adopted the proportionate measurement method in establishing the exterior boundaries of section 10, and likewise determined the line running east and west through the center of said section which would be the common boundary line to the lands of the parties hereto. In addition to following the proportionate measurement method, plaintiff attacked, upon various grounds, the sufficiency of a certain survey relied upon by defendant to establish the disputed lines and corners. It was and is defendant's claim that there were sufficient marks and objects upon the ground corresponding to those referred to in the government field notes to establish the lost lines and corners, and, this being so, the rule of establishing lost corners by proportionate method does not apply. Defendant introduced various witnesses to prove the existence of the boundary lines by natural objects, marks on trees, and topography described in the field notes of the government survey.

The trial court found, upon the first cause of action, that the location on the ground of the common boundary line was established by the evidence produced by defendant, the finding in this connection being that the common boundary line upon the ground between the said south half of the northeast quarter of said section 10 and the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter of said section is the east and west subdivisional line running through the center of said section and particularly described as follows: "Beginning at the quarter section corner on the East line of said Section 10, which said quarter section corner is now marked by an iron pipe driven in the ground on the west edge of the County Road on the East line of said section Ten, and from which iron pipe there is a pine stump 24 inches in diameter south 61½ degrees East 62 links; thence from said quarter section corner running West to the quarter section corner on the West line of said Section Ten, which said quarter section corner is designated by an old growth pine tree about two feet in diameter which stands on the east slope of the ridge, and has a block chopped out on the west side of the tree exposing a flat face upon which the mark ¼ is carved upon the wood."

It is appellant's contention that the finding locating the quarter corner on the east line of section 10 evidenced by an iron pipe, and generally referred to in the evidence as the "Hubbard Corner," and the location of the quarter corner on the west line of said section 10, evidenced by a "¼" mark cut on a fir tree and generally referred to as the "Pine Tree" quarter corner, is not supported by the evidence as the location by the trial court of the same upon the ground does not accord with any of the calls in the original government field notes either as to distances or topography, and that the same were not established as required by law; that the true boundary line, as established by the preponderance of the evidence, is that found and established by plaintiff's surveyor, J. N. Lentell, under the proportionate measurement method.

[1] The law is well established that the obliteration of a monument made in a survey does not destroy such survey nor justify a court in disregarding it, where enough data remain to locate the place occupied by the monument by reference to the natural objects referred to in the survey. Nor does such obliteration justify the adoption of the proportionate method of locating a common corner as a lost corner, where the field notes refer to certain natural objects which can be found along the line mentioned so as to approximately locate it. Weaver v. Howatt, 171 Cal. 302, 152 P. 925.

[2, 3] We are of the opinion that there is abundant evidence in the record from which the location on the ground of the quarter corners as established under the original survey could be approximately identified, and that the trial court was therefore justified in rejecting the proportionate method of locating such corners. Nor do we think the evidence is impaired, as claimed by appellant, because of any discrepancies between certain distances given in the field notes and the distances found by the court. Distances, as recorded in the field notes must give way to natural objects noted and found upon the ground at approximately the distance given in the notes. Weaver v. Howatt, supra. As hereinabove stated, the evidence relied upon by the trial court, as a whole, sustains the location on the ground of the common boundary line and fully supports the finding of the trial court upon the subject. Defendant produced as witnesses several licensed surveyors who for many years were familiar with the location and who had surveyed the lands in question. The testimony of these witnesses shows that they experienced no difficulty in ascertaining the lines of section 10 or the corners or quarter corners thereof as established by the original survey. They testified that the section lines and certain corners as thus established were well marked by blazes on trees which conformed to the field notes. One of these witnesses, John Haugh, was employed by the government on the original survey made in 1874. He testified that when so employed he surveyed the identical land, ran the section lines thereof, and wrote up the field notes. He further testified as to the proper location on the ground of one of the section corners. In going over the section lines shortly before the trial, he recognized the markings of the original survey, some of which he testified were made by himself. He also found one of the old stakes on the south line of the section. In addition to the markings on the trees, he recognized the topography of the land described in the field notes. Other witnesses, including defendant, who had resided in the immediate vicinity for many years, testified as to the proper location of certain corners of the section. In the face of this and other evidence supporting the finding of the trial court, we have no power to disturb the finding.

[4] The further contention is made that, as to the second cause of action, the findings are inconsistent and fail to give plaintiff the relief prayed for, which necessitates a new trial. Upon this subject the court found that the plaintiff's allegations were not true, and that each and all the denials of the defendant were true and sustained by the evidence. There is a specific finding of ownership in plaintiff of the lands described in its complaint. Defendant in his answer denied any claim of interest in the lands so described, and there is a further finding that all the allegations contained in the answer are true. Defendant was entitled to a finding that all the allegations of the complaint were untrue, for, as his pleading alleged, and the evidence showed, he never claimed any interest in plaintiff's lands, and plaintiff's allegation that he did was untrue. There is no merit in the objection.

HILLS v. SHAFFER et al. (Civ. 5891.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 31, 1929.

Rehearing Denied March 2, 1929.

1. Libel and slander ⟹129—Defendant, in order to recover attorney's fees in action for slander, need not move for dismissal because of plaintiff's failure to file bond (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 4317; Code Civ. Proc. § 581).

Defendant, in action for slander, need not necessarily move for dismissal on account of failure of plaintiff to file bond required by Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 4317 (St. 1871–72, p. 533), in order to entitle him to recover attorney's fees; the dismissal referred to therein applying to dismissals generally, as provided for by Code Civ. Proc. § 581.

2. Libel and slander ⟹129—Defendant in action for slander need not file general appearance, to entitle him to attorney's fee on dismissal.

It is not necessary that defendant in action for slander file a general appearance in the action to entitle him to an attorney's fee on dismissal of the action, where it appears that he has employed an attorney to defend such action.

3. Libel and slander ⟹129—Each of several defendants in action for slander, on dismissal, were entitled to recover $100 attorney's fee (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 4317).

Several defendants, each employing counsel in action for slander, on dismissal thereof, are each entitled to recover $100 attorney's fee, in accordance with Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 4317 (St. 1871–72, p. 533); the manifest object of the provision being to reimburse a defendant for expenditure he has been put to by employment of an attorney, and the result being the same, whether he is jointly or severally sued, and it being immaterial that defendants were represented by the same attorneys.

4. Constitutional law 🔑70(1)—Courts cannot strictly construe law, so as to defeat obvious intention of Legislature to allow counsel fees to defendant in slander action (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 4317).

Though provision in Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 4317 (St. 1871–72, p. 533), allowing defendant in slander action, on dismissal thereof, counsel fees may be in the nature of a penalty requiring a strict construction, courts are not at liberty to so strictly construe it as to defeat obvious intention of Legislature.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; F. G. Brown, Judge.

Action by Benjamin W. Hills against A. D. Shaffer and others. From a judgment awarding defendants costs and attorney's fees, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Jones & Boalt, of San Jose, and Joseph Slyc, of San Francisco, for appellant.

A. D. Shaffer and Anthony Podesta, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. Appeal from a judgment awarding defendants' costs and attorney's fees in an action for slander. The proceeding was commenced on January 28, 1927. No bond was filed as required by statute in cases of this character, nor was any summons ever issued.

[1-4] On February 4, 1927, defendant A. D. Shaffer, who is an attorney at law, served upon plaintiff written notice of appearance on behalf of himself alone. At the same time Shaffer served notice upon plaintiff for the taking of a deposition. This notice was signed, "A. D. Shaffer and Anthony Podesta, Attorneys for A. D. Shaffer." On February 7th following, and before any of the other defendants appeared, the action was dismissed by plaintiff. Thereafter Shaffer and Podesta filed a cost bill, including $100 as attorney's fees for each of the defendants, amounting in all to the sum of $602.50. This claim was verified by Podesta as attorney for the defendants. It recited that the disbursements were necessarily incurred in the action. It appeared at the hearing that Podesta was employed by Shaffer to assist him and the other defendants in the action, that a material witness was about to depart from the state, and the appearance made by Shaffer was for the purpose of taking his deposition for the benefit of all the defendants. Podesta testified as to the employment of himself and Shaffer by the other defendants, and of the steps taken by them in the preparation for trial. The court thereupon allowed each of the defendants the statutory fee of $100. This appeal is taken from such judgment.

In support thereof, appellant contends that, as the appearance of defendant Shaffer was a voluntary and general one, his failure to insist upon the filing of the statutory undertaking constitute a waiver of his right to demand such undertaking, and he thereby estopped himself from claiming the benefit of the provisions of the statute relating to attorneys' fees. As to the other defendants, it is claimed that they are not entitled to such, as no appearance was ever made by them in the action, either in or out of court. The allowance made by the court was based upon our statute upon the subject, which provides in part that in an action for libel or slander, the clerk shall, before issuing the summons, require a written undertaking on the part of the plaintiff in the sum of $500 to the effect that, if the action is dismissed, or the defendant recover judgment, the sureties shall pay such costs and charges as may be awarded against the plaintiff by the judgment, and in addition thereto the sum of $100 as attorney's fees. Deering, Gen. Laws 1923, pt. 1, p. 1620; Stats. 1871–72, p. 533.

In cases of this character it is not necessary, in order to entitle a defendant to an attorney's fee, that he move for a dismissal of the action on account of the failure on the part of plaintiff to file the bond provided for by the statute. The dismissal referred to therein applies to dismissals generally, as provided for under section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Mere failure, therefore, to insist upon the filing of the bond does not constitute a waiver. Nor is it necessary for a defendant to file a general appearance in the action to entitle him to an attorney's fee, where it appears that he has employed an attorney to defend such action. Caffey v. Mann, 3 Cal. App. 124, 84 P. 424; 15 C. J. p. 69. Under these circumstances, upon the dismissal by the plaintiff, defendants were entitled to counsel fees as a matter of course.

Nor is there any merit in the further claim, that, inasmuch as the action was against several defendants "conjointly guilty of one offense," only one attorney's fee of $100 can be allowed. As above pointed out, it appeared that each of the defendants had, upon the filing of the action, employed counsel to represent him. The mere fact that several defendants had been joined in one action in no manner affects the situation as each one is, nevertheless, a defendant. Had the statute provided the attorney's fee should be allowed in the action a different situation would be presented. The manifest object of the provision is to reimburse a defendant for the expenditure he has been put to in the employment of an attorney to defend the action. The result is the same whether he is jointly or severally sued, where expense is incurred. Nor does the fact that defendants were represented by the same attorneys alter the situation. Wittler-Corbin Machinery Co. v. Martin, 47 Wash. 123, 91 P. 629. While the provision in the statute allowing a defendant counsel fees may be in the nature of a penalty, requiring a strict construction, courts are not at liberty to so strictly construe it so as to defeat the obvious intention of the Legislature. This intention is to be collected from the words employed. Where there is no ambiguity in such words there is no room for construction. The statute, in providing, as it does, that a defendant shall be allowed an attorney's fee, means just what it says.

The judgment is affirmed.

Proc. § 667, allowing a successful plaintiff to recover damages for detention of personal property, plaintiff, unless greater damages are shown, and in absence of special damages, is entitled to be compensated by recovering amount equal to interest on the value of property from time of taking or from time of demand for a return thereof to date of verdict.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; John F. Pullen, Judge.

Action by W. A. Brandenburger, as trustee of the Hanner Company, a partnership, and as trustee of the individual members, John W. Hanner and another, bankrupts, against Edith M. Hanner and husband. From the judgment, named defendant appeals. Affirmed as modified.

Huston, Huston & Huston, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Chauncey H. Dunn and Ralph H. Lewis, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. This action was brought by a trustee in bankruptcy to recover the assets of a bankrupt estate, consisting of a herd of cattle alleged to number 85 Ayrshire cows and heifers and 1 bull. The court found that of the cattle claimed plaintiff was entitled to 65 or more, and also that the defendant Edith M. Hanner owned 26 animals which were described by name, ear tag numberings and body markings. The cause is before us upon a statement on appeal or bill of exceptions by the defendant, on her appeal from the judgment of the trial court, awarding the plaintiff 65 head of cows and heifers, or more, and 1 bull, and also finding that the defendant was the owner of only 26 head of cattle.

The specifications of error are two in number and read as follows:

"I. There is no evidence to justify and to support finding number 4 in so far as it finds that the bankrupts were the owners of, or in possession of any greater number of cattle than 65 head of cows and heifers and one bull.

"II. There is no evidence to justify or support finding number 10 in so far as it finds that plaintiff has been, and now is damaged in the sum of $345.00, by the wrongful detention of the cattle."

Notwithstanding the fact that specification of error No. 1 is limited to the lack of testimony to support the words "or more," appellant has proceeded in her brief to argue that finding No. 4 is uncertain and not sufficient to support the judgment. A number of cases are cited to the effect that the findings should be clear and definite; should not be contradictory; must support the judgment; must respond to the material issues; and that there must be a finding upon all the material issues. It would serve no useful purpose to review these cases, for the simple reason that the only valid objection to finding No. 4 rests upon the appearance of the words "or more," in referring to 65 head of cows and heifers, to which the plaintiff was found to be entitled. The respondent has, as we understand the record, consented that the words "or more," be stricken from the findings, from the conclusions of law, and from the judgment. The complaint sets forth in its first count that a certain band of cattle belonging to the bankrupts, consisting of 85 head of Ayrshire cows, 1 heifer and 1 bull, were in the possession of the said bankrupts and the said Edith M. Hanner. The second count sets forth that said cattle are wrongfully withheld from the plaintiff, to the plaintiff's damage, etc., in an amount alleged. The third count in the complaint alleges that a transfer was made, by the said bankrupts to the said Edith M. Hanner, of the cattle mentioned in the complaint as security, within four months of the adjudication of the bankruptcy of the partnership of John W. Hanner and Elmer R. Hanner, and the individual members thereof; that the transfer was void, as being an attempt to give a preference by said bankrupts to the said Edith M. Hanner.

[1] The findings of fact are to the effect that Edith M. Hanner is entitled to and owns certain cows and heifers to the number of 26, and particularly described said cattle by name, tag numbers and body markings, and that the remainder of the herd of cattle, consisting of 65, or more, cows and heifers and 1 bull, belonged to the bankrupts, and constituted a portion of the estate of said bankrupts. Also, the court found the various facts showing that the plaintiff was entitled to the estate of said bankrupts. It was further found that the defendant Edith M. Hanner wrongfully withheld the possession of said cattle from the plaintiff, to the damage of the plaintiff in the sum of $345. The court further found that the value of the cattle was of the aggregate sum of $5,375, being the sum of $500 for the 1 bull and $75 for each of the cows and heifers. The court found, as just stated, that plaintiff was damaged by the detention of said cattle, in the sum of $345. The sum of $345 is the equivalent of 7 per cent. of the value of the cattle, for the period that the same were withheld from the possession of the plaintiff.

There is no claim whatever that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding of the court that the defendant Edith M. Hanner was the owner of only 26 head of said band of cattle. The answer of the defendant Edith M. Hanner laid claim to all of said cattle, by reason of the transfer herein referred to, but was found by the court to be the owner of only 26 head thereof, and, as just stated, no question is made as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support such finding. This of itself would be sufficient to sustain the judgment, on the theory that the appellant is uninjured by the finding of the court, other than that appellant might be held liable for more than 65 head of cattle, the possession of which she has withheld from the plaintiff, by reason of the use of the words "or more," but, with the striking out of these words from the judgment, the appellant stands before this court, so far as the record is concerned, absolutely uninjured.

[2] We find no merit in appellant's second specification of error. Section 667 of the Code of Civil Procedure allows a successful plaintiff to recover damages for the detention of personal property. The law appears to be well settled that, unless greater damages are shown, the plaintiff, without proof of any special damages, is entitled to be compensated by recovering an amount equal to interest on the value of the property from the time of the taking or from the time of the demand for a return thereof to the date of the verdict. Schmidt v. Nunan, 63 Cal. 371; Black v. Vermont Marble Co., 137 Cal. 683, 70 P. 776; Kelly v. McKibben, 54 Cal. 192; Collins v. Warner, 141 Wash. 162, 251 P. 288.

Section 667, Code of Civil Procedure, also provides that a judgment for the recovery of personal property may be an alternative. See, also, Claudius v. Aguirre, 89 Cal. 501, 26 P. 1077; Erreca v. Meyer, 142 Cal. 308, 75 P. 826. The reasoning of both of these cases support the entry of a judgment in the alternative. We find nothing in the case of Lowe v. Ozmun, 137 Cal. 257, 70 P. 87, cited by appellant, which limits a judgment in an action for recovery of personal property to one or the other of the alternatives mentioned in section 667, Code of Civil Procedure.

While no tangible injury has been shown to appellant by the use of the words "or more," in the judgment in this case, yet, as respondent has consented to the elimination of said words, and has not sought to show that the evidence warranting the use of such words was sufficient to support their appearance in the findings, it is ordered that the judgment be modified by striking therefrom the words "or more" wherever said words appear in the judgment. It is further ordered that in all other respects the judgment be, and the same is hereby affirmed. It is further ordered that the respondent have and recover his costs incurred upon this appeal.

MAND v. ROSE et al. (Civ. 5877.) ★

Rehearing Denied March 1, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 1, 1929.

1. Master and servant ⚷300—Defendant, who was sole owner of business or joint venturer therein, was liable for negligence of minor employé within employment.

Defendant, who was either sole owner of business or a joint venturer therein with codefendant, who assumed entire management of enterprise and employed minor in furtherance of its general objects and business, was liable for injuries resulting from negligent acts of said minor committed while acting within general scope of his employment.

2. Master and servant ⚷332(2)—Court may determine whether servant was about master's business, where evidence conclusively shows very slight or very great deviation; other cases present fact question for jury.

Where evidence conclusively shows that a servant deviated from general scope of his authority either in but slight and not unusual manner, or in great or unusual manner, court may determine as matter of law whether servant was acting within scope of his employment, and cases falling between these extremes will be regarded as involving merely a question of fact for jury to determine.

3. Automobiles ⚷245(30)—Whether automobile auction company's employé, driving automobile which struck deceased, was acting within authority, held jury question.

Where employé of company selling secondhand automobiles at public auction, who was employed to assist in preparing for auctions, took automobile, which he had been directed to wash and polish, for purpose of getting the polish, though he was not a licensed driver, and on such trip negligently ran into and fatally injured plaintiff's intestate, whether he was acting within scope of his authority held question of fact for the jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; C. E. Beaumont, Judge.

Action by Marie Mand, as administratrix of the estate of F. G. Mand, deceased, against Harry Rose and others. From an adverse judgment, named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Horace W. B. Smith and James Davis, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Everts, Ewing, Wild & Everts, L. W. Young, and Dan F. Conway, all of Fresno, for respondents.

LUCAS, Justice pro tem. [1] Appealing from the judgment on a verdict for damages resulting from the negligence of a minor, Harry Rose, one of the defendants and the sole appellant herein, contends that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict. Two arguments are advanced: First, that the said minor was not an employé of the appellant; and, second, that if it be held he was an employé, he was not acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the injury complained of. Appellant has not urged the first point with any great degree of earnestness, and indeed there is little merit in it. The record shows that appellant was either the sole owner of the Valley Auction Company or a joint venturer therein with defendant J. Boust, who assumed the entire management of the enterprise and employed the said minor in furtherance of its general objects and business. In either event appellant would be liable for injuries resulting from the negligent acts of the employé committed while acting within the general scope of his employment.

The business of the so-called Valley Auction Company was that of selling secondhand automobiles at public auction. To assist in preparing for the auctions the Valley Auction Company, through the said Boust, auctioneer, employed the said minor, Frank Rogers. Rogers was employed the day prior to the first auction, and his first duties consisted in distributing around town circulars in reference to the auction the following day. After the circulars were handed out, Rogers informed Boust that he knew how to wash cars. Upon orders of Boust, Rogers washed Boust's Ford car. Boust, apparently being satisfied with the work, called up Rose and asked him if he wanted to sell his car at auction, saying, "You better bring it down and let us wash it up." Rose told Boust to come down and get the car. Boust and Rogers drove down to appellant's place of business in Boust's Ford. Rogers, who had no driver's license, acting under orders from Boust, returned to the lot of the Valley Auction Company with Boust's Ford, and Boust returned to the lot with appellant's Dodge car. Boust told Rogers to wash and polish appellant's car as he wanted to offer it for sale at Saturday's auction. Rogers testified that prior to washing the car he drove it onto the lot occupied by the Valley Auction Company, and was seen so to do by Boust, who made no objections.

According to Boust's testimony, the following conversation took place prior to Rogers' washing the car:

Boust: "I drove it (Rose's car) down on the lot, drove the car on the washrack and told Rogers to go ahead and wash it up. He went inside and I told him, I said, 'I will be gone about an hour and a half.' I said, 'Answer the phone calls,' like that. He said, 'There is no polish here.' I said, 'There is some simonizing in the car.' I said, 'That is good enough,' like that."

Rogers testified:

"After it (the car) dried, I looked in the car to see if there was any polish in there and there was no polish but just the cleaner polish, so he (referring to Boust) wasn't there and I thought I would go down where I lived down there near the filling station and get some oil polish.

"Q. Mr. Rogers, when you proceeded to go out to get the polish, did you have any business whatsoever, of your own, that you went out there on? I mean by that, did you go out there merely for the purpose of getting the polish? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And you had no business of your own out there? A. No, sir."

In reference to conditioning autos for sale, Boust testified:

"Q. In other words, you try to make your stock look as nice as possible? A. Yes, at an auction, understand, we sell to the highest dealer.

"Q. But in order to get the high dealer you have to have your goods looking in good shape. A. Naturally you do."

Rogers drove appellant's car out for the purpose of getting the proper oil polish and on this trip carelessly and negligently ran into and injured F. G. Mand, who some two months later died. Whether or not the accident was the proximate cause of his death is immaterial, as the validity of the judgment in so far as the amount thereof is concerned is not attacked.

The sole question for the court's determination herein is whether or not in the circumstances above outlined it can be held that the said Rogers was acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the injury to plaintiff's intestate.

[2] The general rule, as heretofore stated by this court in the case of Wagnitz v. Scharetg (Cal. App.) 265 P. page 318, is: "Where the evidence conclusively shows that a servant deviated from the general scope of his authority in but a slight and not unusual manner, the court may as a matter of law determine that the servant was about his master's business. If the deviation is great and unusual, the court may likewise as a matter of law determine that the servant was not about his master's business, but his own. Cases falling between these extremes will be regarded as involving merely a question of fact to be left to the jury"—citing Berry, The Law of Automobiles (4th Ed.) pp. 1078, 1079, and cases cited; also, Kruse et al. v. White Bros. et al., 81 Cal. App. at page 86, 253 P. 178.

[3] We are of the opinion that the facts in this case do not warrant the court in saying as a matter of law that the said Rogers either was or was not about his master's business at the time of the accident. We believe the case presents purely a question of fact for the jury to decide, particularly in view of the rule laid down in 18 R. C. L. p. 796: "Where a servant steps aside from the master's business and does an act not connected with the business, which is hurtful to another, manifestly the master is not liable for such act, for the reason that having left his employer's business, the relation of master and servant did not exist as to the wrongful act; but if the servant continues about the business of the employer, adopts methods which he deems necessary, expedient or convenient, and the methods adopted prove hurtful to others, the employer is liable.'"

The supporting authority for the last part of the rule is even stronger than the rule itself. See Pittsburgh, Cincinnati & St. Louis Ry. Co. v. Kirk, 102 Ind. 399, 402, 1 N. E. 849, 852, 52 Am. Rep. page 675, at page 677: "Where a servant is engaged in accomplishing an end which is within the scope of his employment, and while so engaged adopts means reasonably intended and directed to the end which result in injury to another, the master is answerable for the consequences, regardless of the motives which induced the adoption of the means; and this too, even though the means employed were outside his authority, and against the express orders of the master." 2 Thomp. Neg. 889, § 6; Wood, Mast. and Serv. 593, 594.

The jury having passed upon the question of fact, and the evidence being, in the opinion of the court, sufficient to support the verdict, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

PEOPLE v. BELL. (Cr. 1747.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 30, 1929.

1. Witnesses ⟹268(4)—Refusal to permit cross-examination of statutory rape prosecutrix as to when she started to become unconscious held not unduly to restrict cross-examination.

In prosecution for statutory rape, in which prosecutrix testified that when offense was committed she was not at first aware thereof, explaining that at the time she was in a "sort of stupor," refusal to permit defendant's counsel to cross-examine her as to when she started to become unconscious held not unduly to restrict cross-examination.

2. Witnesses ⟹340(3)—Refusal to permit cross-examination of prosecutrix in statutory rape case respecting previous chastity held not to unduly restrict cross-examination to test credibility.

In prosecution for statutory rape, in which neither the reputation nor character of prosecuting witness for chastity was involved, refusal to permit cross-examination of said witness as to matters relating to such issues held not unduly to restrict cross-examination for purpose of attacking her credibility as a witness.

⟹For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

3. Criminal law 🔑1035(3), 1129(1)—Trial court's alleged misconduct will not be considered, without assignment of error, and after failure to call trial judge's attention thereto.

Alleged misconduct of trial court, prejudicing defendant in minds of jury, will not be considered by reviewing court, in absence of assignment of error, and after failure to call trial judge's attention to alleged improper statements, so that he might correct the harm, if any.

4. Criminal law 🔑1166½(12)—Trial court's statement as to effect of testimony of prosecuting witness in statutory rape case, which was in accord with record, held not prejudicial.

In prosecution for statutory rape, in which prosecuting witness had testified that when offense was committed she was at first not aware of it and was in partial stupor, trial court's statement, on sustaining objection to cross-examination as to when she started to become unconscious, that she did not mean she was unconscious mentally, held not prejudicial, where remark was in accord with record.

5. Criminal law 🔑814(3)—Instruction in statutory rape case, permitting jury to consider other improper conduct, held error, in absence of evidence thereof.

In statutory rape prosecution, giving of instruction that evidence of other improper familiarity between defendant and prosecutrix, both before and after time charged in information, was received in evidence to prove defendant's adulterous disposition, and as having a tendency to render it probable that offense charged was committed, and for no other purpose, held error, where there was no evidence of such other acts, nor corroboration of prosecutrix's testimony in respect thereto, except testimony as to admission by defendant that he had sexual intercourse with her and had contracted venereal disease from her.

6. Criminal law 🔑1035(3), 1171(5)—District attorney's argument in rape prosecution that there had been no "denial" of facts held not so prejudicial as to require reversal without objection.

In prosecution for statutory rape, statements of district attorney during his argument that there had been no denial of any facts in case, and that defendant had a right to keep his mouth shut, and that it was up to state to prove that he was guilty, which state had done, held not so prejudicial as to require reversal, though no objection thereto was made at the time; such statement not calling attention to defendant's refusal to testify, though word "denial" connotes a disavowal by defendant himself.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Denial.]

7. Criminal law 🔑1186(4)—Erroneous instruction in statutory rape case permitting jury to consider other improper conduct held not to require reversal (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Error in instruction in statutory rape case, permitting jury to consider other improper conduct between prosecutrix and defendant, as tending to prove commission of offense charged, held not to require reversal, under Const. art. 6, § 4½, in view of prosecutrix's uncontradicted testimony, corroborated by testimony of other witnesses respecting defendant's admission that he had had sexual intercourse with her and had contracted venereal disease from her.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; James L. Allen, Judge.

Wilfred Bell was convicted of statutory rape, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Charles D. Swanner, of Santa Ana, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn and Warner I. Praul, Deputy Attys. Gen., for the People.

THOMPSON, J. The defendant was charged by information filed by the district attorney of Orange county with the crime of statutory rape. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, and defendant appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The appellant assigns four reasons for reversal as follows: (1) That the court erred in restricting the cross-examination of the complaining witness, and of her father. (2) That the trial judge was guilty of misconduct. (3) That the court gave an erroneous instruction. (4) That the district attorney was guilty of misconduct.

[1] We shall dispose of the arguments in the foregoing order and turn our attention to the claim that appellant was not permitted to cross-examine the complaining witness or her father on pertinent questions. The record discloses that the prosecutrix, a girl of 16 years, testified to the following situation:

On the evening of May 26, 1928, she and appellant attended a party on board a boat called the Vision, lying in Newport Harbor. They went aboard between 8 and 9 p. m., went down below with the others, of whom there were about six, and talked and drank whisky. Some time before 12 o'clock, the complaining witness became sick, and went on deck. About five minutes later the appellant followed her. They sat and talked for a while. Appellant then went and got some blankets, so that she could lie down. He then crawled in under the blankets with her, and there accomplished the act of intercourse. During the direct examination of this witness she testified that, just before the act, "I was sick, and I didn't know at first, but afterwards I was aware of it." On cross-examination she answered in response to queries as follows:

"Q. And you say, when he first started to having intercourse with you, that you were unconscious? A. Partly.

"Q. You didn't know what he was doing? A. Not at first."

Later, on cross-examination, counsel asked the question: "When did you start to become unconscious?" The district attorney objected, on the ground that counsel was assuming facts not in evidence, whereupon the court stated: "She testified that she didn't realize the fact of the act, but not meaning that she was unconscious mentally." In response to further queries the witness explained that she knew what was happening, but that she was in "a sort of stupor." There can be no doubt, under this state of the record, that the court was correct in his statement and in his ruling. While counsel had led her into the use of the term "unconscious" once on cross-examination, the trial judge was manifestly stating her testimony on direct examination, and was eminently fair, inclining, if anything, to defendant's interpretation of her language.

[2] The next occurrence of which appellant complains took place when he asked the witness if she had not run away from home on one occasion. An objection was interposed, and to the argument of defendant's counsel that he was to cross-examine the prosecutrix upon all angles the court interposed: "That is true as to the crime, but I don't think it is necessary to go into any other part of her life. I take it it doesn't make any difference what her past life has been." Before the objection was sustained, counsel further stated that the witness had said that "this" (referring to the date of May 26th) "was the only time she left home, in May." We here parenthetically insert that the record does not bear out counsel's statement. Her testimony was that, when she left her father's house earlier in May, it was the first time she had left "to work." A similar objection was sustained to the query: "Is it not a fact that your father ordered you from home on May 15th?"

The last instance is so nearly akin and so aptly illustrates the purposes of the other interrogatories that we also set it down here. The question was asked of the father of the girl as follows: "Isn't it a fact, Mr. Johnston, that you told her she would have to leave home if she didn't quit running around with a certain girl in Balboa?" Counsel argues that in this character of action he should have been allowed the widest latitude compatible with the technical rules of evidence, for the purpose of testing the credibility of the prosecuting witness. This statement is in apparent accord with the authorities (see People v. Baldwin, 117 Cal. 244, 49 P. 186), even in those cases where the female is under the age of consent. But neither the reputation nor the character of the witness for chastity was involved in this action. The proper method to have attacked her credibility was to have directed questions to her, or her father, which had some bearing upon her reputation or character for truth, honesty, and integrity. We do not perceive how her past conduct and home life could have a tendency to disprove her statements concerning the events of May 26th. A similar ruling was announced in People v. Casanova, 54 Cal. App. 439, 202 P. 45. See, also, 27 Cal. Jur. 131.

[3, 4] We have already noted the remarks of the court which appellant says constitute misconduct, and prejudiced the defendant in the minds of the jury. It is to be observed in the first instance that no assignment of misconduct was made by appellant, nor was the judge's attention called to the statements, so that he might correct the harm, if any was done. In the second place, we do not put the same construction upon the remarks of the court as does the appellant. As we have already pointed out, the trial judge was in accord with the record when he said that the witness had not testified that she was unconscious, and he was stating the law substantially when he said: "I don't think it is necessary to go into any other part of her life. I take it it doesn't make any difference what her past life has been."

[5] Appellant's next attack upon the judgment is on the ground that the court erred in giving the following instruction: "You are further instructed that evidence of other acts of sexual intercourse between the defendant and the prosecutrix, and of improper familiarity on the part of the defendant towards and with the prosecutrix, both before and after the time charged in the information, is received and admitted in evidence to prove the adulterous disposition of the defendant, and as having a tendency to render it more probable that the act of sexual intercourse charged and relied on in the information was committed, and for no other purpose."

Our attention is directed to the case of People v. Haugh (Cal. App.) 265 P. 891, where the giving of almost the identical instruction was held erroneous for the reason that there was no testimony of any acts of sexual intercourse after the one complained of and the testimony of the prosecutrix was not substantiated by any other evidence, hence her statement of other acts of intercourse did not have a tendency to render more credible her own testimony. So here we have no testimony concerning acts of intercourse prior to the one complained of and no corroboration of her testimony of subsequent occurrences, except the testimony of several witnesses to the admission made by appellant that he had sexual intercourse with her and had contracted a venereal disease from her. This admission is not sufficiently broad to cover more than the one act, hence we fail to see how the testimony of the prosecutrix to the acts after May 26th could strengthen her statements concerning the affair of that date or tend to establish more firmly the possession of an adulterous disposition by the appellant.

[6] During the argument of the district attorney, after reciting his version of the facts happening on the boat, he said: "There has been no denial of any of the facts in this case; not a denial of a thing all the way down the case. The witnesses who came on the witness stand all were to tell you that at some time or another the girl said she was 19 years of age, instead of 16; and the girl herself told you that she told the boys she was 17." Again, he argued: "* * * There is not one scintilla of evidence here which shows to you, or shows to me, or shows to any one else, that he did not have sexual intercourse with that girl." Lastly he asserted: "And yet that is the story which has been presented, and there is not one scintilla of evidence—and by a 'scintilla' I mean there is not one bit of evidence—which contradicts that story. Not a bit of it. The defendant has a right to keep his mouth shut, and it is up to us to prove that he is guilty; and ladies and gentlemen, in this case we have proven absolutely that he is guilty in this case. You must take the evidence as it is received."

The appellant asserts that the first and last of these statements of the district attorney constitute misconduct of such a serious nature that it was not necessary for him to object at the time or assign them as misconduct and thus give to the court and counsel an opportunity to rectify the damage, if any was done. We cannot agree with this contention. The argument was short and concise. We have quoted the second statement of the district attorney, for the purpose of more faithfully portraying the general tenor of his remarks. The thought which he endeavored to impress upon the jury was that there was no contradiction in the evidence of the story of the prosecutrix relating to any of the circumstances of May 26, 1928, and that the admission of the defendant corroborated her in that particular. His argument, as it appears to us from the record, was free of rancor or any attempt to take undue advantage of the defendant. It cannot be classed with those of the over-zealous prosecutor. And while, strictly speaking, the word "denial," used by him in the first quoted statement, connotes a disavowal by the defendant himself, we do not believe that the jury understood that the attorney was directly or indirectly calling attention to the refusal of the appellant to testify. He was directing attention to that fact in the last statement, but it was an express declaration that such was his right. We fail to appreciate how the appellant could have been prejudiced by the assertion of that which was his right. At least, it is apparent from the entire argument that no prejudice was suffered which could not easily have been cured, and the evil eradicated, by timely objection.

[7] We must now determine whether the error found to have been committed in the giving of the instruction already discussed, requires a reversal of the judgment. We have already observed that no testimony was introduced by the appellant to contradict any of the circumstances related by her on the evening in question, but that in fact he admitted before several persons the commission of the act. The jury were instructed that the crime charged is one "easy to charge and difficult to disprove," and that they should view with great caution "the testimony of a child of tender years." With this instruction before them, it is difficult to believe that the jury gave any more credence to the testimony of the prosecutrix, by reason of her statement that there were two or three other acts of sexual intercourse. It is much more reasonable to believe that they were guided in their determination by her uncontradicted story, corroborated by an admission, and, in particular, that part of the admission wherein appellant charged her with having transmitted to him a venereal disease. Under all the circumstances, we cannot say under section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution that a miscarriage of justice has occurred.

Judgment and order affirmed.

Ex parte FLANNERY. (Cr. 1755.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 30, 1929.

1. Habeas corpus ⚷90—Deputy of county probation department's referee, not appointed as such by court, could not act as referee in investigating question of children's custody, but was mere volunteer.

Where question of custody of minor children was referred to referee of county probation department for investigation and report, when order, requiring mother to show cause why custody of children should not be given to father, came on for hearing, referee's deputy had no authority to act as referee on request of referee appointed by the court, but in doing so was a mere volunteer.

2. Habeas corpus ⚷85(1)—Court must presumee that witnesses interviewed by deputy of county probation referee, investigating question of children's custody, were not sworn (Code Civ. Proc. § 642).

Where mother appeared in response to order to show cause why custody of children should not be given to father, and, without objection, court referred matter to referee of county probation department, who requested one of her deputies to investigate case, held that court must presume that none of witnesses interviewed by deputy were sworn, since, under Code Civ. Proc. § 642, she had no authority to administrater oaths, because referee derives authority only from order of court.

3. Habeas corpus ⚷29—Investigation, without swearing witnesses and notice to attorneys, deprived mother of right to show cause why children's custody should be denied father.

Where mother appeared in response to order to show cause why custody of children should not be given to father, and question was referred, without objection, to referee of county probation department, whose deputy examined witnesses without notifying attorneys of proceedings, held that mother was thereby prevented from showing cause and from having hearing, and was entitled to habeas corpus to secure release of minor children from custody of probation department, notwithstanding affidavits on her behalf were submitted to court.

Application of Jeffie Harris Flannery for a writ of habeas corpus to be directed to the probation department of Los Angeles county to secure the release from its custody of petitioner's minor children. Writ granted.

Griffith Jones, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.
Marion P. Betty, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

THOMPSON, J. The petitioner, the mother of two minor children, Charles Harris Flannery and Martha A. Flannery, presented a petition for the writ of habeas corpus, for the purpose of testing the legality of the detention of the children mentioned. Petitioner appeared before the superior court on October 16, 1928, in response to an order to show cause why the custody of the children should not be given to the father. At that time, without objection on the part of counsel for petitioner, the court made an order as follows: "The matter will be referred to Mrs. Maxwell, the referee, for her investigation and report." The Mrs. Maxwell mentioned is Mary Maxwell, the referee of the probation department of Los Angeles county. When the matter came to her attention, she was unable to handle it herself, and asked Mrs. Kara Root, one of her deputies, to make an investigation of the case. Mrs. Root asked the petitioner and her witnesses to come to her office, and at a different time requested the father and his witnesses to appear before her. The parties and their witnesses were interviewed independently of each other. Mrs. Maxwell was present when Mrs. Root examined some of the witnesses, but to her knowledge the witnesses were not sworn or the attorneys notified of the proceedings. A report was made by Mrs. Root, and, at the time of the hearing of the report, counsel for petitioner asked leave to have witnesses sworn and examined for the purpose of refuting the report. The motion was denied, but the court read the entire report of Mrs. Root, and made an order giving the custody of the children to the probation department of the county of Los Angeles, with instructions to find for them a suitable home. At the conclusion of the hearing before us we made an order giving the custody of the children to the petitioner until the cause was disposed of.

[1-3] It is obvious that the petitioner was never permitted to show cause why she should not be deprived of the custody of her children. Mrs. Root was not the referee appointed by the court, and had no authority to act as such. She was a mere volunteer. We must not only presume that none of the witnesses interviewed by her were sworn, because Mrs. Maxwell testifies that, although she was present when some were examined, they were not, to her knowledge, but also from the fact that she had no authority to administer oaths, for the reason that a referee derives authority only from the order of the court. Solomon v. Maguire, 29 Cal. 227; section 642, Code Civ. Proc. It is not enough that affidavits on behalf of plaintiff were submitted to the court, for the reason we have already indicated, that no opportunity was given the petitioner to show cause, and no hearing was had.

Charles Harris Flannery and Martha A. Flannery are released from the custody of the probation department of the county of Los Angeles.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

WICKHAM v. BECKER, Chief of Police, et al.★
(Civ. 6384.)

District Court of Appeal. First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 28, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 27, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 28, 1929.

1. Municipal corporations ⚷601—Ordinance regulating location of industries, apartment houses, etc., pursuant to general, comprehensive, and reasonably necessary zoning plan, reasonably related to public health, safety, etc., is valid.

Generally, municipality's enactment of ordinance regulating, restricting, and segregating location of industries, businesses, trades, or callings, apartment houses, etc., pursuant to general, comprehensive, and reasonably necessary zoning plan, reasonably related to public health, safety, morals, or general welfare, and applied fairly and impartially, is a valid exercise of police power.

2. Municipal corporations ⚷601—Municipality cannot grant monopoly to existing business establishments in unrestricted districts under guise of regulating and segregating business.

Municipality cannot, under guise of regulating business and segregating it in particular district, grant a monopoly to business establishments and enterprises already situated in unrestricted districts, though it is not necessary for zoning purposes that existing uses be removed.

3. Municipal corporations ⚷601—Ordinance creating small business district, with only one vacant lot, held void, as granting monopoly to existing business enterprises therein.

Zoning ordinance, creating business district of two distinct areas, containing together less than one acre of land, in which there was only one 50x70-foot vacant lot available for apartment houses, theaters, and other business enterprises permitted by ordinance in such district, held void, as granting business monopoly to enterprises already established therein.

4. Municipal corporations ⚷63(1)—Judgment decreeing that certain property is business property in business district, as well as nullifying ordinance excluding it, held beyond court's authority (St. 1923, p. 1564, § 41).

Judgment, not only nullifying zoning ordinance of city of Piedmont, granting business monopoly to enterprises already established in business district, so far as affecting plaintiff's property just outside such district, but decreeing that her property is business property in business district, permitting her to build stores thereon, and enjoining city from interfering, held erroneous, as exceeding court's authority; municipality having power under its charter (St. 1923, p. 1564, § 41) to revise zoning scheme or adopt new one, eliminating such objectionable feature, without necessarily including plaintiff's property in business district.

5. Constitutional law ⚷70(3)—Courts are loath to substitute their judgment for legislative judgment as to necessity for particular enactment in exercise of police power.

Courts are loath to substitute their judgment for legislative judgment as to necessity for particular enactment, justified in exercise of police power by considerations of public health, safety, morals, or general welfare, though differing with legislative branch as to wisdom and propriety of enactment as means of accomplishing particular end.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. D. Murphey, Judge.

Action by Jessie E. Wickham against B. F. Becker, as Chief of Police of the City of Piedmont, and such city. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Modified, and affirmed, as modified.

George M. Naus, of San Francisco, and Girard N. Richardson, of Oakland, for appellants.

Lovett K. Fraser and Cleveland R. Wright, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Plaintiff is the owner of certain premises situate on the northerly corner of Grand and Linda avenues, in the city of Piedmont, which heretofore have been utilized for residential purposes. Shortly prior to the commencement of this suit she concluded to convert the same into business property, and to that end made arrangements to construct two stores thereon. The city's officers threatened that, if she proceeded with such construction, she would be arrested for the alleged violation of a zoning ordinance enacted by said city on May 21, 1925; and thereupon she commenced this suit, to have said ordinance declared void and to enjoin the city and its chief of police from enforcing its terms. Upon trial a decree was granted in her favor, from which defendants have appealed.

The city is operated under a freeholders' charter approved by the Legislature in 1923 (St. 1923, p. 1564), and the territory embraced within its corporate limits contains 1,151 acres. It is contiguous to and entirely surrounded by the city of Oakland, and at the time of trial Piedmont's population was approximately 9,000 people. Section 41 of the charter is entitled "Zoning System," and reads as follows: "The city of Piedmont is hereby declared to be primarily a residential city and the council shall have power to establish such zoning systems within the city as may in its judgment be most beneficial and in such zoning systems may prohibit the erection or maintenance of any class or classes of buildings within certain areas and may classify and reclassify the zones established. * * *"

Proceeding under the authority thus granted, the legislative body of the city enacted the zoning ordinance in question, which purports to divide the city into three zones. Section 3 of the ordinance relates to zone A and provides that the area included therein shall be occupied by none other than single family dwellings, schools, and churches, together with the usual accessories, including private garages for the accommodation of not more than four automobiles. Section 4, dealing with zone B, restricts its occupation to similar uses and also to the use of any "public institution of an educational or philanthropic nature, Masonic or other fraternal building, and the usual accessories located on the same lot. * * *" Section 5 reads as follows: "No building, structure or improvement shall be erected, constructed, established, altered or enlarged in zone C, which is designated, arranged or intended to be occupied or used for any purpose other than those specified in sections 3 and 4 thereof, and that of apartment houses, flats, stores or shops for the conduct of a retail business, theaters, offices of dentists and physicians, studios or any retail business or office not prohibited by law or ordinance now in force or which may be hereafter enacted."

Palisades Ass'n v. City of Huntington Beach, 196 Cal. 211, 237 P. 538, 40 A. L. R. 782; and it is held generally that the enactment by a municipality of an ordinance pursuant to a general comprehensive zoning plan, based upon considerations of public health, safety, morals, or the general welfare, applied fairly and impartially, which ordinance regulates, restricts and segregates the location of the industries, the several classes of business, trade or calling, and the location of apartment or tenement houses, club houses, club residences, and the several classes of public and semipublic buildings, is a valid exercise of the police power, and is not in contravention of the fundamental law of the state.

"It appears in the instant case that the board of trustees undertook to zone the town into two districts, one of which was devoted to residential uses and the other to business uses. This was in effect a legislative finding that the maintenance of both such districts was necessary to the public welfare. It was the duty, therefore, of the board of trustees when zoning the town to make adequate provision for both such uses. That adequate provision for the business district was not made is at once apparent. It is true that some provision was made for business; that is to say, one and one-tenth acres out of 2500 acres was designated as an 'unrestricted district' in which buildings to be 'devoted to any lawful use' might be constructed. But it is apparent from the fact that the 'unrestricted district' was already fully occupied by a gasoline station and a restaurant to the exclusion of new business uses, that the board of trustees was limiting the 'unrestricted district' to business enterprises already established and to the exclusion of any future business development. The ordinance in effect grants a monopoly to the business establishments already situate in the one and one-tenth acres of the 'unrestricted district.' In other words, under the guise of regulating business and segregating it to a particular district, the ordinance in fact prohibits all business save and except that of the favored two already established."

[3] The situation presented here, with respect to the creation of a business monopoly, is to all intents and purposes the same as the one existing there. Here, too, the legislative body of the city adopted a zoning ordinance creating both residential and business districts, which, as there stated, was in effect a determination that both such districts were necessary to the public welfare. Consequently, as there held, it was the duty of the legislative body to make adequate provision for both such uses. This it failed to do; but, on the contrary, as was done in the Atherton Case, the municipality limited the unrestricted district to business enterprises already established, to the practical exclusion of any further business development. With respect thereto the record reveals that, in creating the so-called business district, the city selected two distinct areas, situate in different sections of the city. Together they contain less than one acre of land. One parcel, the smaller one, is situate on the southerly corner of Grand and Linda avenues, directly opposite plaintiff's property. It has a frontage of only 75 feet on Grand avenue and 125 feet on Linda avenue, and at the time of the enactment of the ordinance was completely occupied by two stores—a general market and a drug store—leaving no available space whatever for the development of future business. The other or larger area includes both sides of a portion of Highland avenue at its junction with Magnolia avenue. However, the entire westerly side of Highland avenue, within said area, is owned by the city, and consequently cannot be utilized for private business purposes; and the entire easterly side, within said area, with the exception of a single lot, having a frontage of 50 feet and a depth of 70 feet, was entirely occupied at the time the ordinance was passed by four established places of business, namely, a grocery store, a drug store, a candy store, and a gasoline station, the vacant lot lying between the gasoline station and one of the stores, and which at the time of trial, so the trial court found, was being held by the owners thereof for speculation at an exorbitant price. Obviously, therefore, at the time of the adoption of the ordinance, there was no available ground left within either area for future business development, except said vacant lot; and from the dimensions thereof (50×70 feet) it cannot be reasonably said to constitute "adequate provision" for the building of apartment houses, flats, theaters, and the other various kinds of business enterprises which the zoning ordinance purports to permit. The plain effect of the ordinance is, therefore, to prevent all business within the city, except and save that of the favored places already established, and to grant to such places a business monopoly; and upon that ground the trial court was correct, in our opinion, in declaring said ordinance void in so far as it affected plaintiff's property. In re White, supra; Pacific Palisades Ass'n v. City of Huntington Beach, supra. As held in Zahn v. Board of Public Works, supra, for the purposes of zoning, it is not necessary that existing uses shall be removed. See, also, Spector v. Building Inspector, 250 Mass. 63, 145 N. E. 265; City of Aurora v. Burns, 319 Ill. 84, 149 N. E. 784. But evidently such exemption may be accomplished without creating a monopoly.

[4] The judgment entered in the action, besides nullifying said ordinance in so far as it affected plaintiff's property, decreed as matter of law in paragraphs 1, 2, and 4 thereof that plaintiff's property is "business property in a business district, and may be used for business purposes"; also that "she is hereby permitted to build stores on her property * * * according to the plans and specifications on file"; and that the city and its officers be enjoined from "interfering in any way or from preventing plaintiff or her agents from constructing stores on her property * * * in conformity with the building laws of the city of Piedmont or in conformity witth her plans and specifications on file." In this respect the judgment, in our opinion, goes too far, for the reason that, the ordinance being nullified, the municipality doubtless has the power under its charter provision to revise its zoning scheme entirely, or to adopt a new one, in such manner as to eliminate the objectionable feature of a business monopoly; and that being so, it was beyond the authority of the court in our opinion to indicate the nature or extent of the zoning scheme the municipality should thereafter adopt, or to say where the lines of the different zones should be drawn, or what particular property should or should not be included therein, or otherwise to interfere with the lawful exercise of the municipal legislative power. Such, in our opinion, is the effect of paragraphs 1, 2, and 4 of the judgment, as we construe them.

[5] As said in Miller v. Board of Public Works, supra, "It is scarcely necessary to reiterate here the well-recognized principle that courts are loath to substitute their judgment as to the necessity for a particular enactment for the legislative judgment as to the need of such enactment with reference to the exercise of the police power. A large discretion is vested in the legislative branch of the government with reference to the exercise of the police power. * * * The courts may differ with the Legislature as to the wisdom and propriety of a particular enactment as a means of accomplishing a particular end; but as long as there are considerations of public health, safety, morals, or general welfare which the legislative body may have had in mind, which have justified the regulation, it must be assumed by the court that the legislative body had those considerations in mind and that those considerations did justify the regulation. State ex rel. Civello v. City of New Orleans [154 La. 271, 97 So. 440, 33 A. L. R. 260], supra. In Ex parte Hadacheck [165 Cal. 416, 132 P. 584, L. R. A. 1916B, 1248], supra, the court held in effect that, when the necessity or propriety of an enactment was a question upon which reasonable minds might differ, the propriety and necessity of such enactment was a matter of legislative determination."

Apparently said provisions were inserted in the judgment because of certain affirmative findings made by the trial court upon allegations contained in the complaint to the effect that plaintiff's property, on account of its location on a main thoroughfare of the city and its proximity to the municipal boundary of the city of Oakland, the presence of the two stores immediately across the street from her premises, the great volume of vehicular traffic passing in front and along the side of her property, the noise caused thereby, and by the presence of an electric substation in the same block, and the depreciated value of the property, caused by its restricted use for residential purposes, was no longer suitable for residential purposes. But in this regard it may be stated that, if the ordinance were free from creating the evil of a business monopoly, it may be seriously questioned as to whether or not any or all of the factors above mentioned, assuming them to exist, would be legally sufficient, in and of themselves, to render said ordinance void. See the recent case of Feraut v. City of Sacramento (Cal. Sup.) 269 P. 537, wherein most of the elements above mentioned are discussed, and many of the authorities relating thereto are summarized and applied. In any event, the factors above mentioned tended to serve only as several of the many grounds upon which plaintiff sought to have the ordinance declared invalid and consequently unenforceable against her property: and since the trial court by its judgment has so decreed, and correctly so, we believe, we think it had not the power to go beyond such adjudication, and in effect decree that, in whatever zoning ordinance the city might thereafter adopt, plaintiff's property should be included within the business zone.

For the reasons stated, it ordered that paragraphs 1, 2, and 4 of the judgment be stricken therefrom, and, as thus modified, the judgment is affirmed; respondent to recover costs.

PEOPLE v. LAMBERT. (Cr. 1743.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 22, 1929.

Criminal law ⚷1069(6)—Ignorance of appellant of court rule replacing repealed statute held insufficient excuse for delay in filing application stating grounds of appeal (Pen. Code, § 1247; Supreme Court and District Court of Appeal Rules, § 7).

Failure to file application to trial court stating grounds of appeal within time required by section 7 of Rules of Supreme Court and District Court of Appeal, held not excused by appellant's reliance on fact that Pen. Code, § 1247, making similar provisions, had been repealed, and that he did not know rule had taken its place.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; S. M. Marsh, Judge.

Proceedings by the People against Frank Lambert. From the judgment, defendant appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Edward J. Kelly, of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and L. G. Campbell, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HOUSER, J. This is a motion to dismiss an appeal on the ground that it was not perfected as required by section 7 of the Rules of the Supreme Court and the District Court of Appeal.

So far as is here material, the rule to which reference has been had provides that: "Upon an appeal by the defendant from a judgment of conviction, * * * the appellant must, within five days after giving notice of the appeal, file with the clerk and present an application to the trial court, stating in general terms the grounds of the appeal and the points upon which the appellant relies. * * * If such application is not filed within said time the appeal shall be dismissed. * * *"

It appears that, after giving notice of appeal herein, appellant failed to comply with the requirement of such rule to the effect that, within five days thereafter, he must file with the clerk a statement containing the grounds of the appeal and the points upon which he relies for reversal of the judgment. However, it was shown that he did file such statement on the seventh day following his notice of appeal.

On oral argument of the motion, the only reason assigned by appellant for his dereliction in the matter was that, although he knew that, prior to the adoption of the rule, in language nearly identical therewith, section 1247 of the Penal Code provided for the necessary procedure, together with a penalty for its violation, he relied on the fact that the statute had been repealed, and did not know that by statutory provision the rule had taken or would take the place of the repealed statute.

Although it appears that the failure of appellant to comply with the provisions of the rule was wholly unintentional on his part, and that in some respects the delay may be said to be inconsequential, it is manifest that, if the rule is to be effective, it must be generally enforced and its infraction excused in exceptional circumstances only. In matters of the nature of that here under consideration, it is a well-established principle that mere lack of knowledge of a provision of a law or rule of court will not suffice as an excuse for noncompliance with its requirements.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is granted.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action of interpleader to determine title to bank deposit by the Mercantile Trust Company of California against Charles G. Reay, Wallace R. Reay, and others, in which certain defendants filed cross-complaints. From the judgment, Dacia B. Reay, as administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of Wallace R. Reay, deceased, who was substituted for Wallace R. Reay, appeals. Affirmed.

Dunne, Dunne & Cook, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Marshall Nuckolls, of San Francisco (Monroe B. Kulberg, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

NEEDHAM, Justice pro tem. Christiana G. Reay died in 1925, intestate, leaving three sons—Joseph W., Jr., Wallace, and Charles. At the time of her death there was on deposit in the Mercantile Trust Company of California, in the name of Joseph W. Reay, Jr., approximately $16,000. A claim to this deposit having been made to the bank by one of the heirs, that the same was property belonging to the estate of Christiana G. Reay, the bank brought a suit, making Joseph W. Reay, Jr., Wallace Reay, and Charles Reay defendants, and requiring them to interplead. An interlocutory decree was granted, and the three defendants just named filed cross-complaints and answers. Charles subsequently disclaimed all right to the said sum; Wallace Reay having died during the pendency of the action, his administratrix appeared through Dacia Reay, and it was stipulated at the trial that Dacia Reay might be considered as representing the estate of Christiana G. Reay, inasmuch as the defendant Joseph W. Reay, Jr., was the administrator thereof and made claim to the money in controversy in his individual right. It was admitted that the $16,000 in controversy was what remained of a sum of $25,000 originally deposited in the savings account of Joseph W. Reay, Jr., on June 27, 1921, and was claimed by him to be a gift from his mother, Christiana.

The court found that Joseph W. Reay, Jr., had on deposit in the American Trust Company, the successor of the Mercantile Trust Company of California, the plaintiff, a sum of money amounting to $16,000 with accrued interest, and that the other defendants had made claim to said money; that Joseph W. Reay, Jr., was the owner and entitled to all of said money, together with the interest thereon; and that the defendants other than Joseph W. Reay, Jr., are without any right or claim thereto whatsoever.

The pivotal issue at the trial was whether Joseph W. Reay, Jr., had established his asserted gift to him of the deposit of June 27, 1921, which is the claim in derogation of his mother's title.

The appellant by this appeal contends that the findings in favor of the gift to the respondent of the deposit in question are against the law and the evidence, and, further, that prejudicial error was committed during the trial in rulings upon the admissibility of evidence.

The appellant in her opening brief, after making a brief statement of the facts, consisting of less than three pages, then submits what she denominated an argument consisting of two pages, nearly one-half of which argument or opening brief is occupied with lines containing citations of authorities. As a sample of appellant's argument in her opening brief we quote the following:

"He himself has characterized the transfer —not a gift but a mere deposit; and a deposit, the entire interest on which was payable to his mother as it should accrue." (Supp. pp. 45–47.) Then citing certain authorities.

"That such must have been the case appears from respondent's sworn admissions on the stand. It is likewise demonstrated by the testimony of his own witnesses, called and examined by him." (Supp. pp. 47-55.) Then citing certain authorities, and again: "Refusal in evidence of appellant's Exhibit 'A' for identification constituted prejudicial error." (Supp. pp. 56–62.) Then citing certain authorities.

The above quotations constitute practically all of the opening brief of appellant. There was added as a supplement the pleadings, findings, judgment, and excerpts from the reporter's transcript.

The respondent in his brief in criticism of the opening brief of the appellant states: "We must, therefore, make her points for her; argue her case for her, in effect—and present our answer thereto; or in the alternative, present only our own case, irrespective of appellant's arguments, and go without the privilege of answering appellant's arguments, which, undoubtedly, would be brought forth in a vicious and defenseless attack in appellant's closing brief."

Respondent cites the cases of Duncan v. Ramish, 142 Cal. 686, at pages 689, 690, 76 P. 661; Florence v. Helms, 136 Cal. 612, 69 P. 429; and Kyle v. Craig, 125 Cal. 107, at page 116, 57 P. 791, in which cases our Supreme Court, where appellant's brief was similar to this, refused to consider the points made.

However, as the evidence in the case is quite brief and the appellant urges only three grounds for a reversal—(1) that the findings of the court in favor of a gift are unsupported by the evidence; (2) respondent is bound by his contemporaneous written agreement concerning the deposit; and (3) the refusal in evidence of Appellant's Exhibit A—we will proceed to consider the same.

[1-3] The evidence shows that in March, 1921, Christiana Reay, mother of respondent, informed him in the presence of his wife that if he would start a savings account she would give him some money. The wife of Joseph borrowed $10, which was deposited in the bank the same month by the respondent, and which is corroborated by respondent's passbook. Later the mother asked respondent if he had started a bank account, and he said he had, and she went with him to the bank. The bank records showed a savings account in the name of Joseph W. Reay, Jr., opened March 14, 1921, the initial deposit being the sum of $10. This account was No. 303566 in the bank records. The witness H. L. Fleming, who had charge of the savings department of the Mercantile Trust Company, the predecessor of the American Trust Company, identified, and there was also admitted in evidence, savings account No. 52965, being the account of Christiana G. Reay, respondent's mother, which was opened July 1, 1916, with $75,962.14 in the account, and on February 28, 1921, had grown to the sum of $108,549.02. There was also admitted in evidence savings account No. 303344 in the name of "Mrs. Christiana G. Reay or Joseph W. Reay, Jr. (son)," and which had an entry: "Feb. 28, 1921 Transfer from No. 52965, $25,000.00." This last account shows that the mother had opened account No. 303344 in the name of herself and son, the respondent, and placed therein $25,000, and that amount was in their joint account when she accompanied her son to the bank. This last-numbered account (No. 303344) also has the following entry: "June 27, 1921 Transfer to 303566—$25,000.00." Now account No. 303566, as will be observed, is the account of respondent opened March 14, 1921, with the initial deposit of $10. So it will be observed that the bank records fully and completely corroborate the respondent's testimony.

The respondent testified that when the transfer of the $25,000 was made to his account by the bank employés as directed by his mother, she said to him, "This is for you, Joe, now don't take it and squander that money, try and keep that $25,000 if you can.". Also, "You know how hard money is to get nowadays, it will be kind of nest egg for your old age." The testimony of respondent was also corroborated by the witness Temple, who said he knew Mrs. Christiana Reay about 40 years and she visited him and his wife frequently, and she told him "that she gave Joe $25,000 and had him down to the bank and give him the $25,000 there to be his account." Mrs. Temple also testified that Christiana said to her: "Joe was asking for money, * * * Wallace was having so much * * * that she might as well give Joe some, and she told me she had give Joe the $25,000 he went down to the bank with her." The appellant contends that the evidence of Temple and wife should be disregarded. But the weight of this evidence was primarily for the trial court, and a careful consideration of it leads us to the conclusion that there was no error in that regard.

The gift sought to be upheld here is not a gift causa mortis, but a gift inter vivos, because it occurred June 27, 1921, and the donor did not die until February, 1925. Many of the cases cited by appellant relate to gifts causa mortis, wherein the facts involved are easily distinguished from the case here under discussion.

To make a valid gift there must be an intent on the part of the donor to make the gift, a delivery of the thing given, and an acceptance on the part of the donee. 13 Cal. Jur. 36.

We think, after a careful consideration of all the evidence given before the trial court, that all the findings of the trial court find ample support in the evidence. The evidence shows that, at the time the transfer was made, the account of the donor had in it a sum of over $108,000. It shows that prior to her direction that the sum of $25,000 be transferred to the separate account of her son Joseph W. Reay, Jr., that she had transferred some time theretofore to the joint account of herself and son this identical sum. These actions by the donor furnish ample evidence of the intent of the donor to give to her son this amount of money. It would seem that there is nothing unnatural that a mother having a sum of in excess of $108,000 on deposit should desire to give to a son the sum of $25,000 under such circumstances.

[4] The appellant argues that a certain writing signed by the respondent and apparently given right after the deposit was transferred to his account invalidates the gift. This writing or memorandum was produced by respondent himself and reads as follows: "I hereby give to my mother Christiana G. Reay the interest on $25,000.00 deposited in my name in the Mercantile Trust Bank, Grant Avenue, & O'Farrel Sts. interest to be paid semi-annual, Jan. 1, and July 1st. Joseph W. Reay 235–4th Ave. S. F."

Respondent testified that this written memorandum was written by him at the bank after the transfer of the money was made to his account, and was given by him voluntarily to his mother. It is dated, however, June

29th, two days after the alleged gift, but the date is in ink other than the body of the memorandum. The appellant argues that as the respondent refers to the $25,000 "deposited in my name," and furthermore uses the words "I hereby agree to give my mother * * * the interest on $25,000.00," that this money was a "deposit" and not a "gift." The trial court evidently gave little consideration to this argument. It would seem that when the donor transferred the sum in question to the separate account of the donee, the mere fact that the donee agreed to pay interest upon the sum so transferred would not in any way mitigate against the holding of the trial court that it was intended as a gift. In volume 28, Corpus Juris, on page 647, it states: "Thus a donor may make a valid gift of property, reserving to himself a life interest in, or a life income from, the property given, or dividends, or interest for life on a sum given." See, also, the case of Calkins v. Equitable Building & Loan Association, 126 Cal. 531, on page 535, 59 P. 30, 31, where the court says: "The fact that the donor reserved to himself the right to the dividends during his life did not affect the validity of the gift." This was a case involving a gift by transfer of stock of a corporation, and the court goes on to say: "The donees became the owners of the stock and might have conveyed it away to a third party in the lifetime of the donor, subject to the reservation contained in the written assignment. Of course, the donor did not give away or pass title to the dividends which he had expressly reserved, but every other interest and right in the certificates and in the stock represented thereby passed to the donees."

The testimony here, however, shows, and it was the construction of the trial court as we read the findings, that the promise of the donee to give to the donor the interest on the sum was voluntarily made by the donee. Nowhere does it appear in the evidence that this promise was exacted by the donor. The evidence of Joseph upon this subject was: "I told my mother I would give her the interest on the money that was in the bank, she said all right." It would seem that this act on the part of the donee was susceptible of the construction that it was a return gift by Joseph to his mother, and it is quite evident that this finds support in the evidence.

The case at bar is not analogous to the cases of Paddock v. Fonner (Cal. App.) 258 P. 423, or Knight v. Tripp, 121 Cal. 674, 54 P. 267, cited by appellant. In the instant case there was no agency as there was in the two cases last cited. Here there is no evidence of any instruction given by the donor to the donee as to what should be done with the money given.

[5] The appellant contends that the court erred in refusing to receive in evidence Appellant's Exhibit A. This was a letter written by Norman Hurd, an attorney, dated May 19, 1920, and supposedly written at the request of the donor and complaining that Joseph had been annoying her, and also quite bitterly upbraiding the respondent for certain acts of his, which evidently met with her strong disapproval. This letter was excluded by the court on the grounds that it was too remote, and it will be seen that the letter was written some thirteen months prior to the alleged gift. It was offered as rebuttal evidence to the gift. The letter itself is set forth in full in the record. We think there was no error in the refusal to admit this letter, as it related more to the weight of the evidence rather than to its admissibility. Conceding that the letter should have been admitted, for the sake of argument, we cannot say that a mother's irritation or disapproval of her son's acts would necessarily continue for over a year. Moreover, this assigned error, if any there was, in rejecting the evidence, cannot be held to be prejudicial. It is hardly necessary to cite authorities in support of this view.

There are no other grounds requiring consideration. To sum up: The evidence shows that a mother with over $108,000 on deposit in a bank transferred at the bank to the account of her son the sum of $25,000. She lived some four years after the gift in question was made, during which period the donee had full and complete control of the money so given, and during which time the donee exercised complete dominion over the said sum, checking from the said account over $9,000. We are led irresistibly to the conclusion that the findings of the trial court are amply supported by the evidence.

[6] We have not overlooked the decisions of our higher courts, wherein it is held that "the burden of proving a gift is upon the donee," and that "every element necessary to constitute a gift must be sustained by explicit and convincing evidence." See Sullivan v. Shea, 32 Cal. App. 371, 162 P. 925, and cases cited. We think the donee sustained this burden and furnished the elements necessary to constitute a valid gift. Therefore, this judgment should be and it is hereby affirmed.

HUGHES v. DE MUND. (Civ. 3650.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 21, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 18, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 21, 1929.

1. Appeal and error 🔑80(4)—Interlocutory decree, directing dissolution of partnership and accounting, is not final determination of parties' rights.

An interlocutory decree, dissolving a partnership and decreeing that accounting be had, is not a final determination of the rights of the parties with respect to any of the matters embraced therein.

2. Trial 🔑377(1)—Without consent or waiver, judge erred in making findings on material issues on evidence introduced before another judge who entered interlocutory decree.

Where, after trial before a judge without a jury in suit for dissolution of partnership and for an accounting, court entered interlocutory decree dissolving partnership and decreeing accounting before a referee, held that, in absence of consent or waiver, it was error for another judge, on motions to confirm referee's report and to set it aside, to make findings and decide material issues from evidence introduced before judge who rendered interlocutory decree.

3. Trial 🔑377(1)—That plaintiff, after his objection to consideration of evidence before another judge who made interlocutory decree, relied on parts of transcript, did not waive objection.

Where plaintiff, suing for dissolution of partnership and for accounting, persistently objected to admission, and consideration by trial judge of evidence given before another judge, who entered interlocutory decree dissolving partnership and directing accounting, fact that, after his objection was overruled and court had read from transcript, plaintiff may have read from and relied on parts thereof, did not constitute a waiver of objection.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. O. Moncur and Frank C. Collier, Judges.

Action by Thomas A. Hughes against Mary C. De Mund. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Alfred W. Hare and Charles E. Hobart, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

A. I. McCormick and Hewitt, Ford, McCormick & Crump, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The complaint alleges that the parties are partners in the business of buying and selling real estate; that the partnership property consisted of twenty-one lots described in the complaint; and that the defendant has misapplied and refused to account for moneys belonging to the partnership. The prayer is for a dissolution of the partnership, an accounting, and other relief. The answer denies the allegations of the complaint.

A trial was had before Judge Moncur, judge of the superior court of Plumas county, sitting in the superior court of Los Angeles county. The transcript of the oral testimony introduced at such trial covers 991 pages, and the exhibits cover nearly 200 pages additional. At the end of the hearing, on conflicting evidence, the court found the existence of the partnership and its ownership of the twenty-one lots, as alleged in the complaint, and "that plaintiff is entitled to an interlocutory judgment dissolving said partnership and decreeing that an accounting of the said partnership business be had between plaintiff and defendant, and that upon such accounting being had a final judgment in this action be entered in accordance with the facts found upon such accounting."

An interlocutory decree was thereupon entered, adjudging that the partnership is the owner of the lots described in the complaint, dissolving the partnership and ordering an accounting. Thereafter, on stipulation of the parties, the presiding judge of the superior court of Los Angeles county appointed a referee "to take and state and report to this court the accounting provided for and ordered in the findings and interlocutory decree heretofore entered in this action." The defendant and her witnesses appeared before the referee, and gave testimony showing receipts and disbursements of the parties, but neither the plaintiff nor his counsel participated in the hearing. The referee reported his findings to the court, and thereafter the plaintiff moved the court to set such findings aside, and the defendant moved that the report be confirmed and judgment entered in accordance with the findings of the referee. Both motions came on for hearing before Judge Collier, a judge of the superior court of Los Angeles county. At this hearing the defendant gave oral testimony in relation to the accounts between the parties, and Judge Collier read the testimony taken before Judge Moncur and that given before the referee. At the conclusion of the hearing, the referee's report was by the court "set aside so far as it found the facts and applied the law, and the court, thereupon, itself, took up and considered all of the evidence in said cause," and found that the plaintiff and the defendant are not partners, that none of the lots described in the complaint were "ever at any time, the property of any partnership between plaintiff and defendant"; that the parties, "as a joint adventure purchased" seven of the said lots, and that the plaintiff has no interest in the remainder thereof. In the accounting the court did not take into consideration any of the receipts and disbursements in connection with the fourteen lots found to belong to the defendant. The seven lots found to have been purchased as a joint adventure were ordered to be sold and the proceeds applied in accordance with the rights of the parties as determined by the court on the accounting.

[1] Appellant contends that, "though the interlocutory decree was not final, the findings of fact of Judge Moncur were final on issues therein." If such findings upon any issues are final, then the interlocutory decree must be final upon the same issues, because contradictory conclusions cannot be drawn from a single set of ultimate facts. An interlocutory decree, in a case such as this, "is not to be construed as a final determination of the rights of the parties with respect to any of the matters embraced therein." Doudell v. Shoo, 159 Cal. 448, 454, 114 P. 579, 582; Pomper v. Superior Court, 191 Cal. 494, 496, 216 P. 577; Clement v. Duncan, 191 Cal. 209, 215, 215 P. 1025; Thompson v. White, 76 Cal. 381, 383, 18 P. 399; Gianelli v. Briscoe, 40 Cal. App. 532, 536, 181 P. 105. The defendant gave notice of appeal from the interlocutory decree in this case, and the attempted appeal was dismissed on the ground that such decree is not final and, therefore, not appealable. Hughes v. De Mund, 70 Cal. App. 265, 267, 233 P. 93. In Welch v. Alcott, 185 Cal. 731, 761, 198 P. 626, it was held that, in a suit for the dissolution of a partnership, it is not necessary even to make findings of fact prior to the taking of an account.

[2] In the absence of consent or waiver, it was error for Judge Collier to make findings and decide material issues from the evidence introduced before Judge Moncur. "A party litigant is entitled to a decision upon the facts of his case from the judge who hears the evidence, where the matter is tried without a jury." Guardianship of Sullivan, 143 Cal. 462, 467, 77 P. 153, 155. "Where a case is tried by the judge, and the issues remain undetermined by him, his successor cannot decide, or make findings in the case, without a trial de novo, and consequently he cannot, in such a case, render a valid judgment or decree in the cause, notwithstanding the testimony may have been written down and preserved." 33 C. J. 973. In the case of In re Williams, 52 Cal. App. 566, 568, 199 P. 347, 348, in an opinion written by Mr. Justice Richards, it is said: "While it is true that preliminary examinations of persons accused of crime * * * are usually less formal in matters of procedure than would be required upon the trial of the cause, it cannot be held that the essential principles of procedure and of evidence may be departed from by committing magistrates in the conduct of such examinations. * * * The magistrate who is to make the order either discharging the defendant or holding him to answer upon the charge must base that order upon evidence which he has admitted and upon testimony which he has heard in the usual way in which such evidence is presented and such testimony taken. He has no right to predicate his said order upon something which has not occurred before him; upon evidence the admissibility of which he has not passed upon, and upon testimony the weight and value of which he has not measured by the appearance, the narration and the manner of testifying of the witnesses present in person before him."

[3] The final findings, signed by Judge Collier, recite: "Both plaintiff and defendant were present in court during said final hearing and the conduct of each of said parties was observed by said court." The defendant gave testimony at the final hearing, but the plaintiff did not. Four witnesses other than the parties testified before Judge Moncur; the testimony of at least one of them being important upon the issue of whether the parties were partners. A mere view of a witness would be a poor substitute for the observation of the attitude and demeanor of the witness while under examination and his manner of testifying.

The findings also recite: "Both of said transcripts of evidence," the evidence taken before Judge Moncur and that given before the referee, "were offered, read from and relied upon by both plaintiff and defendant." The transcript of the proceedings at the final hearing show that the plaintiff persistently objected to the admission and consideration by Judge Collier of the evidence given before Judge Moncur as a basis of final findings. That the objection was understood is apparent from a reference by the court, during argument of the objection, to the practice, "on motion for a new trial, for one judge who did not hear the evidence at all, to pass on those motions" and "on the sufficiency or insufficiency of the evidence." The plaintiff's objection was finally overruled, and the court announced that the evidence taken before Judge Moncur would be considered, together with that given before the referee and at the final hearing and findings made therefrom. Thereupon the parties stipulated that Judge Collier might "take the transcript and read it, rather than read it in open court." The record fails to show that the plaintiff "offered" any part of the transcript of the evidence given before Judge Moncur, and the fact that, after his objection thereto was overruled and the court had read the transcript, the plaintiff may have "read from and relied upon" parts thereof, does not constitute a waiver of the objection.

It is true, as suggested by the trial court, that a judge who has not presided at the trial of an action may hear and determine a motion for a new trial, made on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence, and, in doing so, may weigh the evidence and decide according to the preponderance thereof. If the motion is denied, however, an appeal may be taken from the original judgment, rendered by a judge who heard the evidence. If a new trial is granted, the case will be decided again by a judge who hears the evidence. But in this case the judgment was rendered by a judge who did not hear the greater and more important part of the evidence.

No useful purpose would be served by passing on the questions arising out of the accounting which was had, because there can be no proper accounting until it has first been determined whether a partnership exists between the parties and what properly belongs to the partnership.

SPORE v. WASHINGTON. (Civ. 6524.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 21, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 20, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 21, 1929.

1. Landlord and tenant 🔑169(3)—Complaint, in action against owner of building, for injuries to coal company employee, by reason of defective walk, stated cause of action against general demurrer.

Complaint, in action against owner of building, to recover for injuries to coal company employee, by reason of defective walk along building, held to sufficiently allege defendant's ownership and possession of premises to state a cause of action as against general demurrer.

2. Landlord and tenant 🔑167(1)—Landlord, leasing building to individual tenants, has duty of using ordinary care to avoid injuries to those visiting premises.

Where building is let in flats or offices or otherwise leased to individual tenants, the landlord owes duty to those visiting premises and entering passageways to visit a tenant, or at his invitation, express or implied, to use ordinary care to avoid injuring them, as they are invitees of both landlord and tenant.

3. Landlord and tenant 🔑167(1)—Landlord, letting portions of building to separate tenants, must use reasonable care to see that portions retained under his control are safe.

Landlord, letting portions of building to separate tenants, and retaining other portions under his control, is under responsibility of general owner of real estate who holds out general invitation to others to enter upon and use his property, and is bound to see that reasonable care is exercised to have portion retained by him reasonably safe and fit for uses which he has invited others to make of it.

4. Pleading 🔑12—Less particularity is required in complaint stating facts as to which defendant has full information.

Less particularity is required in allegations of complaint, where the facts stated therein are such that defendant has full information concerning their nature and relation to them.

5. Pleading 🔑34(7)—Court need not discard every meaning of words or phrases, but one that would render allegation ineffectual (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Where words or phrases of complaint are susceptible of different meanings, court will not discard every meaning, but one that would render ineffectual the allegation, in that rule, that pleadings are to be construed most strongly against pleader, must yield to basic rule found, in substance, in Const. art. 6, § 4½.

6. Landlord and tenant 🔑169(11)—Owner's negligence, in maintaining walk along building, held, as respected injury to coal company employee, for jury.

In action against owner of premises, to recover for injuries to coal company employee, by reason of defective walk along building, evidence, relative to owner's negligence in maintaining walk, held sufficient for submission to jury.

7. Negligence 🔑1—"Negligence" imparts lack of care.

"Negligence" in its last analysis imparts a lack of care.

Question, as to whether owner of building has exercised ordinary care in maintaining board walk along side of building, is one for the jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Warren V. Tryon, Judge.

Action by Ernest Spore against Alice B. Washington and others. Judgment for plaintiff against defendant named, and such defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Thornton Wilson, of Oakland (P. R. Lund, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Skinner & Friedman, of Oakland, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The action was instituted by plaintiff to recover damages resultant from personal injuries sustained by him.

At the outset the action was against appellant and others. At the trial a judgment of nonsuit was ordered as to the remaining defendants, and the case proceeded, and judgment was entered against appellant alone. The case was tried by a jury. In setting forth such of the facts as may be necessary, we will avoid all reference to any of the original defendants and treat the case throughout as against the appealing defendant.

Appellant was the owner of a certain building in the city of Oakland. This building was of more than one story. The upper stories were leased for apartment house purposes and such business actually carried on therein.

The ground floor was leased to different tenants, each of whom was engaged in separate and individual business. Running along the back of the building was a board walk, which walk extended from the front to the rear of the apartment house. Several of the rooms or stores on the main floor had back doors leading to the board walk, and the tenants used these doors, and the walk was used by all of these tenants. The board walk consisted of two joists or stringers, running parallel with the rear of the building, upon which joists or stringers boards about 4 inches wide were nailed at right angles. The walk was 3 feet wide, and the boards were laid approximately ½ inch apart. At the end of this walk was a coalroom or coal bin for the storage of fuel.

On the day in question here the plaintiff was employed by a wood and coal company, and the nature of his employment was the delivery of coal. When a customer ordered coal, the same was delivered by a truck accompanied by men to unload. On the occasion, coal was ordered by the tenants occupying the apartment house, being the upper stories of the building owned by appellant. The amount ordered was 15 tons and came in 100-pound sacks. Plaintiff was one of the men accompanying the truck, and his work was to carry in the coal to the bin described, pursuant to the directions of the keeper of the apartment house.

In reaching this bin it was necessary for plaintiff to use the board walk described. He had carried in a number of sacks, the testimony showing that approximately two-thirds of the load had been delivered when the accident occurred; in the work he was assisted by three other men. According to the testimony, the accident happened in the manner now described. After many trips over the walk, nothing unusual happening, or no defect in the walk observed or observable, plaintiff was carrying on his back another sack. In walking along he placed his foot down upon a loose board. According to plaintiff's testimony, uncontradicted, one foot landed just on the edge of the loose board, causing the board to tilt up almost vertical, and continuing his step the other foot tripped over the board, throwing plaintiff to the ground, with the sack of coal coming down on him in the fall, thereby sustaining the injuries complained of. There is no question raised as to the damage, the only question going to the liability of defendant.

[1] The appellant, from the commencement of the action, has contended, and now contends, that the complaint does not state a cause of action against her. She has stoutly maintained this position throughout, urging it at every stage of the proceedings. Therefore, we will first take up the question. The complaint alleges that defendant Alice B. Washington, at all times herein mentioned was the owner, and that certain other defendants named were the tenants in possession, managers, and occupants of the land and building described. Then, continuous in the same paragraph, the complaint sets forth the particular portion of the building in the possession of each tenant.

It is there alleged substantially as follows, omitting formal clauses and epitomizing the facts: That at all of the times herein mentioned defendants, and each of them, caused to be constructed and maintained upon said land a board walk about 50 feet long, and constructed and made of a series of boards, each of which was about 6 inches wide and 42 inches long; that said board walk was so constructed and maintained by defendant for the purpose of ingress and egress to and from the rear of said apartment house and said store for the use of tradesmen and persons delivering goods, wares, merchandise, fuel, and provisions to said building, and, at all of the times herein mentioned, tradesmen and persons delivering goods, fuel, etc., to said building were invited and requested by defendants to use, traverse, walk upon said board walk.

That at all times mentioned defendants held and represented to tradesmen and persons delivering goods, fuel, etc., to said building that said board walk was, and constituted, a fit, proper, and safe place to use, walk upon, and walk over as a means of ingress and egress to and from the rear of the said building.

That on the 25th day of September, 1925, and for some time prior thereto, defendants carelessly and negligently maintained said board walk and permitted said board walk to remain, exist, and be in a dangerous, improper and unfit state and condition to use, traverse, walk upon, and walk over, by reason of the fact that one of the boards or planks of said board walk was loose and not nailed down to the runners or beams underneath the boards of said board walk, and said board would slip and fall and become dislodged from its place if stepped upon, and that said loose board was on September 25, 1925, in its proper place in said walk, and apparently nailed down and secure, and that there was no sign or warning in or about said board walk or said land or building on the premises thereof to warn persons of the said board walk.

The remaining portions of the complaint set forth the occurrence of the accident and the injuries sustained and damage suffered, and it is not necessary that these be dealt with here. The demurrer was general.

The argument of appellant is that the complaint does not allege that Alice B. Washington owned the premises at the time they were constructed, or at the time they were leased, and there is no allegation that she was in possession of any part of the premises at the time of the accident, either exclusively or jointly with her tenants or otherwise, nor is there any allegation that she was under any contractual duty to keep the premises repaired.

To our minds there is little merit in the contention. True, the complaint states that the tenants named were in possession of the land and buildings, but immediately thereafter, and in unbroken sequence, are the allegations showing the extent of the tenants' possession and the particular portion of the premises so possessed. The complaint alleged in sufficiently plain language that the defendant owner constructed and maintained the board walk, and pointed out that, by permitting the unsafe condition alleged, the construction and maintenance was negligent and careless and so characterized. The complaint further alleged that the walk was at all times maintained by defendant owner and the tenants for purposes common to all the tenants, namely, ingress and egress for tradesmen and delivery agents or employees. Appellant cites many cases unnecessary to review here. The general rule as stated, and upon which both appellant and respondent agree, in the main, may be stated.

[2] Where a building is let in flats or offices, or otherwise leased to individual tenants between whom no privity exists, the hallways, entrances, stairways, or other fixtures not being demised to the tenants or any particular tenant, but used in common by all, the landlord owes a duty to those visiting the premises and entering such passageways to visit a tenant, or at his invitation, express or implied, to use ordinary care to avoid injuring them, as they are invitees of both landlord and tenant. 15 Cal. Jur. 741.

[3, 4] A landlord letting portions of a building to separate tenants, retaining other portions under his control, is under the responsibility of a general owner of real estate who holds out a general invitation to others to enter upon and use his property, and is bound to see that reasonable care is exercised to have the portion thus retained by him reasonably safe and fit for the uses which he has invited others to make of them. 10 Ruling Case Law, 1037, and Supplement vol. 7; 43 A. L. R. 1273. In Siggins v. McGill, 72 N. J. Law, 263, 62 A. 411, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 316, 111 Am. St. Rep. 666, Justice Pitney describes the possession of the landlord in these instances as a legal possession, which aptly characterizes the same. Tested by the rule, we think the complaint stated a cause of action. It might be that isolated phrases, here or there, to an extent negatived other specific allegations, or that specific allegation would have more clearly pointed out the liability contended for. As against a general demurrer, the complaint was sufficient. Less particularity is required in the allegations of a complaint where, as here, the facts in it stated are such that the defendant, their nature and her relation to them, has full information concerning them. Goldstein v. Healy, 187 Cal. 212, 201 P. 462.

The record before us shows that issue was joined by answer, and a trial on the merits followed. It was shown and admitted that none of the tenants had exclusive possession of this board walk, and that the walk was not demised to any tenant, but remained under the control of the defendant owner appurtenant to the entire holding, and used as a common walk. The issue before the jury was defendant's knowledge or lack of knowledge of the condition of the walk and her exercise of ordinary care in the premises, under the law as given to the jury by the court. Not one single complaint is made of any instruction, and we, therefore, assume that the jury were fully and fairly instructed as to the law applicable to the issues submitted to them. Not a single objection or exception is urged as to the trial court's rulings on the admission or rejection of evidence.

[5] Under all of these conditions we do not feel that even a semblance of justice may be maintained in going back to the complaint in a willful endeavor to try and find some possible construction that might force a holding that no cause of action was stated. Where words or phrases are susceptible of different meanings, we are not to discard every meaning but the one that would render ineffectual the allegation. The oft-quoted rule, that pleadings are to be construed most strongly against the pleader, must yield to the basic rule underlying all cases and as, in substance, found in the constitutional provision, article 6, § 4½, state Constitution.

[6] Appellant next urges that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the judgment. This contention is presented in many ways; in a motion for nonsuit and in a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and also in a motion for a directed verdict.

In whatever form presented, it comes back to the same question, the sufficiency of the evidence. As stated, there is no issue on the ownership of the building. The evidence sufficiently shows, with no substantial conflict, that the walk in question was not demised to any particular tenant, but was a common walk or passageway, as the term is used in the rule previously announced. Without further recital of the testimony, we may take up the specification of appellant as to wherein the evidence is insufficient.

Quoting from appellant's briefs: "Where stairways, passages, walks, etc., are reserved upon premises for the use of two or more tenants and not demised to either or any of them, and in the absence of any special agreement to the contrary, the law presumes them to be in the possession and under the control of the landlord. We make no contention to the contrary, and it is also freely admitted that responsibility for accidents to persons lawfully upon such portions of the premises is placed upon the landlord, provided, however, that such accidents are proximately caused through the negligence that is want of ordinary care of the landlord."

And so her argument, as it is presented to us, reads: "In the absence of knowledge either actual or constructive, no negligence on the part of appellant has been shown upon which a recovery can be based."

Then we are brought to the only issue presented in this branch of the case, the negligence of appellant.

The appellant had owned the premises since a time preceding 1922. She had never been in the premises to inspect the same between 1922 and the date of the accident. It was her testimony that one of the tenants was recommended to her as a handy man, who would keep the premises in repair and in good condition. The record discloses no contract in this respect, nor any compensation received. As a matter of fact the owner did not know anything about the walk or its condition or state of repair. She had an agent named Ray to whom had been intrusted the duty of inspection and report. As far as the record discloses, no person, tenant, agent, or owner knew of the defect in the walk, nor did plaintiff perceive the defect until after many trips had been made by himself and his colaborer. In fact, no one discovered or had actual knowledge of the defect until after the accident. No contributory or other negligence is shown on the part of the plaintiff. The jury had before them a photograph of the premises showing the walk. This was admitted, for the reason that it portrayed the exact condition of the walk, and to all intents and purposes was the equivalent of an examination of the premises. The agent Ray testified that he was the manager of the property since 1923, and was frequently upon the premises, sometimes four or five times a month, and sometimes not in two months, depending upon circumstances. During the months preceding the accident he was there about once a month, and about the 10th of the month of the accident, which occurred September 25, 1925. He never heard of the accident until some eight months after. He never saw any defect in the walk, and, as far as his observation went, the boards were always in position. There is no evidence of any inspection by him or under his direction, nor is there evidence of his deputing this duty of inspection.

[7, 8] The appellant in urging the lack of showing of any negligence points with great confidence to the fact that the board walk had been used for many years without disclosing defect or causing injury. This is rather a weak subject. There are many things which do not improve with age, but, on the contrary, deteriorate and weaken; amongst these are wooden sidewalks, and the fact, that a walk of this character had been for many years almost on the ground, exposed to the rotting dampness below and the elements on the surface, would not be a guaranty of its strength or fitness. Negligence in its last analysis imparts a lack of care, and both care and negligence are relative to duty. As stated in the rule, those using the common walk were invitees of the owner. The owner would be liable to the invitee for her mere failure to use ordinary care for his safety. Brown v. Pepperdine, 53 Cal. App. 336, 200 P. 36. It was the duty of the owner, having control of the board walk, to use all reasonable means to make that walk safe for any one lawfully using the same at the invitation, express or implied, of the owner. Foley v. Hornung, 35 Cal. App. 312, 169 P. 705. This duty was either performed or it was not. Appellant contends that the duty was fulfilled by simply letting the walk remain without any effort to ascertain its true condition, on the novel theory, perhaps, that it is presumed that a board walk is sound and safe up to the time one of the boards breaks forth in mutiny and injures one passing over it. We are familiar with the rule applied to the case of one haboring a vicious dog, which rule has been announced as, "every dog is entitled to one bite." We see no analogy so striking as to cause the rule to be adapted in different phraseology to meet the situation here.

[9] The walk itself in its entire length was visible to any one. It contained comparatively few boards; no part of it was concealed so as to make inspection difficult or dangerous. The boards lay practically on the ground, though presumably nailed to the joists or stringers. It is a matter of common knowledge that all boards exposed to the weather react to climatic conditions and changes. Any person of ordinary intelligence realizes that wood expands and shrinks, and that, likewise, nails or other metals also react to the laws of heat and cold. The expansion and contraction of wood and metal are not compensatory, resulting in loose nails in boards. These loose nails will work out and often do, leaving the board in just such a condition as we find the one here. These are matters of such ordinary knowledge that it cannot be held that one upon whom devolves the duty of maintaining and keeping safe an exposed board walk has performed that duty by neglecting the walk entirely.

In 36 Corpus Juris, p. 220, we find: "Actual knowledge of a defection is not necessary but it is sufficient that the landlord could have learned of the same by the exercise of reasonable care." In Capwell v. Blake, 9 Cal. App. 111, 98 P. 51, the rule is announced that, where the landlord or owner has control of a portion of the premises by implication, he undertakes to exercise that control as to inflict no injury upon his tenants. If he does not exercise common care and prudence in the management and oversight of that portion of the premises which belongs to his care, and damages are sustained by a tenant, he becomes liable to him. This rule has its full application to the invitee of the tenant. Harkin v. Crumbie, 14 Misc. Rep. 439, 35 N. Y. S. 1027; 1 Tiffany on Landlord and Tenant, p. 628. In Davis v. Pacific Power Co., 107 Cal. 574, 40 P. 952, 48 Am. St. Rep. 156, it is said: "Where the landlord retains or has control of a portion of leased premises the responsibility rests with him to see that no injury results to those having rights there by reason of the manner in which such portion of the premises is occupied or used; and, if he puts dangerous machinery thereon, it is his duty to fence it, or use other proper means to protect those rightly in its vicinity."

The principle is the same in the instant case. We have before us, as a part of the record, the photographs of the board walk in question. It is apparent that this walk is weather-beaten and worn. The boards show signs of great deterioration and disintegration, and a view of the board walk as thus depicted would support a strong presumption that it was being permitted to rot along with a general decay.

[10, 11] We are not holding that the owner was an insurer, as no such question arises. We affirm the general doctrine that he is chargeable with only ordinary care. But we do hold that the question, as to whether or not he has exercised ordinary care, is one for the jury.

From the facts adduced, the jury might easily have concluded that the slightest inspection would have disclosed the conditions actually existing. And, finding no discovery, they might, and obviously did, find no inspection. We are at a loss to determine how an owner can assert care and circumspection by proof only of a total failure to act at all, particularly where an affirmative duty is fastened upon him. In Wile v. Los Angeles Co., 2 Cal. App. 190, 83 P. 271, it is aptly said: "The fact that this manager did not know who placed these boards there might have led the jury to infer that he did not want to know." While the facts in that case need not be detailed, the same thought may have been with the jury in this trial. Finally, it may properly be here stated that the owner of premises, inducing tenants to aid and further his investment, is distinctly benefited by reserving to himself the control of common walks and passageways. Thereby he affords convenience to his property, which enhances the rental value, and retains himself the power of preventing one tenant from depriving another of equal facilities for use of the demised premises.

By securing this right, he accepts the burdens that go with it, and, if he chooses to let the property look after itself, trusting to good fortune to protect those who use the premises, he must be prepared to accept the results when this good fortune abates or takes a turn for the worse.

There was some evidence of a circumstantial nature to show that some third person might have loosened the board without the knowledge of the owner. The sum total of the evidence thus adduced amounted to nothing more than the establishment of a probability, and its probative force was for the jury.

Judgment affirmed.

TRACY-WALDRON FRUIT CO. v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. (Civ. 6539.) ★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 24, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 23, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 25, 1929.

Appeal and error 🔑1008(1)—Court's conclusion from contracts between parties that carrier's payments for disputed negligent delivery of perishables should settle shipper's claims must be upheld (Interstate Commerce Act, § 20, as amended; 49 USCA § 20(11).

Trial court's conclusion from negotiations, oral and written, between shipper and carrier that payments by carrier for disputed negligent delivery of grape and vegetable shipments, of less than value of goods as prohibited by Interstate Commerce Act, § 20, as amended by Act June 29, 1906, Act March 4, 1915, Act Aug. 9, 1916 (49 USCA § 20(11), should settle and compromise shipper's claims therefor, must be upheld, in absence of evidence otherwise.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Action by the Tracy-Waldron Fruit Company against the Southern Pacific Company. Judgment adverse to plaintiff, and it appeals. Affirmed.

PER CURIAM. The plaintiff, a shipper of perishable fruits and vegetables, brought this action against defendant carrier to recover for damage to fifteen separate shipments; each shipment being a carload of grapes or vegetables, and the damage to each carload constituting a separate cause of action.

The shipments originated between October 1 and December 1, 1922, on the railroad line of defendant in California, and each was billed and transported to a point upon some connecting carrier in another state. The defendant with its connecting carriers maintained schedules for the transportation to its destination of freight such as that contained in said shipments; these being reasonable for the time required therefor under ordinary conditions. The shipments were delivered to the defendant in good condition, and for each was issued to the plaintiff a bill of lading. These the plaintiff held until surrendered to the defendant with its written claims for the damage caused by delays in transit beyond the scheduled time and due to which the plaintiff received from the sale of the freight shipped less than it would had the shipments been moved according to schedule. Each bill of lading contained the following clause: "Except in case of negligence of the carrier or party in possession (and the burden to prove freedom from such negligence shall be on the carrier or party in possession) the carrier or party in possession shall not be liable for loss, damage or delay while the property is stopped and held in transit upon the request of the shipper, owner or party entitled to make such request, or resulting from a defect or vice in the property, or for country damage to cotton, or from riots or strikes."

The defendant claimed that the delays were not due to negligence but to a strike of its employees and those of connecting carriers, and that the losses claimed by the plaintiff were therefore not actionable because of the strike clause in the bills of lading; that it and its connecting carriers at all times insisted in good faith upon the validity and merits of their defense under the above clause, but that nevertheless, after the claims here involved were presented, offered to settle these and all claims of shippers of perishable fruits and vegetables during the strike for 50 per cent. of the loss due to the delay; and that the plaintiff with other shippers accepted the offer, settled their claims accordingly, and gave to the defendant receipts in full therefor.

The complaint in each of its causes of action sought to recover the difference between the amount paid by the defendant and the amount claimed as the damage due to the delay.

The findings made by the trial court are voluminous and need not be quoted in full; the portions material here being as follows:

"IX. On the 1st day of July, 1922, a general strike was instituted by the employees employed in the railroad shops of the defendant and of all carriers over whose railroad lines said shipments or any of them moved, and of all other railroad carriers in the United States, and on said 1st day of July, 1922, more than one-half of said employees voluntarily quit and did not resume their employment. That said strike caused impairment of the efficiency of the locomotives used by said carriers and of the efficiency of their shop forces and caused congestion at their principal terminals and a general slowing down of their transportation service. That said strike was accompanied by violence and intimidation by strikers and their sympathizers. That said strike and the said conditions resulting therefrom lasted from said July 1, 1922, until after the movement and delivery of the shipments made by plaintiff. That said strike was a matter of general notoriety and public comment. That many thousands of claims for damages due to delay of perishable shipments that moved during the last six months of the year 1922 over the railroads of the defendant and the railroad carriers over whose railroad lines plaintiff's shipments moved were made by the owners of said shipments against defendant and the railroads over whose lines plaintiff's shipments moved, and that defendant and said railroads in good faith claimed and asserted to said claimants, including the plaintiff, that all of the delay and delay coupled with improper protective service that occurred to the shipments embraced in said claims, including plaintiff's claims during the last six months of 1922, was due and attributable to said strike, and not to any negligence or failure of duty by any railroad carrier, and also claimed that therefore, pursuant to said bill of lading provision that carriers should not be liable for loss, damage or delay resulting from strikes, said carriers were not liable for all or any portion of any damages sustained by delay of perishable shipments, including plaintiff's perishable shipments over said normal schedules of said carriers during the last six months of the year 1922, or for any damages caused by such delay coupled with improper protective service.

"That said claims of defendant and said other carriers respecting the effect of said strike were disputed by plaintiff and the validity of said claims by said railroad carriers respecting said strike was a matter in dispute between plaintiff and defendant at all times during the negotiations between them that preceded the settlements hereinafter found to have been made.

"That the evidence does not show that any car shipped as aforesaid by plaintiff was actually delayed in transit by violence or intimidation accompanying said strike or that the locomotive engine or engines that hauled such car were in unfit or deteriorated condition because of said strike, nor does the evidence identify any car shipped by plaintiff as having been actually delayed by said strike.

"X. That the defendant and its connecting carriers, including the carriers over whose railroad lines plaintiff's shipments moved, and other carriers affected by said strike endeavored to arrive at an agreement among themselves as to the basis upon which they would make offers of settlement of claims on shipments of fresh fruit and fresh vegetables moving between July 1, 1922, and December 31, 1922, over their respective lines of railroad during the period when it was claimed by them that any delay in the movement of such shipments was attributable to said strike and was excused by the bill of lading provision relieving carriers from liability for loss, damage or delay caused by strikes.

"That said carriers on the 23rd day of March, 1923, reached an agreement among themselves as to such basis, which agreement was in writing and was as follows:

" 'Chicago, March 23rd, 1923.

" 'Basis for disposition of claims on shipments of fresh fruit and fresh vegetables only, moving between July 1st, 1922, and December 31st, 1922, inclusive, agreed to by the railroads listed below:

" 'First: Claims for loss or damage resulting directly from acts of violence or intimidation, causing interruption of traffic, when such facts can be conclusively proven, shall be disallowed.

" 'Second: Claims for verified loss and damage, other than for delay, due solely to carriers' negligence, shall be disposed of as heretofore.

" 'Third: Loss and damage claims (not covered by paragraphs 1 and 2) on shipments moving between July 1st, 1922, and December 31, 1922, inclusive, where the only factors to be considered are those of delay in transit, or delay combining with improper protective service, will be settled on the basis of not to exceed fifty (50%) per cent of the proven loss of damage, where the delay caused the missing of the first market after the market for which intended, under participating carriers' normal schedules.'

"The said terms of said agreement of March 23, 1923, were thereupon communicated in writing by defendant to plaintiff, and defendant offered to settle and compromise with plaintiff all claims plaintiff had or might have on account of shipments of the character and during the period described in said agreement where defendant was the originating carrier, which claims embraced the claims described in the tabulation set forth in Finding III hereof.

"Defendant did not at any time admit that any delay to any of said shipments was caused otherwise than by said strike or was caused by the negligence or want of care of defendant or any of the railroads over whose lines said shipments moved, and at all times asserted that it and all carriers over whose lines said shipments moved had a good and valid defense to said delay and to any claim on account thereof or arising therefrom, directly or indirectly, and that said defense was based on said strike clause in said bill of lading and on the actual existence of said strike conditions and the consequent effect thereof.

"XI. Following the communication of said written basis of settlement by said defendant to said plaintiff, duly authorized representatives of said plaintiff and said defendant met and considered and discussed each of said claims described in the foregoing tabulation, and at the end of said discussion arrived at an amount which said plaintiff was willing to accept and receive in such compromise and settlement in full and on account of the claim as to which said amount was at any time due. The arrival at said amount was in strict accordance with the bases of settlement described in said agreement of March 23, 1923, set forth in Finding X hereof. * * * On said date on which each of said amounts was so arrived at there was endorsed on each claim a written statement that it was amended to the amount so arrived at, and the plaintiff executed such endorsement.

"XII. * * * In each case the defendant delivered to the plaintiff on said date of payment a written instrument signed by defendant's duly authorized officials.

"The instrument representing the claim sued upon in plaintiff's first cause of action was in words and figures as follows:

" 'Expense voucher payable. Standard form 219.

" 'Southern Pacific Company Pacific System
" 'Dept. No. 16052

" 'San Francisco, California, June 27, 1923.

" 'Registered in June 1923.

" 'To Tracy-Waldron Fruit Company, 510 Battery street, San Francisco, Calif., Dr.

" 'For all loss and damage on shipments Claim Agent.

" 'The above account has been examined, of deciduous fruit (grapes) 10/7/22.

" 'Clm'ts bill dated 1/23/23. No. 1874-18. Amended 6/22/23.

" 'I hereby certify that the above account is correct. E. M. Bridgman, for Freight found correct and registered.—E. V. Randol, for Auditor Misc. Accounts.

" 'Approved—E. W. Clapp, for Freight Traffic Manager.

" 'Approved for payment—W. H. Dick, for the Auditor.

" 'When signed by the Assistant-Treasurer or his duly authorized representative and properly endorsed by payee this voucher becomes a sight draft for nine hundred sixty-six and 97/100 dollars, $966.97, in full settlement of above account and is payable at the office of Assistant-Treasurer Southern Pacific Company—Pacific System, San Francisco.

" 'H. G. Bligh, for Assistant Treasurer.

" 'San Francisco, Calif.'

"On the back of the instrument was printed the following:

" 'Endorse here. This voucher is endorsed as an acknowledgment of the receipt of payment in full on account as stated within.

" '————, Payee.'

"And the plaintiff endorsed the instrument: 'Tracy-Waldron Fruit Company, by J. R. Bordeaux.'

"The instruments delivered by defendant to plaintiff for each of the other accounts * * * were identical in form with the instrument hereinbefore set forth, and in substance each of them described the claim of which it was in payment. * * * The plaintiff endorsed each of said instruments in the manner in which it, as aforesaid, endorsed the instrument hereinbefore set forth at length, and the plaintiff did on or about the date of each of said instruments receive from the defendant in cash the amount therein specified * * * and did retain said amount and has never returned the same or any part thereof, or offered to return the same or any part thereof, to defendant, and did not until the institution of this action question the force and effect of any of said vouchers.

"XIII. That said amounts were not nor was any of them paid to plaintiff by defendant on account of the claim described in the voucher by which such amount was paid, but said amounts were, and each of them was, paid to plaintiff by defendant and accepted by defendant as and for a full payment and settlement of plaintiff's claim, as stated in such voucher. That defendant has not wrongfully or at all retained from plaintiff the sum specified in each of plaintiff's separately stated causes of action, or any sum whatever, and that plaintiff is not entitled to recover interest from any date on any amount or at any rate."

The court further found that the sums so paid by defendant to plaintiff were accepted by the latter in full satisfaction and discharge of its claims, and that said claims would and should be settled and compromised by such payments.

Appellant bases its right to recover upon section 20 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended June 29, 1906, March 4, 1915, and August 9, 1916 (49 USCA § 20 [11]), which, so far as material, provides:

"(11) That any common carrier, railroad, or transportation company subject to the provisions of this act receiving property for transportation from a point in one state or territory or the District of Columbia to a point in another state, territory, District of Columbia, or from any point in the United States to a point in an adjacent foreign country shall issue a receipt or bill of lading therefor, and shall be liable to the lawful holder thereof for any loss, damage, or injury to such property, caused by it or by any common carrier, railroad, or transportation company to which such property may be delivered or over whose line or lines such property may pass within the United States or within an adjacent foreign country when transported on a through bill of lading, and no contract, receipt, rule, regulation, or other limitation of any character whatsoever, shall exempt such common carrier, railroad, or transportation company from the liability hereby imposed; and any such common carrier, railroad, or transportation company so receiving property for transportation from a point in one state, territory, or the District of Columbia to a point in another state or territory, or from a point in a state or territory to a point in the District of Columbia, or from any point in the United States to a point in an adjacent foreign country, or for transportation wholly within a territory shall be liable to the lawful holder of said receipt, or bill of lading or to any party entitled to recover thereon, whether such receipt or bill of lading has been issued or not, for the full actual loss, damage, or injury to such property caused by it or by any such common carrier, railroad, or transportation company to which such property may be delivered or over whose line or lines such property may pass within the United States or within an adjacent foreign country when transported on a through bill of lading, notwithstanding any limitation of liability or limitation of the amount of recovery or representation or agreement as to value in any such receipt or bill of lading, or in any contract, rule, regulation, or in any tariff filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission; and any such limitation, without respect to the manner or form in which it is sought to be made is declared to be unlawful and void. * * *"

It is not appellant's contention that the strike clause in the bill of lading was invalid, or that the act renders illegal attempts to compromise claims for damage to interstate shipments based upon the alleged negligence of the carrier where such negligence is denied and the facts would otherwise constitute as between the parties a valid accord and satisfaction; nor, in our opinion, would the language of the act reasonably support such an interpretation. It is claimed, however, that negligence was in effect admitted by the agreement between the carriers set out in finding X above, but notwithstanding it declared its intention to pay and paid but 50 per cent. of the loss caused thereby, and that payment of less than the full actual loss or injury to the property shipped was by the Interstate Commerce Act forbidden.

Whatever the effect of the payments, had the same been made as claimed, such was not the conclusion which the trial court drew from the negotiations, oral and written, between the parties, and we cannot say that it erred in this respect. Under such circumstances the construction given thereto by the trial court must be upheld.

Euless v. Westphal, 71 Cal. App. 611, 235 P. 742; Manley v. Pacific Mill & Timber Co., 79 Cal. App. 641, 250 P. 710; Slama Tire, etc., Co. v. Ritchie, 31 Cal. App. 555, 161 P. 25. Moreover, the above findings are supported by direct testimony, which the court believed, that the alleged negligence and liability of the carrier was at all times in dispute between the parties, and that the payments were made and received as a compromise and settlement of the claims.

The findings of the court are fully supported by the evidence, and the judgment is accordingly affirmed.

COAST COUNTIES REAL ESTATE & INVESTMENT CO. v. MONTEREY COUNTY WATER WORKS. (Civ. 6525.)★

Rehearing Denied Feb. 13, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 14, 1929.

1. Waters and water courses 🔑188(2)—Company furnishing water to certain localities of county was quasi public corporation (Const. art. 14, § 1).

Water company, engaged in business of furnishing water to certain localities in county, was performing public service, under Const. art. 14, § 1, and therefore occupied position of quasi public corporation.

2. Waters and water courses 🔑194—Company supplying water is under duty to extend service only on reasonable demand, where extension can be reasonably made (Const. art. 14, § 1).

Water company, engaged in business of furnishing water for inhabitants of community, under Const. art. 14, § 1, is not obliged to supply any number of inhabitants of municipality on demand, but is charged with public duty of furnishing water, where there is a reasonable demand for it and reasonable extension of service can be made to meet the demand, such that water company will be compensated for its expenditure.

3. Waters and water courses 🔑193—Company furnishing water under gravity system was required to supply customers located above gravity line by installing new high pressure system, on filing of bond or deposit for its protection (Const. art. 14, § 1).

Water company, engaged in furnishing water to certain localities in county by means of gravity system, was not required, under Const. art. 14, § 1, to use its own funds to adopt high pressure system in order to satisfy demands of residents of land located above gravity line, where expenditure was not warranted on account of expense and lack of customers, but water company was under duty to provide water for upper lands, where compensation to water company was sufficiently assured by way of bond or deposit.

4. Waters and water courses 🔑201—Realty company, under contract guaranteeing water company against loss in installing new system for supplying subdivision, held entitled to return of deposit on proof new system had become paying investment (Const. art. 14, § 1; Civ. Code, §§ 1647, 1650, 1653).

Under contract between realty company, having lands located above gravity line, and water company, operating on gravity system, by which water company was to adopt high pressure system to supply customers in the subdivision, and realty company deposited money "in lieu of surety bonds guaranteeing * * * cost of operating said water system until * * * it shall become a paying investment," realty company was entitled to recover amount deposited on proof that investment was profitable under Const. art. 14, § 1, and Civ. Code, §§ 1647, 1650, 1653, though contract also provided that water company might return such portions of deposit as it saw fit in full satisfaction of claims or demands of realty company.

5. Contracts 🔑162—Apparent conflicts in contract should, if possible, be harmonized.

Elementary rule of construction of contracts is that apparent conflicts therein should be harmonized, if possible.

6. Contracts 🔑170(1)—Construction placed on contract by parties may be considered.

In determining the true construction of a contract, the construction placed thereon by the parties themselves may be considered.

7. Limitation of actions 🔑103(2)—Limitation on trustee's liability under express continuing trust does not run until trustee repudiates trust.

Possession of trustee is deemed to be that of beneficiary, and statute of limitation on trustee's liability does not run against beneficiary in case of an express and continuing trust, until the trustee repudiates the trust and clearly and unequivocally brings home the fact to the beneficiary.

8. Limitation of actions 🔑102(2)—Action to recover money deposited 15 years previously to protect water company in operation of new system held not barred, where plaintiff, two years before, learned system was paying investment, and return of deposit was then refused; company being trustee (Code Civ. Proc. § 337, subd. 1, and § 343).

Action against water company to recover deposit made with it to guarantee it against loss in operation of new water system until system should become a paying investment held not barred by lapse of 15 years since payment and advances under contract under Code Civ. Proc. § 337, subd. 1, and section 343, where complaint alleged that two years previously plaintiff learned that the water system was a paying investment, and at that time made demand for return of money deposited, which was refused, since money remained property of plaintiff, and defendant's possession was that of trustee or mere depositary.

9. Waters and water courses ⚷201—Whether water company's new system became paying investment, entitling plaintiff to return of deposit guaranteeing cost, was not determinable solely by considering return on investment.

In action by realty company against water company to recover deposit made to guarantee water company against loss from operation of new system until system should become paying investment, issue whether system was profitable was not determinable solely by considering return on investment, after deducting expense, maintenance, depreciation, and interest charges thereon, since it is presumed that Railroad Commission fixes rates and revenue to afford fair return.

10. Waters and water courses ⚷201—Finding that new system had become paying investment, entitling plaintiff to return of deposit made to guarantee water company against loss, held sustained.

In action by realty company against water company to recover amount of deposit paid water company to secure it against loss by reason of installing new system for supplying subdivision with water, which guaranty was to continue until system became paying investment, finding of trial court that system was a paying investment held sustained by evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; Fred A. Treat, Judge.

Action by the Coast Counties Real Estate & Investment Company against the Monterey County Water Works. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

James F. Peck and Alan C. Van Fleet, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Woolf & Thompson and John Thompson, all of Monterey, and C. F. Lacey, of Salinas, for respondent.

PARKER, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff and against defendant, and comes to this court upon a bill of exceptions. The facts of the case follow:

In the year 1907 plaintiff, referred to hereinafter as the Realty Company, had bought a tract of land in Monterey county. The purpose of the Realty Company was to subdivide the land and offer it for sale to the public. The area embraced some 1,600 lots. As a necessity, water was required, and there was none available to the tract. A corporation, predecessor of defendant, was then operating in Monterey county and engaged in the business of furnishing water to certain localities in said county. As there is no question presented on the distinction between the rights, duties, or liabilities of defendant and its predecessor, we will drop all mention of the predecessor and proceed as though the present corporation defendant has been the actual party contracting from the inception of the transaction. The defendant throughout will be styled Water Company. In 1907 the Water Company, in furnishing water to the localities served, employed wholly a gravity system. In other words, the point of supply was above the points of distribution. The land of the Realty Company was situated above the gravity line of the Water Company and therefore could not be served thereby. The investment of the Realty Company was a total loss without water, and therefore it began intensive negotiations with the Water Company. Propositions and counter propositions were made, and finally a contract was entered into between the Realty Company and the Water Company, being the contract out of which arises the present controversy. The contract represents the only proposition the Water Company would make or consider at the time, and was agreed to by the Realty Company only with strenuous objection.

The contract may be thus summarized: It recites the fact that the Water Company had never undertaken to deliver water above its gravity line and that the lands of the Realty Company were above the said line. In consideration of the sum of $9,000 paid to the Water Company, it agreed to construct (as far as the sum of $9,000 would go to pay therefor) a water system, including fire mains, distributing pipes, hydrants, electric motors, or such other power plant as may be deemed most advisable by the Water Company, pumps, tanks, and suitable buildings to contain the plant to supply water for the lands of the Realty Company. The mains and distributing pipes were to be laid subject to the direction of the Realty Company with reference to the particular portions of the lands to be reached and benefited thereby. As soon as the work was completed (so far as the $9,000 would go toward completing the same) the Water Company agreed to operate the water system and pumping plant, and to supply water to consumers upon the land of the Realty Company reached thereby, at the same rates as to consumers below the gravity line, then being supplied by the Water Company. Thereafter, as fast as the Realty Company should deposit with the Water Company the sum or sums necessary to defray the expenses of establishing and constructing additional water mains to extend said water system, and as requested by the Realty Company on lands owned by said Realty Company, the Water Company would proceed forthwith to establish and construct such water mains as in the first instance, and thereafter operate the same and supply water to consumers upon land reached by such extensions at the same rates as in the first instance: Provided, that at least the full cost of such extension must be deposited as aforesaid before any work of extension shall be begun.

It is covenanted and agreed between the respective parties hereto that, in lieu of surety bonds guaranteeing to said Water Company the cost of operating said water system until such time as it shall become a paying investment, the entire sum of money deposited hereunder by the Realty Company with the Water Company, and such other sum or sums as may hereafter be deposited by the Realty Company with the Water Company for securing extensions, shall be held by the Water Company as a guarantee to secure said Water Company against any possible loss in the operating of said water system, and the return of such money shall be at the discretion of the Water Company, and any portions which it may see fit to return to the said Realty Company will be, by the Realty Company, received as satisfaction in full of all claims or demands which it may have against the Water Company for the return of said money: Provided only that said Water Company shall have faithfully kept and performed all the obligations on its part to be kept and performed. In addition the Realty Company was to deed to the Water Company four lots for buildings and rights of way for pipe lines and fire mains. It was especially understood that all covenants as to water rates in any lands situate within the corporate limits of the town of Monterey are subject to the ordinances of said town regulating water rights therein. This agreement was dated March 6, 1907.

The Realty Company, in addition to the $9,000 paid at the time of the execution of the contract, advanced the sum of $3,750 for extensions, making a total of $12,750 received by the Water Company. There is no claim that the Water Company did not in all respects perform the obligations assumed by it, with reference to construction of works and distribution of water to the lands as contemplated in the contract. The controversy arises over the moneys paid or deposited. The Realty Company alleges that in 1919 the water system thus installed became and still is a paying investment, and that under the contract the moneys paid are to be returned to the Realty Company, for which moneys the action is brought.

The Water Company contends that the contract imposes no obligation on it under any circumstances to return the money paid it by the Realty Company. Incident to this the Water Company further contends that, if it were liable for the return of any portion of the money, then under the contract it had the option to return the whole or any part thereof, which option it exercised. On the matter of the exercise of the claimed option it is found by the court, upon admission, that the Water Company offered to the Realty Company the sum of $10 as a full discharge of the money obligation, which offer was not accepted.

The issue thus presented brings us to a construction of the contract. All of the evidence as to prior negotiations and surrounding circumstances at the time of the execution of the contract have been recited. Neither party offered any other evidence to explain doubtful provisions of the contract or to illustrate just what the parties executing the contract had in mind. The secretary of the Realty Company, the officer of the said company who executed the contract in its behalf, was called as a witness. No one testified in behalf of the Water Company as to the circumstances surrounding the execution of the contract. We have therefore no extraneous aids to construction, other than heretofore noted. In the early case of Walsh v. Hill, 38 Cal. 481, the court says: "The only rule of much value—one which is frequently shadowed forth, but seldom, if ever, expressly stated in the books—is to place ourselves as near as possible in the seats which were occupied by the parties at the time the instrument was executed; then, taking it by its four corners, read it."

In Eastman v. Piper, 68 Cal. App. 554, 229 P. 1002, it is said: "The intention is to be gathered from the four corners of the instrument. But the rule that the intention of the parties is to be ascertained from the writing alone, where the contract is reduced to writing, is subject to other rules of law for the interpretation of contracts. One of these is that 'a contract may be explained by reference to the circumstances under which it was made and the matter to which it relates.' Section 1647. Another rule is that the contract should be read in the light of the general intent of the parties and the object sought to be attained by them, and if any particular phrase or clause be repugnant to or inconsistent with what appears to be such underlying purpose and main intention, as gathered from a consideration of all the provisions of the contract and the circumstances under which it was made, it should be rejected. This rule is stated by the code thus: 'Particular clauses of a contract are subordinate to its general intent.' Civ. Code, § 1650. Again: 'Words in a contract which are wholly inconsistent with * * * the main intention of the parties, are to be rejected.' Section 1653."

[1] With these rules in mind, we may proceed to a discussion of the contract here, with a view of determining the proper construction to be placed upon the instrument as a whole. At the time of the execution of the contract the Water Company was already formed and operating and in its operation was performing a public service. Const., art. 14, § 1. The opening recital of the contract states as much. Throughout the record before us all parties concede this. Being so engaged, we consider the Water Company as a quasi public corporation. City of South Pasadena v. Pasadena Water Co., 152 Cal. 579, 93 P. 490. There is a lack of facts to establish exactly the nature of the Water Company's holdings or the character of its water appropriations. However, from the entire record, and from the further fact that there is no claim to the contrary, we assume throughout that the company does not claim to be or to have been other than a public service corporation formed for the purpose of appropriating and distributing water to the area within which its appropriations were made and operating pursuant to the laws then in force. Indeed, if the water appropriated were claimed for such a use, then the right of the appropriator depended upon the user and the quantity that it could hold and claim would be dependent, then as now, upon the present and reasonably anticipated necessity. The land of the Realty Company was located within an area susceptible of service, though not by means of the distributing system then in use.

[2] The duty of the Water Company to furnish water to the land of the Realty Company was not unqualified. On the other hand, its right to refuse service was not absolute. The fact that a water company has undertaken to serve the entire municipality and that it would be of advantage to an inhabitant thereof, or a number of them, to have the water system extended to supply them would not of itself be sufficient to require or compel the company to make the extension. The duty which the water company has undertaken is of a public nature and to meet a public necessity for the supplying of water to the community. The obligation of the company is not to supply each or any number of inhabitants of the municipality in demand, as an absolute right on their part, but it has only assumed and become charged with the public duty of furnishing it where there is a reasonable demand for it and a reasonable extension of the service can be made to meet the demand. It would hardly be claimed that the obligation of a water company, exercising a public service franchise, would require it in the demand of an inhabitant of a city, or even a number of them, residing at a long distance from a point in the city to which its mains are already extended, to further excavate the streets of the municipality at its own expense and extend its mains to them, where the rates to be charged for the water to be delivered would but to a slight extent compensate the company for the expenditures entailed in doing so—in fact without any certainty that there would be a continuous consumption of water or a continuous payment of rates even after it was brought to them. Lukrawka v. Spring Valley Co., 169 Cal. 318, 146 P. 640, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 277. The law applicable is extensively reviewed in the cited case, which was a proceeding to compel the water company to furnish water to certain parties plaintiff.

[3] Applying the principles as therein enunciated to the situation existing at the time of the contract, the Water Company, under then existing conditions, could not have been compelled to furnish any water to the Realty Company lands inasmuch as this would have and did necessitate a complete new system of distribution. However, had the Realty Company land been then subdivided and occupied by a population sufficient to warrant the expense of the change in the Water Company's system and to assure return on the necessary investment, then the demand for service made upon the Water Company could have been enforced. Therefore the only valid reason that would justify the Water Company's refusal to serve water to the Realty Company lands, taking the fact to be that there was a sufficient supply, was the condition existing that by reason of expense of construction and lack of customers the expenditure incident to service was not warranted. With this reason removed there remained no other. Therefore, when sufficient assurance, by way of bond or deposit, was forthcoming, the duty of the Water Company to provide water for the Realty Company lands was enforceable.

[4] This then, it is apparent, was the purpose of the written contract and its main purpose, namely, to secure water for the Realty Company lands and to insure the Water Company against a losing or unreasonable venture. The manner of securing against this loss ordinarily might have been by sufficient undertaking or deposit of money. The Realty Company did advance the money and the contract specifically states, to repeat, as follows: "It is covenanted and agreed between the parties that in lieu of surety bonds guaranteeing to said Water Company the cost of operating said water system until such time as it shall become a paying investment, the entire sum of money deposited hereunder by the Realty Company, and such other sum or sums as may hereafter be deposited by the said Realty Company with the Water Company for securing extensions, shall be held by the Water Company as a guarantee to secure the Water Company against any possible loss in the operating of said water system."

This provision leaves little room for doubt and requires no construction beyond the plain words thereof. The term "in lieu of surety bonds" simply means that instead of offering and delivering an acceptable bond or undertaking conditioned that upon the investment becoming a paying venture the obligation of the bond would be discharged, a cash deposit, upon the same condition, should be made. Throughout the provision the idea is further illustrated by use of the term "deposit" with reference to the sums advanced. The word "deposit" in itself conveys the idea of the conditional delivery and is universally so understood. If the provision just quoted constituted all that the contract contained on the subject of the money, there would be need for no further comment thereon. Immediately following the language quoted, and as a continuation thereof, without paragraphing or other constructional division, the contract reads, "and the return of such money shall be at the discretion of the Water Company, and any portion which it may see fit at any time to return to the said Realty Company will be by the latter received as satisfaction in full of all claims or demands which it may have against the Water Company, provided only that said Water Company shall have faithfully kept and performed all the obligations on its part to be kept and performed herein contained." Without question there is a conflict apparent in the two parts quoted.

[5] An elementary rule of construction is that apparent conflicts should, if possible, be harmonized. Proceeding, with this in view, we find no difficulty in the phrase "at the discretion of the water company." The term "discretion" is to be construed as meaning an exercise of honest judgment, rather than an arbitrary determination. This is the holding of our courts in Nave v. Taugher, 49 Cal. App. 311, 193 P. 508; Security Trust Co. v. Claussen, 44 Cal. App. 734, 187 P. 142; Foster v. Young, 172 Cal. 317, 156 P. 476. Continuing this effort to harmonize, we read the remaining portion as though it were written thus: "and any portion of the money that the Water Company shall fairly determine to be returned shall be accepted as a full satisfaction of all demands." Thus harmonized, or to the extent harmonized, this construction supports the claim of the Realty Company here that the money was and is a deposit, to be returned to it whenever the investment became a paying one.

[6] It is likewise a rule of construction, requiring no citation, that the construction placed upon a contract by the parties thereto may be considered in determining the true construction. There is evidence in the record before us that the moneys in question, advanced by the Realty Company under the contract, were carried upon the books of the Water Company in its general ledger, as a liability, namely, a deposit, consumer's deposit for the tract service. As a choice against the construction we adopt, we have the alternative of holding the moneys to be advanced as a mere donation or gift to the Water Company for the doing of that which the law implies is the purpose of its organization. Title Guarantee & Trust Co. v. R. R. Commission, 168 Cal. 295, 142 P. 878, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 738; Nourse v. Los Angeles, 25 Cal. App. 384, 143 P. 801; section 549, Civ. Code; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77. In passing, we refer to the defendant's motion for a nonsuit at the termination of plaintiff's case, wherein the sole ground stated was that the evidence offered by plaintiff failed to show that the system established for the land of the Realty Company had become a paying investment. It seems that the usual contact between law and justice will remain unbroken by a construction that places no unfair burdens on either party and harmonizes the words with the intent to the end that fairness and equality result. Should the harmonious corelation of the various conflicts fail, then in accord with the rules announced and in conformance to a well-established canon of construction, where the general intent is manifest from the language of the contract, we may and do disregard entirely the conflicting portions which are repugnant to the intent as shown.

[7, 8] Appellant next contends that the court erred in overruling its demurrer to the amended complaint of plaintiff, which demurrer raised the question of the statute of limitations. The action was instituted on April 21, 1924. The amended complaint alleged the execution of the contract, set forth in hæc verba, in March, 1907; alleged the payment and advances, the last being in 1909. Then follows the allegation that on or about February 1, 1922, plaintiff learned, and alleges the fact to be, that said water system is a paying investment, and has, at all times since the execution of the agreement, been a paying investment. That plaintiff on February 14, 1922, made demand for the return of the money deposited, which moneys the defendant has failed, refused, and neglected to return, etc. The ground of demurrer was that the action was barred under the provisions of section 337, subdivision 1, and section 343, Code of Civil Procedure. The cause of action set forth in the amended complaint may be thus summarized, for the purposes of this branch of the discussion. Plaintiff alleges that in 1907 it deposited with defendant a sum of money to be held by defendant as a guarantee that a certain venture, to wit, a water system operated by defendant, would become a paying investment, and upon the happening of such event the money was to be repaid; that in 1922 plaintiff learned that the investment had been a paying venture from the commencement and demanded the return of the fund, which demand was refused. Action commenced in 1924. Under the contract as pleaded the money was held by defendant purely by way of bond or guaranty, and at no time became the property of defendant free from claim of plaintiff. At all times it remained the money of plaintiff and the possession of defendant was as a trustee for plaintiff, or else as a mere depositary. It must have been and was a voluntary trust. Against such a trust the statute does not run until the trustee repudiates it. Arnold v. Loomis, 170 Cal. 95, 148 P. 518; Norton v. Bassett, 154 Cal. 415, 97 P. 894, 129 Am. St. Rep. 162. The possession of a trustee is deemed to be that of the beneficiary, and the statute does not run as against the cestui que trust in the case of an express and continuing trust so long as the trustee holds according to the understanding and does not repudiate the relationship. The statute does not begin to run until the trustee repudiates the trust and clearly and unequivocally brings home the fact to the beneficiary. 16 Cal. Jur. 427, and cases therein cited.

We think that the amended complaint on its face did not show the action barred, and that the allegations of the pleading were sufficient as against the demurrer. The statute was not pleaded in the answer, or otherwise, by way of defense.

[9, 10] The remaining question presented is whether or not the water system provided for in the contract ever became a paying investment. The trial court found that on January 1, 1919, the said system became a paying investment, and ever since has continued to be a paying investment, but that prior to said date the Water Company sustained a loss in the operation of the system, amounting to $50. The judgment, following the findings, deducted this $50 from the amount deposited as not being returnable.

By far the greater portion of the evidence offered was on the question of the return on the investment to determine its character as a paying investment under the terms of the contract. Indeed, it cannot be denied that this was deemed by all parties as the main issue in the trial court.

Let us review that evidence. The lands of the Realty Company were referred to on the books of the Water Company as the Withers tract, and all of the evidence on the question now under review so designated the lands. When, under the contract, the Water Company undertook to install a high pressure system, as distinguished from the theretofore used gravity system, many changes were necessary. At that time the Water Company determined, in view of the prospective growth and increasing population of Monterey county, that the necessity for a high pressure system was apparent as a part of its general scheme of distribution; that is to say, it was determined, as a matter of good business policy, that, if a high pressure system was to be installed, it would be unwise to confine its capacity to the needs, actual or anticipated, of the Withers tract alone. Therefore, when the high pressure system was installed, a much greater expense was incurred than the money advanced by the Realty Company; in fact about double that amount. Where small water mains would have sufficed even the anticipated needs of the tract, larger ones were installed, and the whole scheme or plan embraced and intended what is now admitted to be the case, namely that the installation became and is an integral part of the entire distributing system of the Water Company, which serves with water some 60,000 people, and a total investment of over $1,000,000. In addition to the main plant there was also installed what is called a stand-by plant, intended to secure the service against breakdown or other interruption of service in the main plant; also, the record discloses that in the Withers tract are some 1,600 lots, all in private ownership and all homesite lots.

Both appellant and respondent presented much evidence on the question of what constituted a paying investment, and particularly applying the testimony to the investment under discussion. As is not unusual, the conflicting conclusions arise from practically the same facts. Both sides used the books and records of the Water Company as the basis of computation, and many elaborately prepared diagrams and schedules were prepared and submitted for the court's consideration. Should we take up these various and varying schedules and analysis charts, and attempt to classify each item therein, it would serve no useful purpose. As both sides concede, figures may be made to perform strange antics. For instance, on a yearly basis of pro ratio, figuring the cost of upkeep proportionate to the Withers tract uses a certain figure was set. The books over a period of seventeen years, demonstrated that the estimate was 50 per cent. correct. Likewise, in computing the burden of expense to be borne by the Withers tract, as a unit in the distribution of water, taxes were computed which item taxes included the income taxes from the system as a whole. Without further dissection of the various charts, we conclude from a study of all of the evidence submitted that there was sufficient competent testimony adduced to support the conclusion of the trial court that the investment did pay.

Much of the argument is advanced on the theory that, to constitute a paying investment it must be shown that there will be realized by the Water Company a return of at least 6 per cent. on the sum invested, after allowing all of the items of chargeable expense, including maintenance, depreciation and fixed interest charges on the depreciation amount found. While all of this argument might properly be addressed to a rate-fixing body or commission, we do not hold it to be our sole guide. The record discloses that the Water Company is operating as a public utility under the control and supervision of the Railroad Commission. In its reports to said commission, it has presented the investment as a whole and in its several units, as well as including all sums chargeable to maintenance, depreciation, etc. We presume that, in fixing rates and revenue, a fair return, under the law, has been determined by that body, However, we are not restricted in our inquiry to a return of any fixed per centum. It is obvious, from the record, that the Water Company, at no time, would have nor would it now, in the exercise of a prudent business plan, abandon the high pressure unit or the Withers tract service for a return of the amount invested. Should the owners of the Withers tract determine upon a local or mutual service and seek to condemn that much of the water system devoted to their use, the same figure would undoubtedly show a return on investment and a loss through severance, that would establish a value far above the deposit amount.

To repeat, if we should set forth in detail all of the items contained in the many schedules and determine the exact accounting placement of each, with reference to proper charge as against the particular unit involved, we would end just where we began, and as all of the witnesses agree, in an approximation. We accept the conclusion of the trial court, finding ample evidence to sustain it on this issue.

JULIEN v. WEST et al. (Civ. 6039.)

Judgment 🔑443(2), 444—Plaintiff could not set aside judgment as fraudulently obtained under allegations that his attorneys misconducted trial and that written evidence was forged.

Party against whom judgment was recovered held not entitled to equitable relief in suit to have judgment set aside as fraudulently obtained, by virtue of alleged corrupt practices upon part of his own attorneys in misconducting the case so as to lose it, or on ground of claim that principal item of evidence introduced by opponent at the former trial was a forgery, where it was not alleged that opponent at the former trial was guilty of corrupt conduct; there being no charge of extrinsic fraud.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leon R. Yankwich, Judge.

Suit by Russell C. Julien against Marie West and the Security Trust & Savings Bank, administrators of the estate of Amelia Appleby, deceased. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Laird L. Neal and Burke, Catlin & Burke, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Thomas S. Bunn, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

STEPHENS, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff and appellant herein was a defendant in the municipal court of the city of Los Angeles, the cause being entitled Amelia Appleby v. Russell Julien, for damages. Judgment was entered against him. Thereafter he brought suit in the superior court asking that the equity powers of that tribunal be used to vacate and set aside such judgment on the ground that it had been fraudulently obtained. The superior court sustained a general demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend. Thereafter a judgment of dismissal, with prejudice as to said referred to action, was duly ordered and entered. This appeal is from such judgment. The title of the cause has been changed for the reason that the defendant has died, and the administrator of her estate is substituted as the party defendant.

The determination of the appeal needs no extended statement of facts or lengthy opinion. Appellant in his complaint alleges that in divers and various ways his own attorneys in such trial purposely and for their own advantage so conducted the case as to lose it, and that by reason of such corrupt practices there was no "adversary trial," and that thereafter they advised him in such manner as to deprive him of his right of motion for new trial and appeal. There is no allegation connecting the plaintiff in the municipal court or his attorneys with this corrupt conduct. Appellant (plaintiff in the superior court) also alleges in the complaint that a writing, a principal item of evidence and introduced by the plaintiff at the municipal court trial, was a forgery, and that appellant did not ascertain that fact until after the trial. Here again is presented the old subject of extrinsic fraud. Upon the reasoning and authority of Pico v. Cohn, 91 Cal. 129, 25 P. 970, 27 P. 537, 13 L. R. A. 336, 25 Am. St. Rep. 159, and United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 61, 25 L. Ed. 93, the two beacon lights on this subject, we find no extrinsic fraud alleged in the complaint. Therefore, there was no cause of action stated, and as the allegations are full and purport to relate the whole of and all of plaintiff's cause of complaint, the ruling of the trial court and the judgment entered thereupon were proper.

WEHRLE v. D. E. McDANELD, Inc. (Civ. 5550.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 21, 1929.

1. Automobiles 🔑19—Sale of automobile held not "completed," where registration certificate was not obtained, and automobile was returned, entitling purchaser to return of money paid (Vehicle Act 1915).

Where husband, assuming to act for wife, who was legal owner of automobile, traded automobile to defendant in part payment for new car, and defendant delivered automobile to agent on consignment, with authority to sell automobile, and agent sold automobile to plaintiff's assignor, promising to deliver certificate of registration, but legal owner refused to surrender certificate, and motor vehicle department refused to issue certificate without surrender of old certificate, and automobile was returned after reasonable time, sale was not "completed," under Vehicle Act 1915 (St. 1915, p. 397), requiring transfer of certificate and filing thereof to complete sale, and hence purchaser was entitled to return of money paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Complete.]

2. Sales ⚷124—Return of automobile, to place where purchaser obtained it from defendant's agent, with notice to agent, held sufficient return to agent and defendant.

Where defendant delivered automobile into possession of agent on consignment, for purpose of sale, and agent sold car to another, return of automobile by purchaser, on defendant's failure to secure certificate of registration to place where purchaser obtained it from agent with notice to agent, who made no objection to place of delivery, was sufficient return of automobile to agent, though not actually on agent's premises but in repair shop, where agent placed it, and was sufficient return to defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; T. A. Norton, Judge.

Action by M. B. Wehrle against D. E. McDaneld, Inc. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Bernard Potter and Lynden Bowring, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. This action grew out of the sale of an automobile to plaintiff's assignor, Lynden Bowring, followed by failure to transfer title to the purchaser. The defendant appeals from the judgment.

[1, 2] The grounds of appeal, as stated by appellant, are: First, that the evidence is insufficient to prove that one Claubes, through whom the sale was made, was the agent of appellant, and, second, that there was not actually any deficiency of title "attributable to appellant." Legal ownership of the automobile was in the name of Ella E. Merritt. Her husband, assuming to act on her behalf, traded the car to defendant as part payment on a new car purchased from the defendant. This occurred on September 25, 1922. Under the provisions of the Vehicle Act of 1915 (St. 1915, p. 397), as amended and in force at that time, there was required to be only one certificate of registration and ownership. In order to complete a sale, it was necessary that the certificate be properly indorsed by the transferee, and be filed with the motor vehicle department, and a new certificate of registration issued in the name of the purchaser. Parke v. Franciscus, 194 Cal. 284, 294, 228 P. 435. The Merritt car was delivered to defendant without the certificate. Defendant delivered the car into the possession of Claubes "on consignment," for purposes of sale. The evidence is sufficient to prove that Claubes became defendant's agent, with authority to make a sale. Claubes sold the car to Bowring, and delivered it into his hands, at the same time promising to obtain and deliver the certificate. On request of Claubes, defendant endeavored to obtain the certificate, but Mrs. Merritt refused to surrender it. Bowring made several demands for the certificate, and also endeavored to obtain a new certificate of registration and ownership from the motor vehicle department. That department refused to issue a certificate to Bowring without surrender of the Merritt certificate. After waiting at least a reasonable time, Bowring returned the automobile to the place where he had obtained it from Claubes, and notified Claubes of that fact. Claubes made no objection to the place of delivery, which was not actually on his premises, although it was the repair shop where Claubes had placed it.

In our opinion this was a sufficient return of the automobile to Claubes, and therefore was a sufficient return of it to his principal, the defendant. The effect of the facts thus established is that the defendant failed to complete the sale in accordance with its contract, and Bowring became entitled to a return of the money paid by him. It is stipulated that Bowring's claim against defendant was duly assigned to the plaintiff before the commencement of the action.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 20, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 1, 1929.

1. Principal and agent 🔑3(5)—One directing production of show into which defendant put money was defendant's agent, although called trustee.

Where defendant put $2,000 into show to be staged by another, and profits were to be divided, and C. was to act solely as trustee for defendant and direct production, dictate policies, disburse moneys, and deposit moneys in his name, C., although called trustee, was in fact defendant's agent.

2. Joint adventures 🔑1, 7—Defendant loaning money and receiving half profits held to be joint adventurer with others in production of show and therefore liable to employees for labor (Civ. Code, § 2395).

Where defendant entered into contract with others whereby, in consideration of loan of $2,000 to S., defendant was given an undivided half interest in net proceeds to be derived from show to be staged by S., and no provision was made for return of money except that it was to be paid back from gross proceeds derived from show before a division of the profits, defendant was a joint adventurer with others in production of show, under Civ. Code, § 2395, and therefore was liable to employees for claims for labor.

Houser, Acting P. J., dissenting.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Victor R. McLucas, Judge.

Actions by Wedgwood Nowell and by Walter G. Mathewson, State Commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics (substituted for Wm. E. Steineck, Deputy Labor Commissioner, etc.), against George H. Oswald and others. From judgments for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

George L. Greer, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Duke Stone, of Los Angeles, for respondent Nowell.

Chas. F. Lowy and Isaac Pelton, both of Los Angeles, for respondent Mathewson.

CRAIL, Justice pro tem. The sole question presented on appeal is the correctness of the trial court's decision that appellant Oswald was a joint adventurer with others in the production of a theatrical exhibition and therefore liable to employees for claims for labor. We are satisfied that the ruling of the trial court was correct. Westcott v. Gilman, 170 Cal. 562, 150 P. 777, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 437; Chapman v. Hughes, 104 Cal. 302, 37 P. 1048, 38 P. 109; Leake v. City of Venice, 50 Cal. App. 462, 190 P. 440.

There is an all-important difference in construing relationships of this kind as between the parties themselves upon the one hand and as between the parties themselves and those who have dealt with them upon the other hand. In the instant case the rights of third parties are involved; and, as stated in Westcott v. Gilman, supra: "When, however, the rights of third parties are involved, the basis of the inquiry shifts materially, and the fundamental questions are, what had those third parties the right to believe from the language of the contract and from the conduct of the parties to it as affecting them, and not as affecting each other. Each case, therefore, is adjudicated upon its own facts, and very little value will be found from any extended review of the authorities."

Oswald, Mrs. Small, and Castle entered into a contract, under the terms of which Oswald, in consideration of a loan of $2,000 to Mrs. Small, was given an undivided one-half interest in the net proceeds to be derived from a show to be staged by Mrs. Small, known as "Mlle. Magnificent." No provision was made for the return of the money except that it was to be paid back from the gross proceeds derived from the show before a division of the profits. It was further agreed that in no way was Oswald to be held responsible for any debts incurred in said production. No mention is made of Castle in the contract, except that he also was not to be held responsible for any debts, and that he "is acting solely as trustee" for Oswald. We must go to another contract made at the same time to ascertain how Castle is to "act" as trustee. In this contract, entered into between Mrs. Small and Castle, it is agreed that Castle is to be known at all times as director of the production and is to dictate policies and performances at all times without interference from Mrs. Small; also that he shall act as treasurer and that he shall have sole and exclusive charge of all matters relating to advertising and exploitation. Disbursement of all moneys is to be done only by signature of D. Castle, trustee, and all moneys accruing from the production will be deposited in the name of D. Castle, trustee. The net profits were to be divided as follows: 50 per cent. to Oswald; 15 per cent. to an actor named Ricker for services in lieu of salary; 10 per cent. to publicity; 15 per cent. to Castle; and only 10 per cent. to Mrs. Small. It was stipulated in an agreed statement of facts that each of the defendants Oswald, Mrs. Small, and Castle knew that plaintiff's assigns were rendering the services of actor, pay for which the action is brought, at all times during the said performance. They could only know this fact at all times by being on hand at all times when the services were rendered.

[1] This was not a loan, in the ordinary sense, for the money was to be paid back, not by Mrs. Small, but from the gross proceeds of the venture. It is apparent also that, while Castle was called "trustee," he was in fact the agent of Oswald. Except as to the moneys which were deposited in the bank, he had none of the attributes of a trustee, but was the general agent of Oswald in putting on the production. Oswald was in charge of the show at all times, through his agent, who was director of production, dictator of policies and performances, as well as sole and exclusive manager of all advertising and exploitation. Furthermore, appellant was given the option for a period of 90 days "to stage the show elsewhere," and, since the terms upon which he was to stage it elsewhere were not stated, it is a fair inference that, in the event he exercised the option, he was to stage it on the same terms as those of the original contract under which he staged it at the Mason Opera House.

The cases relied upon by appellant may be readily distinguished from the instant case. The contracts in those cases showed clearly a bona fide effort to lend money without any right whatever to conduct the business. In the instant case the contracts are so peculiar in phraseology and so unusual in their terms that third persons with rights involved manifestly see in them a deliberate attempt by one partner to evade his legal liability for the partnership debts—debts which were incurred during the performances in the personal presence of that partner at all times.

[2] Section 2395 of the Civil Code defines a partnership to be "the association of two or more persons, for the purpose of carrying on business together, and dividing its profits between them." Appellant had power under the arrangement through his agent to make contracts, incur liability, and manage the whole business. He enjoyed for a brief season the pleasures and distinction of being the angel of the show. Now that the show has flopped and 86 members of the cast are pressing for collection their claims for labor, he seeks to hide behind the skirts of the partner who was to receive only 10 per cent. of the net profits. We have said before that we believe the ruling of the trial court was correct.

Judgments affirmed.

I concur: YORK, J.

HOUSER, Acting P. J. (dissenting). It appears that no evidence was introduced on the trial of the case, but it was submitted to the trial court on an agreed statement of facts. It is to such statement only, therefore, that this court must look as a guide to a proper declaration of the law in the premises. In order that no misapprehension may occur as to the facts which were before the trial court and upon which the law of the case depends, they are inserted herein in full, as follows:

"First: That the parties mentioned in plaintiff's complaint performed services of the kind and value as set out in the complaint in the production of a show at the Mason Opera House in the City of Los Angeles, California, entitled 'Mlle. Magnificent.'

"Second: That prior to the institution of this action, said parties assigned unto the plaintiff herein the said claims.

"Third: That said production was actually given as a public exhibition at said Mason Opera House in the City of Los Angeles, California.

"Fourth: That prior to the giving of said exhibition or production the defendants, D. Castle and Mrs. Ann Small, entered into an agreement dated June 18, 1924, a copy of which is attached hereto as Exhibit 'A'; and that Ann Small mentioned in said exhibit is one and the same person as Mrs. J. A. Small, the defendant herein.

"Fifth: That prior to said production, to-wit: On June 18, 1924, George H. Oswald, Mrs. Ann Small and D. Castle entered into a contract in writing, a copy of which is hereto attached as Exhibit 'B.'

"Sixth: That each of the defendants knew that the said parties whose claims were assigned to plaintiff herein were rendering the services as actors at all times during said performance, but without admitting the materiality of any of the facts above stated.

"Exhibit 'A'

"Agreement

" 'This agreement, made and entered into this 18th day of June, 1924, by and between D. Castle, party of the first part; Mrs. Ann Small, party of the second part:

" 'Witnesseth:

" 'Whereas the parties of the first and second parts have prepared for public presentation a legitimate production entitled "Mlle. Magnificent," to be staged in the City of Los Angeles, State of California, on or before the 30th day of June, 1924.

" 'The party of the first part is to be known at all times as director of this production and is to dictate at all times policies and performances of said production without interference from party of the second part.

" 'It is understood and agreed by and between both parties that the disbursement of all moneys is to be done only by the signature of D. Castle, Trustee.

" 'It is further understood that all moneys accruing from the production, including gate receipts, advertising, programs or any other source pertaining to said production, will be deposited in the United States National Bank, in the city of Los Angeles, Calif., in the name of D. Castle, Trustee.

" 'It is further agreed by both parties that upon completion of said production and after paying all expenses attendant thereto, an audit will be made of all accounts and books, and the balance of moneys remaining in said account shall be disbursed as follows:

" 'Geo. H. Oswald shall receive the sum equal to fifty per cent. of the net profits of the above mentioned production for moneys advanced; David Swing Ricker shall receive the sum equal to fifteen per cent. of the net profits for services rendered and in lieu of salary; Soldiers' Monument Fund shall receive the sum equal to ten per cent. of the net profits; D. Castle, party of the first part, shall receive the sum equal to fifteen per cent. of the net profits, and the balance of ten per cent. shall go to Mrs. Ann Small, party of the second part.

" 'Party of the first part shall act as treasurer during the entire production; and shall have sole and exclusive charge of all matters relating to the advertising and exploitation of said production.

" 'In Witness Whereof, the parties have set their hands and seals at the City of Los Angeles, State of California, the day herein first above written.

" '[Sgd] D. Castle
" '[Sgd] Mrs. Ann Small.'

"Exhibit 'B'

"Agreement

" 'It is hereby agreed, by and between the parties hereto that Geo. H. Oswald, party of the first part, and Mrs. Ann Small, party of the second part, and D. Castle, party of the third part. That for and in consideration of the loan of the sum of Two Thousand Dollars ($2,000.00) to be made by the party of the first part to the party of the second part, that the party of the first part is hereby given an undivided one half (50%) interest in the net proceeds to be derived from a show to be staged by the party of the second part, known as Mlle. Magnificent, to be shown at the Mason Opera House, in the City of Los Angeles, Calif., beginning June 25th, 1924.

" 'It is further agreed by and between the parties hereto, that this loan above mentioned, is to be paid back to the party of the first part from the gross proceeds derived from this show out of the receipts of the first night's performance. And if the gross receipts of the first night performance do not equal the amount of this loan, then the same procedure to carry on for the balance of the nights said show is shown until this loan is paid in full.

" 'It is further understood and agreed upon that in no way is the party of the first part to be held responsible for any debts incurred by the party of the second part in the production of this show in any way, and the party of the third part, it is agreed, shall also not be held responsible for any debts incurred by the party of the second part, it being further agreed and understood that party of the third part is acting solely as trustee for party of the first part.

" 'It is further agreed by and between the parties hereto that the party of the first part is hereby given an option for a period of ninety (90) days to stage this show elsewhere, if he so desires for the same consideration above mentioned.

" 'It is further agreed that the paying back of this loan as above outlined does in no way affect the undivided one half (50%) interest of the party of the first part in the profits of said show.

" 'This Agreement Made and Entered into this 18th day of June, 1924.

" '[Sgd] Geo. H. Oswald
" '[Sgd] Mrs. Ann Small
" '[Sgd] D. Castle.' "

From Exhibit A, which is the agreement in which D. Castle and Mrs. Small are the only parties, it appears that they "have prepared for public presentation a legitimate production," of which Castle is to be the "director"; that he is "to dictate at all times policies and performances of said production; * * * have exclusive charge of all matters relating to the advertising and exploitation of production"; receive all moneys accruing therefrom, which will be not only banked, but as well disbursed, in his name, only, as trustee; and that, of the net profits (if any) Oswald shall receive 50 per cent. "for moneys advanced," Castle 15 per cent., Mrs. Small 10 per cent., Ricker 15 per cent., and Soldiers' Monument Fund 10 per cent.

By Exhibit B, which is the agreement in which Oswald is a party, together with Castle and Small, in substance, it is provided that, in consideration of a loan of $2,000 made by Oswald to Small, for a possible period of 90 days, Oswald may receive 50 per cent. of the net profits of the "show"; that Oswald is to be paid back his $2,000 from the gross proceeds derived from the enterprise; and that neither Oswald nor Castle is to be held responsible for any debts incurred by Small in the production of the "show"; also, that Castle "is acting solely as trustee" for Oswald.

As a further condensation of the two agreements, it may be said that Small and Castle formed an association for the purpose of producing a "show," to be managed by Castle "without interference" from Small; that of the gross proceeds from the production Oswald was to be first paid the $2,000 which he had lent to Small, and thereafter any profits which might be derived from the operation of the "show" were to be divided among the several parties to the two agreements, Ricker and Soldiers' Monument Fund.

So far as appears on the face of the instrument, Oswald was a stranger to the agreement between Castle and Small. Not having signed that agreement, he was in no way bound by its provisions. Although by the terms of that instrument Oswald was to receive 50 per cent. of the net profits of the production "for moneys advanced," it will be noted that in the agreement in which Oswald's name does appear as a party thereto (and which was the only instrument by which he was expressly bound), it is recited that the loan was made not to Castle and Small, but that the loan was to be made to Small personally. Nor does that agreement contain even the slightest intimation or indication of the purpose of the loan, or the use to which it was to be put. For aught that appears, the money so lent to Small might be used by her, not necessarily in the "legitimate production of Mlle. Magnificent," but might be used by her to buy real estate, or to engage in any other "legitimate" or illegitimate business, dependent solely either upon her best judgment or her caprice. In such circumstances, merely because, in addition thereto, according to the statement of facts of the parties to the litigation, Castle was "acting solely as trustee" for Oswald, and Oswald "knew that the said parties whose claims were assigned to plaintiff herein were rendering the services as actors at all times during the performances," to hold that Oswald was a partner in the business and consequently liable for the debts of the partnership in my opinion is not consonant with the law as announced in authorities to be hereinafter cited. None of the persons whose claims formed the foundation of the action rendered services or furnished materials to the partnership upon any representation made to him by Oswald, or by any other person, that Oswald was a member of the association; nor did any of such persons even believe that Oswald was in any way connected with the business. In other words, credit was not extended on the basis that Oswald was a member of the partnership. Reduced to its lowest terms, the agreement simply shows that Oswald lent money to a woman who was engaged in the "show" business. His money was to be paid back to him in any event from the gross receipts of that business, and, if there were any profits from the management thereof, he was to receive a certain percentage thereof (whether 50 per cent. or one-fourth of 1 per cent. is of no materiality so far as the legal principle involved is concerned). But Oswald's stipulation with the woman was practically that he was not to be liable for any debts that might accrue. Apparently he had nothing to do with the business other than that Castle was to act as "trustee" in the matter of seeing that the business was properly managed and that an accurate accounting was had, first, as to the "gross proceeds" from which the $2,000 loaned to Small was to be repaid to Oswald; and, secondly, in determining the amount of interest (if any) to be paid to Oswald by way of "net profits."

By section 2395 of the Civil Code, in order to constitute a partnership between two persons, it is essential that they associate themselves "for the purpose of carrying on business together." Nowhere, even in the two agreements herein considered as a whole, much less in the agreement to which Oswald subscribed his name, may the least indication be found that Oswald was associating himself with Castle and Small, or with either of them, "for the purpose of carrying on business together" with either or both of them.

The cases of People's Lumber Co. v. McIntyre & Peters, 179 Cal. 780, 178 P. 954, and Martin v. Sharp & Fellows C. Co., 34 Cal. App. 584, 168 P. 373, are at once illuminating and determinative of the principle here involved. In the former case, although the contract between the parties thereto does not appear in the body of the opinion, from the transcript on appeal, among other things, it appears that one McIntyre, who desired to engage in the general contracting business, especially in the paving of streets, induced a man named Peters to lend him $3,500 with which "to provide the necessary tools and equipment needed to economically do said work, and for other expense; * * * said money to be expended jointly by both said parties in purchasing the said equipment; * * * said equipment is to be bought in the name of and remain the property of said Peters, except as otherwise provided hereinafter." McIntyre was to be paid a stipulated salary, "whether the contracts be proven to be profitable or not." The contract further provided that: "If said Peters does not regard the contracting business as sufficiently profitable to induce him to continue therein, or if for any other reason he desires to discontinue same, then the net profits shall be divided in two equal portions, Peters receiving half and McIntyre receiving the other half. If the net profits, not counting in McIntyre's wages as a part of the expenses, amount to a sufficient amount that his one-half share of net profits is more than his total wages at $150 per month, then in that event McIntyre shall not be entitled to any wages, but the one-half of the net profits shall be his only compensation, but if his one-half share of the net profits amounts to less than his total wages, then he is to receive his total wages only and no share of the profits. Peters shall receive the entire remainder of the net profits in any event. * * *" McIntyre was then given the right to purchase the equipment from Peters. The contract further provided that, if Peters should "desire to continue the contracting business, then the profits shall not be divided as above, but the total net profits (counting in McIntyre's wages as a part of the expenses) shall be payable to said Peters on the completion of said contracts, said McIntyre receiving only his wages at $150 per month, as full compensation, together with the other considerations hereinafter named." If a "partnership" should thereafter be formed, "in conducting said business, thereafter, after each contracting job shall have been completed, the net profits thereon shall be paid to said Peters solely, until he shall have had returned to him an amount equal to one-half of his total investment in said company." To put the matter otherwise, as stated in the course of the opinion rendered by the Supreme Court in the case of People's Lumber Co. v. McIntyre & Peters: "It was provided, among other things, that if Peters desired to continue in the contract business, he was to receive the entire net profits until half his investment had been repaid, whereupon the equipment was to belong to the copartnership. * * *" Thereafter a general contracting business was carried on by McIntyre, sometimes individually and at other times in association with a third party, but always with the understanding that Peters was to share equally with McIntyre in the net profits. In the course of business a debt was incurred on account of materials furnished by People's Lumber Company to McIntyre upon which an action was brought against McIntyre and Peters on the theory that Peters was a partner in the business, and which action resulted in a judgment against both McIntyre and Peters, from which an appeal was taken. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment, holding that the finding by the lower court that Peters was a partner of McIntyre was not sustained by the evidence. It is most apparent that the facts in that case, compared with those in the instant case, are strikingly similar. As a single illustration, in addition to what hereinbefore has been set forth, as remarked by the Supreme Court at the outset of its opinion: "At the time of the contract between the plaintiff and McIntyre the plaintiff had never heard of the alleged partnership, and its claim is therefore not based upon the theory of an ostensible partnership, but upon the character of the actual agreement between Peters and McIntyre." Considering the effect of the relationship between Peters and McIntyre, in part it was said: "In urging that there was a partnership the plaintiff is in no better position than McIntyre. The original agreement between the parties is ample explanation for the connection of Peters with McIntyre, and Peters was entitled to rely upon the fact as to third parties that he was not being held out as a partner. * * * As between himself and the public, he had a right to rely upon the fact that he was not being held out as a partner, and as between McIntyre and himself he had a right to rely upon the fact that he never had elected to become a partner."

The doctrine announced in the case of Martin v. Sharp & Fellows C. Co., 34 Cal. App. 584, 168 P. 373, is equally disastrous so far as respondent's position is concerned. In brief, it there appeared that the person sought to be held as a partner leased certain mules to a general contractor and "agreed to advance to him such moneys as he might require in the early prosecution of the work and until he received installments of his contract price, due at intervals upon estimates of work done in the progress thereof, in consideration of which John Mulligan [the lender of the money] was to have one-half of the net profits derived from the contract." Later, the lender of the money to the contractor agreed that "'any balance that may be due after all bills incurred by this contract (so made by plaintiff with defendant) have been liquidated, is to be divided equally between the parties to this agreement,' and any deficiency 'liquidated equally by the parties hereto.'" The judgment of the court was to the effect that no partnership existed between the parties. In the course of the opinion it is said: "By section 2395 of the Civil Code, a partnership is defined to be 'the association of two or more persons, for the purpose of carrying on business together and dividing its profits between them.' Under this definition, a mere participation in profit and loss does not necessarily constitute a partnership, for, as said in Dwinel v. Stone, 30 Me. 384, 'there must be such a community of interest as empowers each party to make contracts, incur liabilities, manage the whole business, * * * a right which, upon the dissolution of the partnership by death of one, passes to the survivor, and not to the representatives of the deceased.' To like effect are Coward v. Clanton, 122 Cal. 451 (55 P. 147); Vanderhurst v. De Witt, 95 Cal. 57 (20 L. R. A. 595, 30 P. 94), and Nofsinger v. Goldman, 122 Cal. 609 (55 P. 425), in the former of which it is said that profit sharing is not the true test of partnership. The association must be for the purpose of jointly carrying on the business. Mulligan was not interested in the conduct of the business, except in so far as it affected the profits, one-half of which he was to receive for the use of the money, not advanced to the partnership but loaned to Martin. * * * The doctrine of equitable estoppel, which appellant seeks to invoke, finds no support in the record, which is barren of any evidence of representations or acts on the part of plaintiff calculated to lead defendant to believe that such partnership existed."

In the majority opinion herein certain authorities are cited in support of the judgment. Without reviewing them or attempting to distinguish or to analyze them, I must content myself with the statement that I am unable to perceive their application to the situation here involved. If the principle of law for which respondent contends is sound, a banker who may lend money to a merchant on the condition that the principal and the interest thereon are to be repaid from the gross sales and profits of the business of the merchant, and, as is often the case, where, for the purpose of insuring fair dealing to the banker or proper management of the business, the banker places a representative in the business of the merchant—the banker becomes a partner in the business and is liable as such, notwithstanding the further fact that persons who deal with the merchant and extend credit to him do so without either knowledge or belief as to the banker's connection with the business of the merchant. Relying upon the authorities to which attention has been directed, together with the cases therein cited, I am led to the conclusion that the judgments herein, so far as appellant Oswald is concerned, should be reversed, but that, as to defendant Castle, the judgments should be affirmed.

LINDSEY v. BUTTE et al. (Civ. 3642.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 29, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 28, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 28, 1929.

1. Sales ⟹477(6)—Seller's assignee, accepting past-due installment, waived past defaults, precluding forfeiture therefor by subsequent assignee, contrary contract provision referring to future defaults (Civ. Code, § 1442).

Bank accepting payment of past-due purchase-money installment under automobile sale contract assigned to it waived all past defaults, thereby precluding forfeiture on such account by bank's assignees, to whom purchaser tendered full performance as soon as he learned of assignment; contract provision that acceptance of past-due payment shall not constitute waiver of provision making time of essence being reasonably interpreted as referring to waiver of future defaults, in view of Civ. Code, § 1442.

2. Sales ⟹481—Buyer held entitled to judgment only for value of automobile converted, less unpaid purchase money and interest thereon.

Buyer, suing assignees of sale contract for conversion of automobile, held not entitled to judgment for full value thereof, but only for such value less amount of unpaid purchase-money installments and interest thereon.

3. Sales ⟹475—Bank assigning sale contract to attachment plaintiffs for unpaid installments and interest held not liable to purchaser for conversion.

Bank assigning automobile sale contract to attachment plaintiffs for amount of unpaid installments and interest thereon after assignment of contract to it held not liable to purchaser for conversion, in absence of evidence of any wrongful conduct on its part to purchaser's injury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; F. C. Valentine, Judge.

Action by John H. Lindsey against William P. Butte and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed, with direction in part, and modified, and affirmed as modified in part.

Page, Nolan, Rohe & Freston and Andrew J. Copp, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

William A. Barnhill and Lewinson & Barnhill, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The plaintiff was given judgment against all the defendants for the sum of $6,000 as damages for the conversion of an automobile and the further sum of $250 as compensation for time and money expended in pursuit of the automobile. There are two appeals from the judgment; one by the defendant Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank, and the other by defendants Butte, Barker, and Pacific Ready-Cut Homes, Inc.

October 19, 1923, the plaintiff and E. L. Butler entered into a conditional sale contract, in the usual form, by the terms of which the former agreed to purchase from the latter a Duesenberg automobile for $5,000, of which sum $2,000 was paid at the execution of the contract and the balance of $3,000 was to be paid in ten equal monthly installments, commencing November 19, 1923. The contract contained the following:

"Time is of the essence of this contract, and acceptance by the seller of any payment after same is due shall not constitute a waiver by him of this provision. * * *

"Said purchaser agrees that he will not and has no right to assign, pledge, mortgage or otherwise dispose of this contract or said automobile, * * * or in any manner relinquish or lose control thereof, * * * without the written consent of said seller. * * *

"If said purchaser defaults in any of the above payments, when due, or breaches any provision of this contract, or if said automobile is attached or levied upon under any writ or process of any court, * * * said seller may, at his option,—First—take possession of said automobile * * * with or without process of law; and all payments theretofore paid hereunder shall thereupon be forfeited to said seller for the use, wear, tear, and depreciation of said automobile, and this contract and the purchaser's rights in and to said automobile shall thereupon cease, * * * or,—Second—said seller may declare the whole of the sums then remaining unpaid to be immediately due and payable and sue therefor."

There is testimony showing the facts enumerated herein. Both parties to the contract were automobile dealers in Los Angeles. The automobile was immediately delivered to the plaintiff. Butler immediately sold and assigned the contract to the defendant bank for the amount of the unpaid installments. The bank mailed notice to the plaintiff of the assignment, but the plaintiff testified: That he did not receive the notice and that he had no knowledge of the bank's ownership of the contract until April 22, 1924. That "Mr. Butler told me he had simply put it in there as collateral security for a loan. * * * Mr. Hellman was supposed to be his backer in the automobile business and had financed his money to pay for the automobiles he purchased, and it was understood, I was told by him that it was simply put up as collateral security for the money that Mr. Hellman advanced him." Butler testified: "I think my office made collections from Mr. Lindsey of the payments due under the contract. * * * I paid them to the Hellman bank. * * * During March, 1924, I owed Mr. Lindsey a little money. I think I owed him $400 and some odd." The officer of the defendant bank who had "charge of the automobile department" testified that, when payments were not made promptly on automobile contracts assigned to the bank, "it was customary for us to wait a few days—after which the payment was charged up to the dealer or strenuous efforts were made to collect it from the dealer"; that it "is the custom of the bank to go after the dealer who turned the contract over" to the bank "and tell him to get after the purchaser and get the money in"; that he "expected Mr. Butler to see that the payments from Mr. Lindsey were collected and turned into the bank"; that in this case "two specific payments were as a fact made by Mr. Butler or charged by the bank against his account out of six payments which were made altogether." Only five installment payments were made by the plaintiff, and the first four of them were made to Butler. None of them were made until several days after they respectively became due. The fifth installment, due March 19, was paid directly to the bank by a brother of the plaintiff on April 21, 1924. Plaintiff had some negotiations looking to the sale of the automobile to a man named Law, and during plaintiff's absence the automobile was given into the possession of Law, but the court found, on sufficient evidence, that no sale to Law was ever consummated. If an agreement to sell the automobile to Law was ever executed, it was canceled, and the possession and ownership of the automobile were restored to the plaintiff on or before April 12, 1924. April 15, 1924, in an action commenced by the defendant Pacific Ready-Cut Homes, Inc., against Law, the automobile was taken from the plaintiff's possession by the sheriff under a writ of attachment. Butte and Barker had the management and control of the Pacific Ready-Cut Homes, Inc., and they and their families owned all of its capital stock. The bank knew of the attachment and, on April 22, it "put in a third party claim for the automobile," in which claim it was stated that the bank was the legal owner and the plaintiff the registered owner of the automobile. On April 21, six days after the attachment and two days after the April installment of the purchase price became due, the bank accepted payment of the installment which had become due March 19. April 26, 1924, the bank assigned the Butler contract to Butte and Barker in consideration of the payment by them of the sum of $1,510.50, the amount of the unpaid installments and interest thereon. The plaintiff first heard of the assignment to Butte and Barker on April 28, and at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of that day he tendered the bank payment of the amount of all unpaid installments and interest. Having parted with all interest in the contract, the bank refused to accept the money so tendered. About 10:30 or 11 o'clock in the same forenoon the plaintiff "went to the Pacific Ready-Cut Homes and offered Mr. Barker the money to pay the entire sum due on the contract, plus interest." On the refusal of Barker to accept the money, the plaintiff immediately deposited the amount thereof in the defendant bank, with instructions to pay the same to Butte and Barker upon their assignment to him, within five days, of the Butler contract. On the next day the bank mailed a letter to Butte and Barker, notifying them of the deposit. At 1:15 o'clock in the afternoon of April 28, Butte and Barker deposited in the mail a letter directed to the plaintiff, stating that the installment of $300 payable April 19 had not been paid; that the plaintiff had "executed a contract for the sale of said automobile to L. Lawrence Law, and delivered possession of the automobile" to him; that the automobile had been "levied upon under writ of attachment" in the action referred to herein; that "you were a party to a sale of said automobile by said Law * * * to us"; and that by reason thereof the writers, "as assignees of the Hellman Commercial Trust and Savings Bank, * * * do hereby elect to take possession of said automobile, * * * and do hereby declare and notify you that all payments heretofore paid under said contract are hereby forfeited." This letter, which was registered, was returned "unclaimed." April 28, the plaintiff duly made a third party claim as owner of the automobile. The next day the Pacific Ready-Cut Homes, Inc., delivered to the sheriff an indemnity bond to cover the plaintiff's third party claim. At the same time Butte and Barker filed a third party claim as owners of the automobile, and it was released to them. They thereafter sold it to persons not parties to this action.

[1] The court found that the plaintiff was never in default except in the time of payment, and that such default was waived. The evidence is sufficient to support the findings. Relative to payment of the April installment, the plaintiff testified that, apparently on April 22, 1924, Butler said: "I talked to Mr. Hellman, and he says you are perfectly good for it and they will hold that in abeyance until the suit is settled."

It is clear that the bank waived plaintiff's defaults, if there were any, except that of nonpayment of the installment which fell due April 19. On April 21 the plaintiff was in default in payment of the March and April installments. The bank may have had the right on that day to elect whether to accept payment of the March installment or to declare a forfeiture of the plaintiff's rights under the contract by reason of his defaults, one of which then existing was the nonpayment of the April installment, but it would be a harsh rule which would permit it to do both. It would be contrary to modern principles of justice to hold that, under the circumstances stated, the bank could accept payment of the March installment on the theory that the contract was still in force and then declare a forfeiture on the ground of a default made prior to such payment. It is true the contract provides that "acceptance by the seller of any payment after same is due shall not constitute a waiver by him" of the provision making time of the essence thereof. It has been held that, under a similar provision, by accepting payment of installments when they were past due, the seller "did not * * * waive its right to retake the automobile upon further default." Pacific Finance, etc., Co. v. Pierce, 48 Cal. App. 600, 603, 191 P. 1115, 1116. This is far from a holding that under such circumstances the seller may retake the automobile on the ground of past defaults. "A condition involving a forfeiture must be strictly interpreted against the party for whose benefit it is created." Civ. Code, § 1442. The reasonable interpretation of the provision in question is that the acceptance of overdue payments "shall not constitute a waiver" of future defaults; the evident purpose being to avoid the necessity of giving notice, after such an acceptance, that strict compliance with the terms of the contract will be exacted in the future. By accepting payment of the March installment on April 21, 1924, the bank "waived all past defaults in performance, but it did not alter the terms of the contract with regard to the future." Hoppin v. Munsey, 185 Cal. 678, 683, 198 P. 398, 400. Butte and Barker had no right to declare a forfeiture on account of any default which the bank had waived, and no subsequent default occurred, the plaintiff having tendered them full performance as soon as he learned that the contract had been assigned to them.

[2] The plaintiff, however, was not entitled to judgment for the full value of the automobile, but only for such value less the amount of the unpaid installments and interest thereon. 24 Cal. Jur. 1056; Corey v. Struve, 170 Cal. 170, 173, 149 P. 48; California C. F. Ass'n v. Ainsworth, 134 Cal. 461, 463, 66 P. 586; Conolley v. Power, 70 Cal. App. 70, 76, 232 P. 744.

[3] There is no evidence whatever to warrant the judgment against the bank. It had a perfect legal right to assign the contract to Butte and Barker, and there is no evidence of any wrongful conduct on its part to the injury of the plaintiff.

The judgment in favor of the plaintiff against the defendant Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank is reversed, and the trial court is directed to enter judgment in its favor against the plaintiff.

The judgment in favor of the plaintiff against the defendants William P. Butte, Berne S. Barker, and Pacific Ready-Cut Homes, Inc., a corporation, is modified by striking from the last paragraph thereof the words and figures, "$7,135.60, in lawful money of the United States (being the sum of $6,000)," and inserting therein in lieu thereof, "$3,500, in lawful money of the United States." As so modified, the judgment against said defendants is affirmed; all of the appellants to recover their costs of appeal.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 31, 1929.

Rehearing Denied March 1, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 1, 1929.

1. New trial ⇨9—Trial court may order new trial of one issue and refuse it as to others separate and distinct therefrom.

It is within the power of trial court, where there is more than one issue of fact in case and such issues are distinct and separable in their nature, to order a new trial of one issue and refuse it as to the others.

2. Appeal and error ⇨979(2)—New trial ⇨68—Granting new trial for lack of evidence is almost entirely within trial court's discretion and will not be reversed except for abuse of discretion.

The granting of a new trial for want of evidence to support the verdict is usually a matter almost entirely within discretion of trial court, and such an order will not be reversed unless an abuse of discretion appears.

3. New trial ⇨9—Trial court in granting new trial in negligence case has discretion to grant new trial as to issue of damages only.

It cannot be said as matter of law that in every personal injury case the issues of negligence and damage are so inseparably blended that a new trial, if granted at all, must be granted as to all issues and cannot be confined solely to issue of damages; question being one of jurisdiction rather than of discretion.

Appeals from Superior Court, Alameda County; E. C. Robinson, Judge.

★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

Action by Ellen Tumelty against the Peerless Stages and another. From orders granting in part plaintiff's motions for a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. Hampton Hoge and Haswell & Martin, all of San Francisco, for appellants in case No. 6560.

J. Hampton Hoge and Haswell & Martin, all of San Francisco, for appellants in case No. 6561.

Ford, Johnson & Bourquin, of San Francisco, for respondent.

GOODELL, Justice pro tem. These appeals are taken by the defendants from an order granting, in part, plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

The plaintiff sued for damages in the sum of $21,600 alleged to have been suffered through the negligence of both defendants, Peerless Stages and J. H. Asselin. The plaintiff was riding in the automobile of the defendant Asselin, as his guest, with members of his family, when a collision occurred between the Asselin car, proceeding southerly on the highway near Milpitas, and an auto stage of the defendant stage company proceeding northerly. The traffic was heavy on the Sunday afternoon in question, and the stage had turned to its left out of the line of north-bound traffic, the progress of which had become somewhat retarded, and soon after leaving the line the two vehicles collided. The point presented on appeal renders unnecessary a more detailed statement of the occurrence. The jury returned a verdict against both defendants for $1,000. The plaintiff moved for a new trial, which motion was "granted as to the issues of damage only, on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict rendered herein."

"The question herein presented," to adopt counsel's own statement of it, "is one solely of law—whether the order of the trial court was within its jurisdiction."

[1] Since the case of San Diego Land & Town Co. v. Neale, 78 Cal. 63, 20 P. 372, 3 L. R. A. 83, it has been settled law in this state (and it seems to be the prevailing rule elsewhere) that: "It is within the power of the trial court, where there is more than one issue of fact in a case and such issues are distinct and separable in their nature, to order a new trial of one issue and refuse it as to the others." Estate of Everts, 163 Cal. 449, 125 P. 1058. See, also, Duff v. Duff, 101 Cal. 1, 35 P. 437; Levin v. Sherwood, 55 Cal. App. 308, 203 P. 404; and Donnatin v. Union, etc., Co., 38 Cal. App. 8, 175 P. 26, 177 P. 845.

The appellants readily and frankly recognize this, but urge that an order granting a limited new trial "is wholly erroneous in this character of case"; the argument being that in an action for personal injuries, where negligence is seriously disputed at the trial, the issues of negligence and damage are so inextricably interwoven that a new trial on the issue of damages alone is legally unauthorized. The case at bar, it is claimed, is within the qualification respecting severability of issues, expressed in Estate of Everts, supra.

The Neale Case itself recognizes that "there may be cases where the issues are so inseparably blended as to render a separation impracticable." The only question for decision, as we see it, is whether it may be said as a matter of law that in any and every personal injury case the issues of negligence and damage are so "inseparably blended" that a new trial, if granted at all, must be granted as to all the issues.

[2] The rule is a familiar one that: "The granting of a new trial for want of evidence to support the verdict is usually a matter almost entirely within the discretion of the trial court. Such order will not be reversed unless an abuse of discretion appears." Estate of Everts, supra.

If therefore trial courts have the undoubted power to grant limited new trials in all cases where the issues are severable, and if it be true that the granting of a new trial for want of evidence to support the verdict is discretionary, the question presents itself whether there is anything peculiar to personal injury cases, as such, that removes them into a class by themselves, and renders them immune from the operation of the rule applicable to new trials generally. The appellants cite no authority in California or from other jurisdictions which goes so far as to so hold. Counsel shows that there is no reported decision in this state where such limited new trial has been granted in a negligence case; but, while there is such absence of authority, counsel for the appellants cite a number of personal injury cases from the New England states and from North Carolina, where, without exception, the rule is found to be the same as that in California. True, in some of these cases the courts determined that the issues of liability and damage were so blended as to render their separation prejudicial (and the cases are, of course, cited for their persuasive effect in that regard); but it is likewise true that in our own state, whenever such issues are found to be so identified, our own courts, trial and appellate, will be just as ready to follow that course. The circumstance that in some instances, because the facts of the particular case compelled it, new trials sought on some issues have been ordered as to all issues, does not indicate that there should be a special exception in personal injury cases. It is simply an application of the reservation found in San Diego Land & Town Co. v. Neale, supra, "that there may be cases where the issues are so inseparably blended as to render a separation impracticable."

In Jarrett v. High Point Trunk & Bag Co., 144 N. C. 299, 56 S. E. 937, cited by appellants, the court was strongly urged to depart from Benton v. Collins, 125 N. C. 83, 34 S. E. 242, 47 L. R. A. 33 (which sanctions limited new trials in negligence cases), and, addressing itself to that argument, the court says: "As we have awarded a new trial generally, it is not necessary now to determine that question." In Benton v. Collins, 125 N. C. 91, 34 S. E. 242, 47 L. R. A. 33, it was held that the trial court may set aside a verdict as to damages, and award a new trial on that issue alone, though some of the matters involved in the other issues may have tended to mitigate the damages; for whatever evidence was introduced on the first trial on such other issues in mitigation of damages would be admissible on the second trial on the general issues as to damages. The same case holds that the action of the trial court in setting aside a verdict for inadequacy of damages, being discretionary, is not reviewable. It is interesting to note that this was an action for damages growing out of an assault and battery, a type of case, certainly, where the facts of the occurrence would seem to lend color to the question of damages. In Doody v. Boston & Maine R. R. Co., 77 N. H. 161, 89 A. 487, 490, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 846, 849, a personal injury case, the general rule is recognized that "so much of the verdict as is not affected by the error" should be preserved and a new trial granted as to the rest. But it was found that the particular circumstances of the case were such that a new trial should be granted in whole. In Pepper v. Lee, 114 A. 10, the Supreme Court of Rhode Island likewise found that "in this particular case the testimony bearing upon damages and liability is interwoven" (italics ours) and ordered a new trial in toto. In General Motors, etc., v. Shepard, 47 R. I. 153, 130 A. 593, the same court, in a breach of warranty case, held that a new trial on all issues should be had where there was conflicting evidence upon the question of liability. The rule that it is "within the authority of this court and the superior court to grant new trials upon the question of damages alone" was expressly recognized and Rhode Island authorities cited therefor. The other cases, without discussing them in detail, all recognize the rule as it exists in California, but for reasons peculiar to the particular case, hold that new trials should be granted in whole, and not in part. Resort need not be had to outside jurisdictions in this regard, for in the case of Mountain Gravel Mining Co. v. Bryan, 111 Cal. 36, 43 P. 410, the Supreme Court deemed "it the better course that the whole case shall again be retried" because of uncertainty as to what issues were or were not intended to be settled by the order. And in Power v. Fairbanks, 146 Cal. 611, 80 P. 1075, an action for a timber trespass, the order granting a new trial as to a limited issue, was reversed.

We are satisfied that the question whether or not the issues in the instant case were severable was peculiarly within the trial judge's discretion. Justice Montgomery in the case of Benton v. Collins, supra, says: "Holding, then, as we do, that the superior courts of this state have the power to set aside verdicts for inadequacy of damages, we logically conclude that such power is discretionary with them, and that it is not reviewable by us. The power to correct prejudiced and grossly unfair verdicts must be vested somewhere, and, in our judgment, it is best that such power be confided to the judges who preside over the trials." And so in this case, the trial judge heard all the evidence at first hand, and was in a better position, than is an appellate court, to know whether the issues were or were not severable, that is to say, whether or not anybody would be prejudiced, or subjected to hardship or injustice, if the issue of negligence (determined adversely to the defendants) were removed from further contest. Parts of the record have been printed, but from such excerpts it does not appear that the issues of negligence and damage are at all interwoven. Indeed, the quoted testimony simply shows the way in which the two vehicles came into collision, nothing more.

It should be noted that the motion for new trial was made in the usual way, and not, as in the Neale and Donnatin Cases, supra, for a partial new trial only. It was the court, in other words, who made the severance of issues when the order was made granting the motion in part, and presumably the order would not have been so made unless the judge was satisfied that such severance could be safely and justly made. Had there been any doubt as to this, it is safe to assume that the motion would have been granted as made—in its entirety. There is nothing in the record indicating that there was any abuse of discretion.

It may be that on the retrial of the issue of damages certain testimony respecting the collision itself—testimony already introduced, for that matter, on the issue of negligence—will have to be again put before the jury because relevant to the question of damages, but that is no reason for a complete retrial of the negligence issue. Nor will the introduction of such evidence impinge upon the rule that when a partial retrial is had there remains open for examination "only the issue upon which it is ordered, that the determination of the other issues remain in the record and that they cannot be retried." Estate of Everts, supra; Levin v. Sherwood, supra. It would be admissible only because relevant to the inquiry respecting damages, and would be received for that limited purpose. This very question is discussed in Benton v. Collins, supra, from which we have already quoted.

It is not at all rare or unusual for defendants in negligence cases to concede liability at the outset of a trial and to put before the jury the single question of the extent of plaintiff's damage. On principle there would seem to be no difference between the elimination of the issue of negligence by voluntary act of the defendant, and its elimination by the trial judge after the defendant has had his day in court on such issue, and the trial judge, who has heard all the evidence, has become convinced that nothing could be gained by relitigating that issue, and no prejudice suffered by not relitigating it. As was said in Robinson v. Muir, 151 Cal. 118, 125, 90 P. 521, 524: "* * * It would be imposing a useless burden and expense upon the parties to require the issues affecting these claims, which have once been properly adjudicated, to be again reopened for litigation. (See Emerson v. Yosemite, etc., Co., 149 Cal. 50, 85 P. 122.)"

[3] We are satisfied that the question whether or not a partial new trial may be granted in negligence cases is not a question of jurisdiction, but rather of discretion. In the case at bar there is nothing to indicate that there was any abuse of the court's discretion.

The orders from which the appeals were taken are therefore affirmed in both cases.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

PEOPLE v. BERG. (Cr. 1726.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 26, 1929.

1. Constitutional law 🔑265—Indictment and information 🔑18—Laws prescribing form of indictments and informations held not unconstitutional, as depriving any one of liberty without due process (Pen. Code, §§ 951, 952, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1043; Const. U. S. Amend. 14).

Pen. Code, §§ 951, 952, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1043, prescribing the form of indictments and informations, and providing that the same are sufficient, if containing in substance a statement that accused has committed some public offense, therein specified in ordinary and concise language, held not in violation of Const. U. S. Amend. 14, as depriving any one of his liberty without due process of law.

2. Constitutional law 🔑265—Information charging defendant with killing named person on certain date within named county sufficiently stated offense (Pen. Code, §§ 951, 952, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1043; Const. U. S. Amend. 14).

Information charging, in accordance with requirement of Pen. Code, §§ 951 and 952, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1043, defendant with crime of murder, in that defendant did, on a certain date and within certain county, willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously kill and murder a named person, held to have sufficiently charged nature of offense, as required by Const. U. S. Amend. 14, relating to due process of law.

3. Homicide 🔑139—Information held to have charged murder, rather than manslaughter, though failing to allege killing was with malice aforethought (Pen. Code, §§ 951, 952, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1043).

Information charging defendant with having killed a named person on a certain date held to have sufficiently charged murder, under Pen. Code, §§ 951, 952, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1043, rather than manslaughter, though it failed to allege that the killing was with malice aforethought.

4. Criminal law 🔑1035(3)—Alleged error in misconduct of prosecuting attorney was not available, in absence of request for admonition to jury relative thereto.

Alleged error, because of misconduct of prosecuting attorney, effect of which could have been removed by admonition to jury, was not available, where appellant requested no admonition, nor even hinted to court that misconduct had been committed.

5. Criminal law 🔑369(3)—Admitting testimony tending to establish that defendant, charged with murder, was operating office for performance of abortions, held erroneous.

In prosecution for murder, based on an abortion claimed to have been practiced by defendant physician, the admission of testimony of defendant's office nurse relative to class of patients, as male or female, held erroneous, in that only purpose of questions evidently was to show that defendant was operating his office for performance of abortions, and was designed merely to degrade and prejudice defendant in minds of the jury.

6. Criminal law 🔑1169(5)—Questioning witness as to refusal to testify at preliminary examination, at request of defendant's counsel, held erroneous, notwithstanding instructions.

Permitting prosecuting attorney, in examining witness, to refer to previous statement, to effect that she had refused to testify against defendant at the preliminary examination on the suggestion of his counsel, held erroneous, notwithstanding involved instructions given to jury with relation to such testimony.

7. Criminal law 🔑419, 420(4)—Party calling witness cannot, because of failure to testify as expected, prove that witness had elsewhere made desired statements.

In case a witness merely fails to testify as expected, the party calling him is not thereby authorized to prove that witness had elsewhere made desired statements.

8. Criminal law 🔑449(2)—Permitting witness to state that questions and answers in statement made by defendant were free and voluntary was not erroneous.

Permitting witness in murder prosecution to state whether questions and answers in statement made by defendant were free and voluntary was not erroneous, though technically calling for statement of conclusion; the recognized practice, after such question is answered in affirmative, being for defendant to show entire circumstances by cross-examination.

9. Homicide ⚷169(8)—Refusal to admit testimony as to statements of alleged victim of abortion, at time of coming to defendant for treatment, held erroneous.

In prosecution for murder, based on an abortion claimed to have been practiced by defendant, the refusal to admit testimony as to statements made by alleged victim, at time she came to defendant for treatment, was erroneous.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fletcher Bowron, Judge.

Arthur O. Berg was convicted of murder in the second degree, and he appeals. Reversed.

John A. Jorgenson, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

WORKS, P. J. Defendant was convicted of murder in the second degree. He appeals from the judgment of conviction, and from an order of the trial court denying his motion for a new trial.

[1, 2] The information charges appellant with "the crime of murder, a felony, committed as follows: That the said Arthur O. Berg on the 13th day of June, 1928, at and in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously kill and murder one Page Walden, a human being." The charge, thus made, was formulated, with some amplification, in accord with the language of section 951 of the Penal Code as amended in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1043), which prescribes the form of indictments and informations. This section is a legislative exposition of the meaning of section 952 of the same Code, also as amended in 1927, which provides that a criminal charge "shall be sufficient if it contains in substance a statement that the accused has committed some public offense therein specified," and that the "statement may be made in ordinary and concise language without any technical averments or any allegations of matter not essential to be proved. It may be in the words of the enactment describing the offense or declaring the matter charged to be a public offense, or in any words sufficient to give the accused notice of the offense of which he is charged."

[3] It is contended that sections 951 and 952 are in violation of that portion of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States to the effect that no one shall be deprived of his liberty without due process of law, but we think it plain that they are not. We think the Constitution of the United States requires no more specific statement of the nature of appellant's alleged offense than that contained in the information. Appellant was given the name of his alleged victim, the day and venue of the commission of the offense were specified, the name of the crime was set down, it was alleged that it was willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously committed, and the alleged victim was stated to have been a human being. The charge was in the exact language of one approved in People v. Witt, 170 Cal. 104, 148 P. 928, under the old statutes, with the exception that in the latter charge the crime was alleged to have been committed "with malice aforethought." It was said in the case cited: "Concededly this describes the offense of murder in the language of our statute, and is in accord with a form approved over and over again by this court." We cannot see how the omission of the words "with malice aforethought" from the information before us can render the pleading amenable to the objection that it does not show due process of law.

It was well settled, under the Code sections as they existed before the amendments of 1927, that the omission of those words from such an information as was before the court in the case last cited changed the charge from murder to manslaughter. People v. Bones, 35 Cal. App. 429, 170 P. 166. The only difference, then, between a charge of murder and a charge of manslaughter, under the former statute, lay in the presence or in the omission of the words "with malice aforethought," as their presence was necessary to a charge of murder. People v. Bonilla, 38 Cal. 699; People v. Schmidt, 64 Cal. 260, 30 P. 814. Through sections 951 and 952 of the Penal Code, as amended in 1927, the Legislature has declared that murder may be charged by an allegation, such as that in the information now before us, to the effect that, with the other averments present, A. B. did "kill and murder" C. D.—section 951 says "murdered C. D."—while manslaughter may be charged in some such form as "did kill and manslaughter C. D." or perhaps "manslaughtered C. D." We can see no such difference, between these new forms of charges and the old ones which had been upheld for so many years, as would render the new ones amenable to the claim that they do not provide due process of law. With the aid of the Code sections defining the difference between murder and manslaughter, which, of course, all are presumed to know and understand, and with the other allegations prescribed by section 951, one charged with either murder or manslaughter in accordance with the Code is fully informed of the offense laid at his door. We have thus dealt with the matter of both of these charges, for the reason that appellant, in addition to the constitutional question he presents, contends that the information charges only manslaughter. We think the constitutional question is untenable, and that the charge made was murder, not manslaughter

[4] The record shows that the crime with which appellant was charged was the result of an abortion claimed to have been practiced by him upon his alleged victim. The prosecution offered as a witness a trained nurse, who had served under appellant on the case from the handling of which the charges arose. After she had given some testimony in response to questions of the district attorney, the following occurred, as shown by the record:

"The District Attorney: You never testified to that [at the preliminary examination], did you? Mr. Jorgenson: Objected to as cross-examination of their own witness. A. No, I did not. The District Attorney: If your honor please, I ask leave to cross-examine this witness on the ground of surprise on a material fact. She has heretofore testified as to all the conversation. Now that she has had time to think it over, she wants to change some of her testimony, and we have a perfect right to cross-examine the witness; we are taken by surprise when she changes her testimony. Mr. Jorgenson: She is not changing her testimony. The District Attorney: I submit that she has, your honor. Mr. Jorgenson: All you said was, she didn't testify that before. A person cannot always remember the whole conversation and everything that was said. The District Attorney: No; but sometimes they can, when their memory is refreshed in the meantime. The Court: I will sustain the objection."

Appellant contends that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct in asserting that the witness had "changed her testimony." Without deciding the particular point, we think the question is not available to appellant. If the officer's remarks were misconduct, we think the offense was not so flagrant that the effect of what he said could not have been removed by an admonition to the jury couched in proper terms. Appellant asked for no admonition, however, nor did he hint to the court that misconduct had been committed.

[5] Because of a somewhat involved chain of events connected with the testimony of another witness offered by the prosecution, it is insisted that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct and that the trial court committed error. This witness was the office nurse of appellant. In passing upon the contentions made, we shall determine as we go along whether, in specific instances, the court erred.

The witness was asked what class of patients appellant had at his office, whether they were male or female, and objection was made and overruled. "A. He had men and ladies. * * * Q. They were mostly young girls, were they not?" An objection was then made and overruled. "A. There weren't very many young people. He had people about 30 or 40 or 50." The court erred in each of the rulings mentioned in this paragraph. The only purpose of the questions, evidently, was to show that appellant was operating his office for the performance of abortions. If we grant, for the sake of argument, what we are far from deciding, that other crimes may be proved in cases of this nature, in order to show system or intent, the questions cannot be justified on that ground, as "it is not competent for the prosecutor to introduce irrelevant evidence falling short of crime, and designed merely to degrade and prejudice the defendant in the minds of the jury." 8 Cal. Jur. 59. The extent to which the rulings of the court were harmful, considering the nature of the answers given to the questions propounded, will be determined later, as will the question of the injury done by other errors which were committed, as shown below.

The record contains the following, with the same witness on the stand: "Q. To your knowledge was Dr. Berg performing any abortions there? Mr. Jorgenson: Object—A. No; I do not. * * * Q. That is, you don't know? A. No. Q. These patients there were mostly women, were they not?" Objection made and overruled. "A. Most of our patients were women." The ruling here exhibited was error.

The next instance: "Q. Most of these women patients that came there were pregnant or in a family way, were they not? Mr. Jorgenson: Objected to as irrelevant. A. I don't know. The Court: The objection will be overruled. The District Attorney: How? Mr. Jorgenson: What was the answer? A. I couldn't tell anything about it." The ruling referred to in this paragraph was error.

[6] The office nurse was asked whether appellant, at a time when police officers came to his office, did not hide in a closet, and she responded that she did not know. She was then asked whether she told one of the officers, on the same occasion, that appellant had said "he was going away for a few days." The district attorney then presented to her a statement made by her to certain police officers, and asked her whether it refreshed her recollection as to what was said at the time. She said it did not. He then offered to read a question and answer he had shown the witness, and objection was made and overruled. The prosecutor next inquired whether at a place and date specified and in the presence of persons named—police officers and others —she did not make a statement. Objection was again made and overruled. The prosecutor then inquired whether at the time specified the witness was asked, "He came in hurriedly, didn't he?" evidently referring to appellant, and whether she did not answer, "Yes." Objection was again made and overruled, whereupon the nurse answered that she did not remember saying that. She was then asked whether any one had told her what testimony to give, and whether any one had told her to refuse to testify. To both questions she answered in the negative. She was next asked: "Isn't it a fact that counsel for the defendant told you to refuse to testify in this case?" Objection was made and overruled, and the inquiry was answered in the negative.

The prosecutor then read to the witness the following portion of a statement given the district attorney after the preliminary examination: "Q. Do you know a lawyer by the name of John C. Jorgenson? * * * A. Yes. Q. You know he is the lawyer for Arthur O. Berg? A. Yes. Q. He is not your lawyer, is he? A. No. * * * Q. He has never come to see you? A. No; just to get Dr. Berg's license after the hearing. * * * Q. Prior to that time you had never had any dealings with him? A. No. Q. You remember the day you went to court on this? A. 22d of June. Q. Did he talk to you at that time? A. He talked to me; yes. Q. What did he say to you? A. Just talked, said 'Hello,' and I said, 'Do you think things are going to be all right?' and he said 'Yes.' Q. Then what did he say? A. I remember what I said, 'Will I be the first one called up?' and he said, 'No,' he did not think so. He said, 'It is nothing to worry about; just refuse to testify.' Q. Did he tell you why you should refuse to testify? A. No; I did not ask him. Q. You followed out his instructions, and you refused to testify; is that right? A. Yes. Q. And the only reason is because he told you not to? A. Yes; that is the only reason." The witness then stated that she had so answered the questions. She also said that the statement was the truth, but an objection was made to the question which drew forth this answer, after it was made. The objection was sustained and the answer was stricken.

After the office nurse had concluded her testimony, and after other witnesses had testified, the trial judge made the following remarks, interspersed with statements of counsel: "While the witness Corinne Kissell was on the stand certain questions were asked her, apparently for the laying of the foundation for impeaching questions, and the state has not offered any evidence of an impeaching nature, and I think that the jury should be instructed to disregard any inference that may have been gained or gathered by them from the asking of those questions. * * * I am going to cover it in this way: Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, before the case proceeds further, if you have gained any inference through the asking of any questions of the witness Corinne Kissell that she may have made statements at other times contrary to her testimony here on the stand, you must disregard any such inference. Is that clear to the jury? In other words, without emphasizing those particular matters by asking the reporter to read back in his notes, to read over those questions, you will merely disregard that such questions were asked. If that is not entirely clear to the jury, I can explain it farther. Very well, proceed. The District Attorney: Do I understand your honor is instructing them to disregard her own admission that she at other times made contradictory statements? The Court: No; no; not as to that, but as to anything other than the testimony of the witness on the stand that she may at other times have made a statement contradictory to her sworn testimony during the progress of this trial. The District Attorney: In other words, your honor is instructing them that they must not draw an inference from the asking of the question where we have not proved the contrary, but if the contrary has been proved by other witnesses, or by her own testimony, the jury may make proper inferences from that? The Court: Oh, yes; the jury may, of course, consider any testimony that has been admitted here properly, any testimony of witnesses from the stand may be considered and weighed by you; but from the mere fact of the asking of the questions, or certain of the questions, of the witness, that the witness Corinne Kissell may have made, if you have drawn such inference, that she may have made certain admissions, from the mere asking of the questions, you must disregard such inference or any inference based solely upon the fact that such questions were asked her. A Juror: But we can take her testimony? The Court: You can take her testimony; yes."

During the final argument of the cause before the jury the district attorney said of the office nurse that at "one time she said nobody told her not to testify, and the next time she said somebody told her not to testify." The trial judge here interrupted the prosecutor and counsel for appellant objected to his statement. The judge observed: "There is no evidence in the case, no statement admitted in evidence, indicating she made that statement." This remark was followed by a colloquy between court and counsel and then the following occurred: "The Court: Well, I fear the jury may misconstrue the evidence, and I am going to take this occasion here and now to instruct the jury. The testimony of the witness Corinne Kissell was: 'Q. Has any one told you to refuse to testify? A. No, sir.' Then there were certain questions asked her, and the objection was sustained. And later in the case, if I recall correctly, she was asked if, at the time she made a statement in the district attorney's office, it was true and [sic] false, and she said true, but that statement is not in evidence, and the purpose of impeaching questions is not to establish the fact embraced in the question, or the assumed fact, I should say, embraced in the question, but rather to raise an issue as to the credibility of the witness, and therefore you may consider those questions and answers as to contradictory statements for the purpose of the credibility of the witness, to determine whether or not the witness did in these particulars or in other particulars speak the truth, but not as to the facts assumed in the questions themselves. The District Attorney: The statement itself that she gave there at that time, your honor, was read into the record in this case, and she said that that statement was true. That was what I had reference to. The Court: You asked her if she did not make the statement, and she said the statement was true. The District Attorney: Yes. The Court: But she at the same time denied the fact that she had been instructed not to testify in the case; so her admission that the statement was true might be taken by the jury as touching upon her qualifications to speak the truth; in other words, as to her credibility as a witness, but not as to the truth contained in the statement, which is not in evidence. In other words, it is an admission that she made a contradictory statement at another time."

Before the district attorney concluded his argument, the trial judge again took up the same subject: "The Court: Well, I think we had best take an adjournment at this time. Before we do, and while the matter is on my mind, I am thinking of the testimony concerning which you have just made reference to with respect as to whether the witness Corinne Kissell was or was not instructed to refuse to testify, and I fear that that evidence, particularly in view of the fact that it has been emphasized by the district attorney, might be misconstrued by the jury. That is not an issue in this case whatever. The evidence is introduced, and the jury is required to consider the evidence in determining whether or not the crime was committed as charged in the information. I fear that the cross-examination, amounting almost to impeachment of the witness Kissell, was or might be construed as an attempt to impeach the witness on an immaterial matter, and I believe, inasmuch as the matter has been emphasized, that I will instruct the jury to disregard entirely the questions as to whether the witness Corinne Kissell was or was not instructed to refuse to testify in this case, and to consider only the evidence of the witness Kissell with respect to the issues in the case; that is, to consider the evidence only for the purpose of determining whether there was or was not a crime committed as charged in the information."

Closely following these observations the record shows this: "A Juror: Your honor, can we consider whether she was a willing or a reluctant witness? The Court: Yes; you have an opportunity, as I will advise you further at the conclusion of the case, to weigh the testimony of every witness, consider their manner upon the stand, and the manner in which they testify. That is exclusively within your province to consider, not only the spoken words, but the attitude of the witness while on the stand, and the manner of the witness' testimony. That applies, of course, not only to the one witness, but to every witness who is produced in the case."

In his final instructions the trial judge told the jury that a witness may "be impeached by evidence that he has made, at other times, statements inconsistent with his present testimony as to any matter material to the cause on trial," and he gave the following specific instruction concerning the testimony of the office nurse: "You are instructed to disregard all questions to and answers by the witness Corinne Kissell made during the trial of this case in this court relating to what such witness may or may not have stated or testified heretofore and her conduct in reference to such former statements or testimony, if any, excepting only such statements which the evidence shows she may or may not have made at the time of the defendant's arrest at her apartment, but you may consider all other testimony of such witness and weigh it in accordance with the rules I have given or will hereafter give you the same as the testimony of any other witness in the case."

[7] Thus was this involved chain of circumstances ended. Appellant contends that the trial court erred in permitting, over repeated objections, that portion of the examination of the office nurse which terminated in the question whether in her statement to the police officers she had answered in the affirmative the question, "He came in hurriedly, didn't he?" We think the contention must be upheld. The witness was not confronted with her earlier statement for the purpose of showing that she had made assertions inconsistent with her testimony, but with the intent only of showing something to which she had not testified. "If a witness merely fails to testify as expected, that does not authorize the party calling him to prove that the witness had elsewhere made the desired statements." People v. Creeks, 141 Cal. 529, 75 P. 101.

It is also insisted that the court erred in allowing the district attorney to question the witness about her statement made to him, in which she referred to her refusal to testify at the preliminary examination, and in which she gave the reasons for the refusal. We think the point is well taken. We can conceive of no theory upon which this evidence was admissible.

[8] We proceed, now, to other features of the case. A statement made by appellant in the form of question and answer, taken down in shorthand and transcribed before the trial, was exhibited to a witness who had heard the questions asked and answered, and he was asked whether the answers were "free and voluntary." The question was objected to on the ground that it called for a conclusion of the witness, and the same point is now made here. The objection was not good. It is the constant and proper practice to ask such a question as a part of the foundation for the reception in evidence of confessions made by those charged with crime, although technically it does call for the statement of a conclusion. The recognized practice, after such a question is answered in the affirmative, is for the defendant to show, by a cross-examination which he may at once conduct, the entire circumstances surrounding the making of the confession.

[9] The defense made by appellant was that an operation for an abortion had been performed upon his alleged victim by some other person, and that she had come to him for relief from its effects. Appellant sought to detail to the jury what the alleged victim said to him when she came to his office for treatment, but the testimony was ruled out as hearsay. He also endeavored to prove what the woman told him as to her condition while she was on his operating table, and this evidence was excluded on the same ground. We are pointed to no case which decides whether or not such evidence is admissible on behalf of a defendant, but we are clearly of the opinion that it is. The people may undoubtedly show in a criminal abortion case that the victim had declared to the defendant that she came to him for the purpose of procuring an abortion to be performed upon her, as the decided cases are plainly to the effect that such declarations, when made to third parties before a visit to the defendant, are admissible to show the purpose of the visit. People v. Wright, 167 Cal. 1, 138 P. 349; People v. Thomas, 51 Cal. App. 731, 197 P. 677. And see People v. Seiffert, 81 Cal. App. 195, 253 P. 189. It would be strange indeed if the defendant could not prove, in such a case, either by his own testimony or by that of others who were present, that the alleged victim declared that she came to him for a totally different purpose, for instance, to be treated for a condition resulting from an operation for abortion already performed by some other person.

Other points are made by appellant, but we think it unnecessary to consider them. We have found it unnecessary, in view of the nature of the errors shown in the record, to read the transcript of the testimony taken at the trial, in view of the provisions of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution. Appellant was damaged by the questions propounded to his office nurse, and which were intended to show the age, sex, and condition of the patients who frequented his office, especially as the witness made answer to one of the questions to the effect that most of the patients were women. He was also damaged by other improper questions addressed to the same witness, especially those which brought out the fact that, upon the suggestion of his counsel, she had refused to testify at the preliminary examination.

We think this harm was not wholly eradicated by the involved instructions, which the trial judge gave to the jury with relation to that testimony, especially in view of what the court said, in connection with that very matter, in response to the question of a juror as to whether the jury might consider whether the witness was a reluctant one. We think the court's response conveyed to the jury the idea that they might determine, from the fact of her refusal to testify at the preliminary examination, that the witness was an unwilling one.

The crowning error, we think, was in the court's refusal to permit appellant to testify to what his alleged victim told him as to the purpose of her call upon him. In view of this error, it can make little difference what was the evidence upon which the jury pronounced its verdict of guilt. If appellant had been permitted to present the excluded testimony, a field of inquiry might have been opened which would have fastened the crime under investigation upon some person other than himself.

We find it unnecessary, because of the view we take concerning the errors of the court, to determine whether the district attorney was guilty of misconduct while the office nurse was on the witness stand.

Judgment and order reversed.

We concur: CRAIG, J.; THOMPSON, J.

PEOPLE v. CITY OF OAKLAND et al. ★
(Civ. 6570.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 30, 1929.

Rehearing Denied March 1, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 29, 1929.

1. Municipal corporations ⚷63(1)—City council's determination that public convenience requires street vacation is subject to judicial review.

Determination of city council that public necessity or convenience requires vacation of street, or portion thereof, is subject to review by the courts.

2. Municipal corporations ⚷63(1)—City council's determination of what constitutes public convenience in proceeding to vacate street is generally conclusive.

Determination of city council of what constitutes public interest or convenience in proceeding for vacation of public street is legislative in character, and is conclusive, in absence of fraud or collusion.

3. Appeal and error ⚷544(3)—On appeal from judgment, on judgment roll alone, court was confined to errors appearing on face of judgment roll, and sufficiency of evidence was not presented.

Where appeal from judgment was taken on judgment roll alone, scope of appellate review was limited to errors appearing on the face of the judgment roll, and question of sufficiency of evidence to support findings was not presented.

★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

4. Municipal corporations 🔑225(5), 657(2)—Vacation of part of street at instance of abutting property owner, and conveyance of property to it, held authorized, where public convenience was promoted and city received consideration (St. 1889, p. 70; Oakland City Charter, § 51, subd. 50).

Vacation of part of street at instance of abutting property owner, and execution of deed to property owner covering the vacated portion of the street, held authorized, under St. 1889, p. 70, and Oakland City Charter (St. 1911, p. 1551) § 51, subd. 50, where public convenience was promoted and city received consideration.

5. Municipal corporations 🔑657(2)—Subject to constitutional limitations, state has plenary power to vacate streets, which it may delegate to municipal corporations, free from judicial control in exercise thereof, in absence of fraud or abuse of power.

State has plenary power to vacate public streets within its borders, subject to constitutional limitations, and may delegate this power to municipal corporations, free from review of action of municipal authorities by the courts, in absence of fraud or plain abuse of power.

6. Municipal corporations 🔑657(2)—Streets may be vacated, whether acquired by condemnation or dedication.

All streets and public ways of city are subject to power of vacation, which may be exercised, irrespective of whether the street was acquired by condemnation or dedication.

7. Municipal corporations 🔑657(1)—Street vacation ordinance held not invalidated by incidental private benefit to abutting property owner, to whom city deeded land, where public convenience was promoted thereby (St. 1889, p. 70; Oakland City Charter, § 51, subd. 50).

Fact that city's vacation of street and conveyance thereof for consideration to abutting property owner resulted in incidental private benefit to the property owner did not constitute legal fraud, or render vacation ordinance invalid, under St. 1889, p. 70, and Oakland City Charter (St. 1911, p. 1551) § 51, subd. 50, where vacation was also for the benefit of the city at large.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by the People against the City of Oakland and others. Judgment for defendants, and the People appeal. Affirmed.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court: WASTE, C. J., and SHENK, J., voting for a transfer.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen. (Forrest M. Pearce, of Oakland, of counsel), for the People.

Preston Higgins, City Atty., and Homer W. Buckley, Deputy City Atty., both of Oakland, for respondent city of Oakland.

Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, of Oakland, for respondent H. G. Prince & Co.

LUCAS, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court of Alameda county, declaring valid an ordinance adopted by the city council of Oakland ordering vacated that portion of East Eleventh street generally described as lying between Twenty-Eighth avenue and Twenty-Ninth avenue.

East Eleventh street, prior to the closing of that portion thereof lying between Twenty-Eighth and Twenty-Ninth avenues, pursuant to the judgment of the trial court herein appealed from, extended from Twenty-Third avenue to Twenty-Ninth avenue, a distance of 1,958.76 feet. The defendant H. G. Prince & Co., one of the respondents herein, owned all of the property fronting on either side of that part of East Eleventh street which was ordered vacated by said ordinance as well as the fee to the street itself. In 1887 the public acquired an easement for a public street over a portion of that part of the street so ordered vacated, and in 1912 acquired a similar easement over the remainder thereof. On the 26th day of August, 1920, pursuant to ordinances of its council, the defendant city of Oakland, another respondent herein, for the purpose of extending East Tenth street and East Ninth street to Twenty-Ninth avenue, instituted two proceedings in eminent domain against the said H. G. Prince & Co.

On the 4th day of November, 1921, and during the pendency of said proceedings in eminent domain, said H. G. Prince & Co. presented to the council of respondent city of Oakland a written petition, in which it requested said council to close up and abandon that portion of said East Eleventh street involved in this action upon the grounds that three streets, to wit, East Eleventh street, East Tenth street, and East Ninth street, were not required in said locality, and hampered the industrial development of said locality, and particularly prevented defendant H. G. Prince & Co. from extending and adding to its plant. In said petition it was proposed that, if the city of Oakland would close up said portion of East Eleventh street, it (the said H. G. Prince & Co.) would convey to the city of Oakland the property described in the above-mentioned eminent domain proceedings, and at its own expense improve, by paving, guttering, sidewalking, and curbing, East Ninth street and East Tenth street, between Twenty-Eighth avenue and Twenty-Ninth avenue, and pave Twenty-Eighth avenue from the southerly line of East Eleventh street to the northerly line of East Tenth street, and move the fire hydrants on East Eleventh street to such locations as might be required by the fire department of the city of Oakland.

Upon its receipt, the council referred said petition to the city planning commission. On November 21, 1921, the city planning commission, after a full and complete investigation as to the location of the streets in question, traffic needs, the character of development in the vicinity of said streets, and the general character of the surroundings, recommended to the city council the granting of the said petition of H. G. Prince & Co., the closing of said East Eleventh street, and the opening and extension of East Tenth street and East Ninth street as proposed. On November 28, 1921, said city council passed its resolution of intention, No. 23066, New Series, entitled "Resolution of Intention to Close up and Abandon a portion of East Eleventh Street." Thereupon the superintendent of streets of said city posted and published notices in the manner and for the time provided by section 3 of the "Street Opening Act of 1889," and within the time required by section 4 of said act certain interested persons filed a written protest, objecting to said proposed improvement, and to the extent of the district to be affected thereby.

Thereafter several hearings thereon were had before the said city council. The protest was overruled and the said city council, on March 7, 1922, passed Ordinance 2267, New Series, entitled "An ordinance ordering the closing up and abandoning of a portion of East Eleventh street northwesterly of Twenty-Ninth avenue, and authorizing and directing the execution, acknowledgment, and delivery of a deed to the abutting owner, 'and finding and determining that equity requires the conveyance to said abutting owner, and that the compensation therefor is adequate and proper.'" In and by the terms of said ordinance the council found that public convenience and necessity required the closing of said street, and directed the mayor of said city to execute a deed conveying to said H. G. Prince & Co. all the city's right, title, and interest in and to said portion of East Eleventh street ordered closed and abandoned by said ordinance, and to deliver said deed in escrow, to be finally delivered upon the fulfillment by the said H. G. Prince & Co. of its promises and agreements.

Action was brought in the name of the people of the state of California, by Attorney General U. S. Webb, seeking to enjoin the closing of the portion of East Eleventh street above referred to, and asking that the action of the city council to that end be declared void. The trial court upheld the proceedings of the city council, and plaintiff appeals from its judgment.

[1, 2] Counsel for appellant in their opening brief contend that the determination of the Oakland city council that public necessity or convenience required the vacation of a portion of East Eleventh street is subject to judicial review (citing People v. City of Los Angeles, 62 Cal. App. 781, 218 P. 63); that courts will look beyond the recitals of an ordinance vacating streets and examine the results and surrounding circumstances, to determine whether or not the purpose of the ordinance is public and therefore within the scope of legislative discretion, or private and therefore without the scope; and that an inspection of the judgment roll in this case clearly establishes the fact that the vacation of that portion of East Eleventh street complained of was for no other purpose and with no other result than private gain to said H. G. Prince & Co.

It is true, as contended by appellant, that the determination of a city council that public necessity or convenience requires the vacation of a street or a portion thereof is subject to judicial review. Were it otherwise, as suggested in People v. City of Los Angeles, supra, a false recital in a municipal ordinance to the effect that public necessity or convenience required certain legislative action would give validity to an act which would have been invalid had the ordinance recited the truth. Such action would sound in fraud, and fraud and collusion may be inquired into. But, as also stated in the City of Los Angeles Case, at page 786 of 62 Cal. App. (218 P. 65): "The authorities are quite uniform, that as a general legal proposition, in the absence of fraud or collusion, the decision by the city council of what constitutes public interest or convenience in a matter of the sort here in question [the vacation of a public street] is legislative in character, and that a determination by the city council of such a question is conclusive."

[3] Appellant herein, in conformity with the right of judicial review, brought action in the superior court, and we take it all of the acts and proceedings of the city council were at the time of trial judicially reviewed. This appeal being taken on the judgment roll alone, there is no evidence before this court; but the findings of fact recite that evidence, oral and documentary, was introduced on behalf of the respective parties, and that the cause was duly submitted to the court for its decision. Thereupon the trial court found:

(1) "That the adoption of said ordinance vacating said portion of East Eleventh street was solely because of public necessity and convenience and for the purpose of rearranging the streets in the vicinity to more adequately serve the public needs, necessity, and convenience."

(2) "That in said closing and abandoning of said portion of East Eleventh street, and every act and thing done in connection therewith, and incidental thereto, the members of the council of the city of Oakland, and each of them, and every officer, agent, and representative of the said city of Oakland, acted in good faith, and without any fraud or collusion, or abuse of discretion, and solely for and by reason of the public necessity, interest and convenience."

The findings of the trial court in the City of Los Angeles Case, relied upon by plaintiff, are far different, for there the court found:

"That neither the public necessity nor interest nor convenience required the abandonment of such portion of Argyle avenue, and that the public derived no benefit therefrom." Page 791 of 62 Cal. App. (218 P. 67).

It is the law that, "when an appeal from a judgment is made upon the judgment roll alone, the scope of appellate review is confined to alleged errors appearing on the face of the judgment roll. (Marr v. So. Cal. Gas Co., 198 Cal. 278, 282 [245 P. 178]; Neale v. Morrow, 174 Cal. 49 [161 P. 1165]; Miller v. Yule [80 Cal. App. 618, 252 P. 737].) In such an appeal no question can arise as to the insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings." This being the law, and the trial court herein having found the existence of public necessity and convenience, and the nonexistence of fraud or collusion, such findings cannot be disturbed.

[4] Since no question can arise as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings, and since appellant does not point out any error in the pleadings, and indeed a inspection of the pleadings reveals none, it would appear that the scope of this court's review is limited to a consideration of but one question, namely: Do the findings of fact support the judgment?

In the closing brief of appellant it is contended that they do not for two reasons: First, because the city council had no power to adopt the ordinance of vacation; and, second, because the findings of fact show legal fraud on their face. The act (Stats. 1889, p. 70) and the several acts amendatory thereof, under which said portion of East Eleventh street was vacated, authorizes the vacation of a public street only "whenever the public interest or convenience may require." The charter of the city of Oakland (Stats. 1911, p. 1551), in section 51, subdivision 50, provides:

"Powers of the Council.

"Sec. 51. Except as herein otherwise expressly provided, the council shall exercise all the general powers of the city herein set forth and all powers now held by or that may hereafter be given to the city under the Constitution or the laws of the state; but only in the manner and under the conditions of this charter, and subject to all the provisions thereof.

"In addition to all such powers, the council, subject to the provisions and restrictions of this charter, shall have power * * *

"(50) Whenever any street or portion of a street shall be abandoned or closed by ordinance, to convey by deed such street or portion of street so abandoned or closed, to the owners of the lands adjacent thereto in such wise as the council shall deem that equity requires. But the council shall have no power to convey by deed or otherwise without adequate compensation any street or portion of a street which shall have been acquired by the city by deed from any person or persons whatever. And this section shall not be construed as empowering or authorizing the council to close any street or portion thereof merely by the consent of owners of lands adjacent thereto and when the public convenience does not so require."

It thus appears that the city council by statute was empowerd to close said portion of East Eleventh street whenever the public interest or convenience so required, and that the city council, upon said closing, under the charter provision heretofore quoted, was empowered to convey by deed said portion of East Eleventh street to H. G. Prince & Co., the owner of lands adjacent thereto, in such manner as the council should deem that equity required, providing the city of Oakland received adequate compensation therefor. In fact, the council had no power to make such a conveyance unless the city actually received adequate compensation. The findings herein conclusively establish that the city council vacated said portion of East Eleventh street in accordance with the provisions of the Statutes of 1889, p. 70, and that the city council, in accordance with the above quoted provision of the Oakland City Charter did convey by deed the public easement in said portion of East Eleventh street so vacated to H. G. Prince & Co., the owner of lands adjacent thereto, for adequate compensation.

Since the city council was empowered by statute to close the street in question, and followed strictly the procedure outlined therefor by the general laws, for appellant's contention that the council acted without power to be sound it must be based on the principle that the empowering statute itself is unconstitutional. Yet appellant's counsel point out no constitutional inhibition against such an enactment, but instead content themselves with arguing that there is a distinction between municipal property of a private nature and that of a public nature—that the street in question was public in nature, impressed with a trust for the use and benefit of the people of the state, and under the authorities cannot be alienated by the municipality nor can the Legislature authorize or sanction its alienation.

An examination of the authorities cited, however, shows that they are easily distinguishable from the case at bar in this: They either refer to lands originally dedicated to public use by an act of Congress and the state's control over them was therefore limited, or there was no legislative act by the state authorizing alienation. An attempt is made further to distinguish between lands held in fee by a municipal corporation and those where dedication for a public use has been made of merely an easement therein. We find no justification under the authorities for such a distinction, in so far as they are applicable to the facts of this case.

[5] The general rule on the question of authority for vacating streets as stated by Mr. Justice Rudkin in Lockwood v. City of Portland (C. C. A.) 288 F. 480, seems to be universally upheld: "The following propositions are so firmly established as to require no citation of authority in their support: First, subject to the limitations contained in the Constitution of the United States, and in its own Constitution, the power of a state to vacate public streets within its borders is plenary and absolute; second, this power may be delegated to municipal corporations; and, third, a court of equity cannot review the action of the municipal authorities in the exercise of the power thus delegated in the absence of fraud or a plain abuse of power."

[6] It is also the general rule that: "All the streets and public ways of a city, however acquired, are subject to the power of vacation. A power to vacate streets may be exercised whether the public acquired the street to be vacated by condemnation or by dedication." 44 Cor. Jur. 895; McQuillan on Municipal Corporations (2d Ed.) vol. 4, p. 263. "The Legislature may delegate the power to vacate streets to the municipal authorities, and has done so, but the exercise by the local authorities of this power is dependent on the will and subject to the control of the Legislature, and after such power has been committed, the Legislature may revoke it in part as well as in whole or, at least under the former Constitution, it might without an express revocation, itself exercise the power in any particular instance. This rule applies to streets which have been dedicated to public use, since a street, when dedicated, becomes the property of the whole state, which, by its Legislature, can deal with or dispose of it at its pleasure." 19 Cal. Jur. pp. 33, 34.

[7] These rules are apparently recognized by appellant's counsel, for in their final contention that the findings do not support the judgment because legal fraud appears upon their face it is conceded that the Oakland City Charter conferred upon that municipality the power of selling property which had once been used for street purposes, where the city owned the fee, and that in proper cases a municipality has the right to abandon or vacate a public easement in a street. In this regard, however, it is contended the case at bar is not a proper case, because the face of the record shows that the vacation proceedings were for private benefit rather than the public good. To this we cannot agree. The validity and the finality of the findings of public convenience and necessity have already been discussed. The face of the record does not show the purpose to be one of private gain—at most all that can be said is that the private benefit presumably accruing to H. G. Prince & Co. was incidental to the public welfare. This does not constitute legal fraud.

"Faithfulness to the public trust reposed in the members of the legislative body will be presumed. So the fact that some private interest may be served incidentally will not invalidate the vacation ordinance." McQuillan, supra, vol. 4, p. 267. "The true rule seems to be that a municipality cannot vacate a street or a part thereof for the sole purpose of benefiting an abutting owner, and that the power to vacate streets cannot be exercised in an arbitrary manner, without regard to the interest and convenience of the public or individual rights; but that the municipality may vacate a street on the petition of an abutter for his benefit where the vacation is also for the benefit of the municipality at large; i. e., where the use to which the vacated part of the street is to be put is of more benefit to the community than the retention of such land as a way for a street. As to what are public as distinguished from private purposes, an eminent legal author has said: 'The abolition of grade crossings, the construction or improvement of railroad depots and terminals, and the rearrangement of streets to secure a more regular and harmonious system, are public purposes for which the power of vacation may properly be exercised.'" McQuillan, supra, pp. 269, 270.

In the opinion of the court the foregoing considerations effectually dispose of appellant's contentions.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

TURNEY v. SHATTUCK. (Civ. 5690.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 1, 1929.

1. Executors and administrators 🔑473, 474 (1)—Settlement of account in probate of removed executrix was necessary before suit against her for money had and received (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1628, 1629).

Settlement of account in probate by removed executrix at the instance and request of administrator with the will annexed, in accordance with authority of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1628, 1629, was necessary before suit would lie against executrix for money had and received, in that the administrator with the will annexed was not entitled to have a plurality of independent inquiries on the same subject in the same court at the same time.

2. Pleading 🔑237(6)—Permitting amended supplemental complaint to conform to proof as to executrix's account, settlement of which was pending at time original complaint was filed, held erroneous.

Where settlement of account of removed executrix pending in probate court at time suit was brought by administrator with the will annexed for money had and received was completed during the trial, the court erroneously permitted amended supplemental complaint to be filed to conform to proof on the subject, since at time original complaint was filed the matter alleged therein was in exclusive jurisdiction of probate court, and under such circumstances the complaint could not be vivified by amendment or supplement, particularly since the order settling account was an appealable order and the time for appeal had not expired at time supplemental complaint was filed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Fleming, Judge.

Suit by Harold Turney, administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Nicholas John Steiner, deceased, against Maud S. Shattuck. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Walters & Mauk, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Andrew J. Copp, Jr., of Los Angeles, for respondent.

STEPHENS, Justice pro tem. The defendant in this case was named in the will of Nicholas John Steiner as executrix without bond, and shortly after the death of Steiner she was duly appointed to that office and qualified on June 20, 1917. On February 25, 1924, citation issued commanding the executrix to appear May 9, 1924, and show cause why she should not be removed. Her powers were suspended in the order for the citation. On June 2, 1924, she was removed by order of the superior court sitting in probate. On August 1, 1924, Rev. Harold Turney was appointed administrator with the will annexed. He is the plaintiff and respondent herein. On September 16, 1924, said administrator caused a citation to issue by which the defendant was directed to appear in probate court on October 17, 1924, to show cause why she should not be examined as to property belonging to the estate and fraudulently disposed of by her while executrix. On October 30, 1924, the removed executrix filed her account in probate, and on the 3d day of December, 1924, filed a supplemental account. On November 24, 1924, the administrator with the will annexed filed exceptions to such account. There were several sessions upon the hearing of the report, running from the latter part of October to November 21, all in 1924. Settlement thereof was submitted. The administrator appeared at these hearings and interposed objections to items in the report. The report showed on its face that the executrix had received $248.41 more than she had expended in the estate. During the period of these hearings, and before November 1, 1924, the administrator demanded of appellant that all property of the estate be turned over to him. No assets of the estate of any kind were ever turned over to him, and on November 1, 1924, he filed a suit in the superior court for money had and received, and demanded $2,366.82. On the 16th day of July, 1926, the removed executrix's account was settled, showing that $850.91 was the sum of unexpended funds which should be in her hands. The case went to trial on the 23d day of June, 1926. Thereafter it was continued to July 26, 1926, when the cause was submitted with permission tentatively granted to plaintiff to file a supplemental amended complaint setting up the settlement of the account. On August 19, 1926, a supplemental complaint was filed, setting up, among other allegations, the facts as to settlement of account on July 16, 1926, and prayed for the amount therein determined and double thereof. Subsequently the court found for the plaintiff in the sum of $850.91. Defendant appeals.

The parties agree in their briefs that the sole question for this court to decide is whether or not the cause was prematurely brought. The appellant (defendant below) presented her objection to all testimony on the ground that the whole matter was pending in the same court as a probate proceeding, and that the probate proceeding was exclusive until the account of the removed executrix had been settled. Some evidence on this point was excluded by the court and some admitted, but at all times under the comment of the court that it was of the same opinion as counsel making such objection. Respondent's counsel asked that such testimony be admitted on the ground that the removed executrix was no longer in a representative capacity and that the administrator with will annexed could pursue estate money converted by the removed executrix by direct suit. At the conclusion of plaintiff's case, defendant moved a nonsuit, which was denied. Defendant then rested without offering any evidence.

[1] We are of the opinion that appellant was right in her contentions and that the settlement of the account in probate was necessary before suit would lie.

Before the establishment of the superior court, which embraces within its jurisdiction suits at law and in equity and special proceedings, the powers of the probate court were comparatively limited, and the probate courts of many eastern states remain so to this day. Because of this fact, cases arising in California before the change and later eastern cases are often quoted to show numerous instances where equity steps in to aid the probate proceedings. The cases of Burris v. Kennedy, 108 Cal. 331, 41 P. 458, Heydenfeldt v. Superior Court, 117 Cal. 348, 49 P. 210, and Toland v. Earl, 129 Cal. 148, 61 P. 914, 79 Am. St. Rep. 100, treat this phase of the question exhaustively and review the leading cases. While it is unnecessary to decide herein whether or not this case would have been proper under the system of the old district court and separate court for probate proceedings, it is interesting to note the case of Allen v. Tiffany, 53 Cal. 16, wherein the following language is used:

"The Probate Judge has exclusive jurisdiction to determine the state of accounts between the guardian and ward. The ward may agree upon a settlement with the guardian, subject to the approval of the Probate Judge, or may apply for a citation compelling the guardian to settle his accounts before the Probate Judge. But to hold that prior to such accounting before the Probate Judge, or to his order at proving the settlement in pais, the ward may bring suit in the District Court for a supposed balance, would destroy the symmetry and efficiency of the system furnished by our law for the appointment and conduct of guardians of infants." See Graff v. Mesmer, 52 Cal. 636; Weihe v. Statham, 67 Cal. 84, 7 P. 143.

The point at issue is placed beyond doubt by the language of Mr. Justice Sloss in King v. Chase, 159 Cal. 420, 115 P. 207, a case in which a second personal representative sought an accounting from the executor of his predecessor. Quoting at length from the opinion:

"This action was commenced after the enactment of section 1639 of the Code of Civil Procedure in its present form. It is in the nature of a bill in equity to compel a rendition and settlement of the accounts of a deceased executor. Prior to 1905, when section 1639 was adopted, the statutes of this state contained no provision authorizing the superior court sitting in probate to settle such accounts. Nor was any such power conferred on the probate court, as that court existed under the constitution of 1849. For this reason, it was uniformly held that a bill in equity to compel the executor or administrator of an executor or administrator to settle the account of his testator or intestate with the estate in which the decedent had been acting, was the appropriate, as it was the only, procedure. (Bush v. Lindsey, 44 Cal. 121; Chaquette v. Ortet, 60 Cal. 594; In re Thompson, 101 Cal. 349, 35 P. 991, 36 P. 98, 508; Vance v. Smith, 124 Cal. 219, 56 P. 1031; Slater v. McAvoy, 123 Cal. 437, 56 P. 49; Zurfluh v. Smith, 135 Cal. 644, 67 P. 1089; Guardianship of Wells, 140 Cal. 349, 73 P. 1065.) The power of a court of equity to entertain a suit of this character is, in these cases, based upon the very ground that there is no other method of compelling the accounting. Thus, in Bush v. Lindsey, 44 Cal. 121, the court said: 'We are referred to no provision of the probate act which authorizes the probate court to cite the administrator of an administrator to settle the account of his intestate with the estate of which he was the administrator, and, after a careful examination of the act, we find none which confers that authority. The power must be lodged in some tribunal to require such an account to be taken and settled; and if the probate court does not possess it, it must reside in the district court, as a branch of its equitable jurisdiction.' So, in Chaquette v. Ortet, 60 Cal. 594, the court states that 'there is no provision of the statute providing for the settlement of the account of an administrator who dies before rendering an account. It is because of the absence of such statutory provision, that the right and duty to compel such accounting belongs to a court of equity.'

"It would seem, therefore, that upon the enactment of a statute giving to the court sitting in probate the power and duty of compelling an accounting in such cases, the occasion and ground for the interposition of a court of equity must have ceased. Such a statute came into being by the adoption, in 1905, of section 1639 of the Code of Civil Procedure, reading as follows: 'If any executor or administrator dies, his accounts may be presented by his personal representatives to, and settled by, the court in which the estate of which he was executor or administrator is being administered, and, upon petition of the successor of such deceased executor or administrator, such court may compel the personal representatives of such deceased executor or administrator to render an account of the administration of their testator or intestate, and must settle such account as in other cases.'"

While the whole opinion in King v. Chase may be read with profit in connection with the matter before us, we shall resist a temptation, in the interests of brevity, to quote further from it.

If the facts of the instant case were substituted for the facts in the quoted case, and section 1629 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which covers the proceeding before us, was substituted for section 1639 therein, the reasoning would be conclusive in the instant case. Section 1629 reads as follows: "When the authority of an executor or administrator ceases, or is revoked for any reason, he may be cited to account before the court, at the instance of the person succeeding to the administration of the same estate, in like manner as he might have been cited by any person interested in the estate during the time he was executor or administrator."

See In re Philbrook, 47 Cal. App. 679, 191 P. 77, and Estate of Clary, 71 Cal. App. 22, 234 P. 851, where Mr. Justice Hart exhaustively reviews the authorities. Also see Bauer v. Bauer, 201 Cal. 267, 256 P. 820.

Lord Redesdale said, in Bateman v. Willoe, 1 Sch. L. 201: "I do not know that equity ever does interfere to grant a trial of a matter which has already been discussed in a court of law, a matter capable of being discussed there, and over which the court of law had full jurisdiction."

Respondent argues that the court is impotent to enforce its orders in the probate proceedings, but there is nothing in this point, as will appear from the cases hereinabove cited and the following cases: Philbrook v. Randall, 195 Cal. 95, 231 P. 739; In re Clary, 112 Cal. 292, 44 P. 569; Cook v. Ceas, 143 Cal. 221, 77 P. 65; Elizalde v. Murphy, 4 Cal. App. 114, 87 P. 245; Ex parte Smith, 53 Cal. 204; section 1628, Code Civ. Proc. It may also be noted that the accounting in probate proceedings was availed of by respondent by citation at his instance and request and also by objections at the hearing on the account, but he also proceeded in an independent suit before administration of the matters submitted to the court in probate. Certainly he was not entitled to have a plurality of independent inquiries on the same subject in the same court at the same time; or, as was said in Toland v. Earl, supra: "Why should Judge Coffey, sitting in probate, be instructed by Judge Coffey, sitting in a case in equity brought for that purpose?"

Having arrived at the conclusion that the accounting was not proper outside of the probate proceeding, it will be seen that the original suit was prematurely brought. This was the contention of appellant, and the trial court apparently adhered to the same conclusion throughout the trial.

[2] Subsequently to the beginning of the trial in the instant case, and before its conclusion, the probate court settled the account, and the trial court admitted evidence thereof over appellant's objection. He then allowed an amended supplemental complaint to be filed to conform to proof on this subject. Appellant contends that this does not assist plaintiff, for the reason that a supplemental complaint cannot aid a complaint which was prematurely filed; in other words, when the complaint in the instant case was filed, the matter alleged therein was already in the exclusive jurisdiction of the probate court, and that under such circumstances the complaint never can be vivified by amendment or supplement. In this also we agree with appellant.

"Furthermore, since a supplemental pleading is proper only in aid of the case made by the original complaint, relief cannot be granted upon a supplemental complaint, where the proof shows that the plaintiff had no cause of action when his original complaint was filed. 'If a party has no cause of action at the time of the institution of his action he cannot maintain it by filing a supplemental complaint founded on matters which have subsequently occurred.' (Wittenbrock v. Bellmer, 57 Cal. 12; Gordon v. San Diego, 108 Cal. 264 [41 P. 301]; Hill v. Den. 121 Cal. 42 [53 P. 642].)" Imperial Land Co. v. Imperial Irr. Dist., 173 Cal. 668, 673, 161 P. 116, 119; Miles v. Bybee, 59 Cal. App. 613, 211 P. 251.

Even if the supplemental complaint could breathe the breath of life into a stillborn cause, it could not do so in the circumstances of this case, because the probate court order settling the account was an appealable order and the time for appeal had not expired at the time the supplemental complaint was filed.

We do not herein consider the question as to whether or not an equitable proceeding independent of the probate court, but concerning subject-matter already pending therein, would lie where the powers of the probate court would be ineffective to provide a remedy for an alleged wrong.

The judgment is reversed.

HENDERSON v. ELECTRIC LOOP LAND CO. SAME v. RICHMOND ANNEX LAND CO. SAME v. HAVENSCOURT CO. (Civ. 6575.) ★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 1, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 28, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 1, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⚷882(3)—Finding on set-off could not be objected to for first time on appeal as not sustained by pleadings, where treated as in issue.

Where action to recover commissions on sale of realty was tried by both parties and by court on theory that defendants' right to credit or set-off for advance commissions retained by broker from collections for defendants was in issue, and court made finding of fact on such issue, objection that finding on right of set-off was not sustained by pleading could not be raised for first time on appeal.

2. Executors and administrators ⚷434(1)—Claim for money collected for defendants and retained by decedent could be offset against claim for commissions earned by decedent.

Cause of action based on contracts executed by deceased during his lifetime to recover commissions for sales made by deceased and earned and which could only be defeated by purchaser's failure to pay installments, and cause of action for set-off against claim for commissions arising out of same contracts of amounts collected for defendants and retained by decedent, held not lacking in mutuality so as to prevent offset of one against the other.

3. Executors and administrators ⚷434(4)—Defendants could offset amount appropriated by decedent against administratrix's claim for decedent's commissions collected after his death, though estate was insolvent.

Where decedent during lifetime collected money belonging to defendants and unlawfully appropriated money to own use, and defendants under same contracts of sale came into possession of commissions claimed by decedent's administratrix, and all sums due for commissions had been collected, defendants were entitled to equitable set-off of their claims against claim for commissions, against objection that offset would work preference amongst creditors of decedent's insolvent estate.

4. Executors and administrators 🔑450—Testimony of decedent's statement that money appropriated was advance on commissions authorized set-off of money appropriated against claim for commissions.

In action to recover commissions on sale of realty, in which defendants filed set-off against claim for commissions for money wrongfully appropriated by decedent during lifetime on same contracts of sale, testimony of bookkeeper that decedent, at time of appropriation of money belonging to defendants, stated that payments were merely advances on his commissions, was sufficient to justify allowance of set-off.

5. Executors and administrators 🔑437(7)—Administratrix's allowance of claim but rejection of set-off did not require suit within three months to preserve right to set-off (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1494, 1498).

Where defendants filed separate claims against estate of decedent for amounts collected by decedent for defendants and wrongfully appropriated and credited on claim sums collected subsequent to decedent's death and which were due him as commissions, and administratrix allowed claim in full but rejected right of set-off, there was no rejected claim requiring defendants to bring suit within three months after rejection or lose right of set-off under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1494, 1498.

6. Appeal and error 🔑1039(13)—Whether defendants' set-off against claim for commissions was based on money unlawfully converted by decedent or advanced by defendants held not variance requiring reversal.

In action to recover commissions on sale of realty in which defendants claimed right of set-off for money collected by decedent and due defendants and right of set-off was considered by all parties as properly before court, question whether credit to which defendants were entitled might be considered as money unlawfully converted by decedent or as advancement by defendants would not constitute such variance as to require reversal.

Appeals from Superior Court, Alameda County; John J. Allen, Judge.

Separate actions by Florence B. Henderson, as administratrix of the estate of Edward James Henderson, deceased, against the Electric Loop Land Company, the Richmond Annex Land Company, and the Havenscourt Company, consolidated for trial. Judgments for defendants, and plaintiff separately appeals. Affirmed.

Gottesfeld, Mann & Carmody and Raymond Benjamin, all of San Francisco, and William T. Kearney, of Richmond, for appellant.

Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, of Oakland, for respondents.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem. These three cases were consolidated for trial and are brought here upon one record.

The plaintiff, as the administratrix of the estate of Edward James Henderson, deceased, sought to recover from the defendant Electric Loop Land Company $13,336.39; from the defendant Richmond Annex Land Company $12,202.54; from the defendant Havenscourt Company $10,925.11. In each one of the three cases the court gave judgment for the defendant, and from said judgment the plaintiff appeals.

The cause of action is the same in each case. It is alleged, as the foundation of the several actions, that during the lifetime of said Edward James Henderson certain contracts for the sale of real estate were entered into by him with the several defendants, whereby, as agent, he agreed to sell said real estate according to the terms of said contracts, and for his services was to receive the compensation provided for in such contracts as and when the same were paid by the various purchasers of said land; that Henderson kept and performed all of the conditions of said contracts, and that since his death the respective defendants have collected the amounts hereinbefore set forth and which are due under the terms of said contracts to plaintiff as the administratrix of the estate of Henderson, as commission for the sale of the lands described in the several contracts, and that said defendants have failed and refused to pay the same to the plaintiff as the successor in interest of said Henderson.

The separate answers of the defendants admit the contracts, deny that Henderson performed the conditions thereof, allege that at the date of his death Henderson had been paid all commissions to which he was entitled under the terms of the contracts and that prior to his death the defendants did advance and pay to said Henderson, on account of commissions then earned by him, but not then due and payable, all sums of money to which he was entitled. It is further alleged in the several answers that prior to the date of his death said Henderson made collections on account of sales made by him pursuant to the contracts, and out of the money so collected by him defendants did advance and prepay to him the following sums of money, to wit, Electric Loop Land Company, $14,922.40, Richmond Annex Land Company, $36,962.88, Havenscourt Company, $13,536.29, on account of contingent commissions earned by him but not then due and payable under the terms of the contracts, and that subsequent to the 9th day of January, 1924, the defendants made collections on account of sales made by said Henderson under said contracts in the respective amounts which the plaintiff is now seeking to collect from them and which would have been due to him or his personal representative on account of commissions earned by him prior to his death had he not been prepaid by defendants as aforesaid. It is further alleged in the answers that each one of the defendants presented a claim against the estate of said deceased for the several sums which Henderson had thus collected, and that the amount of commissions collected by the defendants since the death of Henderson were credited upon said claim. It is further alleged in said answers that defendants at the same time and in the same manner presented to plaintiff and filed with the clerk of the court, its contingent claim having for its basis the amount of commissions collected by the defendants, as aforesaid, provided the court should refuse to allow the same as a set-off against the claim for moneys belonging to the defendants and which had been collected by Henderson.

At the trial, the following facts were stipulated between the parties or proved by competent evidence: That Edward James Henderson died January 9, 1924, and in due time the plaintiff qualified as administratrix of his estate. That on January 1, 1918, said Henderson entered into a contract with the defendant Richmond Annex Land Company, April 8, 1918, he entered into a contract with the defendant Havenscourt Company, September 30, 1914, and May 8, 1918, he entered into contracts with the defendant Electric Loop Land Company. These contracts are the same in substance except as to names, tracts of land described, and amounts. Under their terms, Henderson was employed as agent to sell the several parcels of land described and also to collect all unpaid installments of the purchase price of said land as the same fell due and pay them over to the defendant entitled thereto, except he was authorized to retain his commission on the sales from the first payment, and, if the first payment was insufficient for that purpose, then he was to retain from each subsequent payment 75 per cent. thereof until his entire commission had been paid. It was also stipulated by counsel that unpaid commissions were contingent upon the purchaser paying future installments of his contract of purchase. At the time of his death, Henderson had collected under the terms of the several contracts the following sums of money over and above all of the commissions to which he was entitled at that time, and which sums he had failed to pay to the several defendants, to wit: Richmond Annex Land Company, $36,962.88; Electric Loop Land Company, $14,922.40; Havenscourt Company, $13,536.29. After the death of Henderson the several defendants took over the collection of the unpaid installments on sales made by Henderson and collected the following contingent commissions which were earned by Henderson under the terms of the contract: Richmond Annex Land Company, $12,202.54; Electric Loop Land Company, $13,336.39; Havenscourt Company, $10,925.11. That within the time allowed by law the defendants presented separate claims to the administratrix of the estate of said Henderson for the full amount of their respective claims and gave credit thereon to the estate for all sums of moneys collected by them as commissions. The defendants also included therein contingent claims for the amount of commissions collected by them since the death of Henderson, provided the court failed and refused to allow them the credit upon the claim for the amounts which Henderson had collected and had failed to pay over to them. Each one of said claims bears the following indorsement: "The foregoing claim is allowed for (stating the full amount claimed by each defendant) this first day of December, 1924. Offset disallowed. Florence B. Henderson, Administratrix of the Estate of Deceased." It also appears from the evidence of Miss Peterson, who was the bookkeeper for the Electric Loop Land Company and Richmond Annex Land Company, that, at the times Henderson appropriated the money, which should have been paid to the said defendants, he stated to her that he was merely paying himself in advance on his commissions, and that he instructed her to charge the several amounts taken by him to his personal account. The witness stated that it was the habit of Henderson before taking these several sums to compare his contingent commission account with the amounts that he was taking, and that in nearly every instance he would state that he was merely paying himself in advance.

It further appears from the record that the estate of Henderson is insolvent, also that Henderson at the time of making the various contracts referred to and up to the time of his death was the president of each one of the defendant corporations.

Appellant claims that the findings of the trial court that the respective respondents were entitled to a credit or set-off against the demands of plaintiff on account of the several sums collected by Henderson during his lifetime are not sustained either by the pleadings or the evidence.

[1] The first question we believe to be easily disposed of. The case was tried by both parties and by the court upon the theory that the defendants' right to a credit or set-off on account of said sums so collected by Henderson was in issue. That all parties so considered it appears from the record, wherein it was stipulated by counsel that, to obviate the necessity of filing supplemental pleadings, all collections made by the respondents after the death of Henderson and prior to October 31, 1926, should be used as the basis for a judgment in the several actions, and counsel for the respondents then stated, "And we are entitled to the set-off—our claim that we are equally entitled to it now as well as at the date of the commencement of the action?" to which counsel for appellant replied, "Yes." And, the court having made its finding of fact upon said issue, the objection cannot for the first time be raised upon appeal. Bayly v. Lee, 174 Cal. 137, 162 P. 96; Smithson v. Atchison, etc., Ry. Co., 174 Cal. 148, 162 P. 111; Lamberson v. Bashore, 178 Cal. 321, 173 P. 401.

In support of the claim that the findings are not sustained by the evidence, it is contended that there is an absolute lack of mutuality between the claims of appellant and those of respondents, in that respondents' causes of action were against Henderson and arose during his lifetime and existed at the time of his death, and that appellant's causes of action arose after the death of Henderson and accrued to his estate. There can be no doubt but that the general rule upon this subject is that contended for by appellant, and is tersely stated in People v. California, etc., Trust Co., 168 Cal. 248, 141 P. 1184, L. R. A. 1915A, 299, where it is said: "The general rule, too, is well settled, as claimed, that in actions by executors or administrators upon a cause of action arising to them after the death of the testator or intestate, a defendant cannot set off a demand against the decedent existing at the time of his death."

[2] But, under the evidence in these cases, does it appear that plaintiff's causes of action are in favor of the estate of the decedent? All three of the causes of action sued upon by appellant are based upon contracts executed by Henderson during his lifetime. The sales from which the commissions were earned were made by Henderson, and were earned and could only be defeated by failure of the purchaser to pay future installments of the purchase price. The sums of money which the several respondents seek to offset against this claim of appellant arose out of the same contracts which they had executed with Henderson, and the several amounts that they have asked for were retained by Henderson in violation of the very terms of the contracts which his administratrix now seeks to make the basis of her claim against respondents. We are of the opinion that the causes of action set out by the appellant and the offsets claimed by the several defendants are not lacking in mutuality so as to prevent and offset one against the other.

The California decisions cited by appellant do not appear to be in point. In People v. California, etc., Trust Co., supra, the transaction arose out of a deposit in the bank by the administrator of funds belonging to the estate. The bank held an allowed claim against said estate based upon a promissory note made by the decedent during his lifetime. Under these circumstances it is clear that the deposit created a cause of action in favor of the estate, as distinguished from the cause of action in favor of the bank and which was in existence at the time of the death of said decedent. But it was also held in the case last cited that the general rule requiring mutuality was subject to exceptions, and under the facts a set-off was allowed in that case. First National Bank v. Wakefield, 148 Cal. 558, 83 P. 1076, we believe is distinguishable from the case at bar, in that in the cited case the moneys which the bank sought to apply to a mortgage debt owed by decedent in his lifetime was a deposit of moneys in the bank made by the administrator of the estate to a partnership account, in the belief that they were partnership funds of himself and his intestate. In a proceeding had for that purpose, it was judicially determined that no such partnership ever existed. The bank thereupon transferred said funds to the account of the estate of the decedent and immediately reapplied them to the mortgage debt as aforesaid. This the Supreme Court held it might not do. The distinction to our mind is that the deposit made by the administrator, subsequent to the death of his intestate, could not be applied to a debt of deceased existing at the time of his death. Counsel cites a number of cases from foreign jurisdictions which seem to uphold his claim, but we are of the opinion that these cases do not find sanction in this state. Ainsworth v. Bank of California, 119 Cal. 470, 51 P. 952, 39 L. R. A. 686, 63 Am. St. Rep. 135.

[3] But we are of the opinion that there is another reason why respondents were entitled to the offsets allowed by the court, particularly in view of the fact that at the date of the trial all sums of money claimed to be due the appellant had been collected by the defendants, and under stipulation of counsel the rights of all three parties, including any right of set-off, was for the purpose of avoiding the necessity of supplemental pleadings considered due as of that date, and under the decisions were the proper subject of set-off (Ainsworth v. Bank of California, supra), and we believe that this is a proper case for the application of the doctrine of "equitable set-off." It appears without contradiction that during his lifetime plaintiff's intestate under and by virtue of the contracts before the court came into the possession of thousands of dollars belonging to the defendants and which it was his duty to pay over to them, but which he unlawfully appropriated to his own use. By virtue of the same contracts, the respondents have lawfully come into possession of certain commission claimed by the administratrix of his estate, and which she is now seeking to recover from the respondents without offering to offset one debt against the other, this upon the plea that to allow said set-off would work a preference among the creditors of the insolvent estate of her intestate. In other words, the respondents are asked to pay their debt to the estate in full and then share their own money pro rata with the other creditors. We believe the following cases negative such an unjust and inequitable rule and are decisive of these appeals.

In the case of Pendleton v. Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank, 58 Cal. App. 448, 208 P. 702, the defendant bank applied the amount of a deposit held by it on a note made by decedent in his lifetime. The note was not yet due. The estate of the decedent was insolvent. The claim was made that, as the note was not due, the bank had no right to credit the deposit on the note. The court held that, "under ordinary conditions, where the debt to the bank is not due, the banker's right to set off a deposit against such debt does not exist." But in this behalf the court held that the contention that the lien (banker's) was not enforceable because the debt to the bank was not due took no account of the fact of insolvency of the estate. It is further stated in the opinion of the court that so far as they are advised, the question has not been decided in this state. In laying down the rule that the doctrine of "equitable set-off" may be applied in cases of insolvency, the court says:

"We are of the opinion that the fact of insolvency of the debtor as applied to the situation existing in this case is sufficient to sustain the right of set-off in favor of the creditor bank, notwithstanding that the debt of the depositor was not due at the time when he died leaving an insolvent estate. The principles involved are discussed at length in Nashville Trust Co. v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 91 Tenn. 336, 15 L. R. A. 710, 18 S. W. 822. In that decision it was noted that the doctrine of set-off, whether legal or equitable, is essentially a doctrine of equity. It was that natural justice and equity which dictates that the demands of parties, mutually indebted, should be set off against each other, and only the balance recovered, that gave birth to the idea of accomplishing the result in a judicial proceeding. Although the common law determined otherwise, the rule was amended, in the case of bankrupts, by English statutes. 'In pursuance of these old statutes and of the dictates of equity, the principle of set-off between mutual debts and credits has, for nearly two centuries past, been adopted in the English bankrupt laws, and has always prevailed in our own whenever we have had such a law in force on our statute book; and it mattered not whether the debt was due at the time of bankruptcy or not.' (Carr v. Hamilton, 129 U. S. 255 [32 L. Ed. 670, 9 S. Ct. 295 [296], see, also, Rose's U. S. Notes].) 'The jurisdiction of courts of equity over the subject of set-off was exercised before there was any statute upon the subject. * * * By the civil law, from which the great body of our system of equity comes, a cross-debt was, by mere operation of law, without any act of the parties, extinguished. It was treated as an absolute payment. Courts of equity in this country, while not going so far, have accomplished the same results in numerous cases, by granting perpetual injunctions against judgments in favor of insolvent persons who were indebted in larger amounts to the judgment debtor. * * * The court, in all such cases, is governed, not by the statute of set-off, but by the general principles of equity.' (Nashville Trust Co. v. Fourth Nat. Bank, supra.) The court further held, in the case last cited, that insolvency of itself is a sufficient ground for the application of equitable set-off, and that the fact that the indebtedness on one side is not due when the set-off is claimed constitutes no obstacle to the assertion of the right against an insolvent debtor.

"We perceive no reason why a bank's right of set-off, as against an insolvent depositor who is also indebted to the bank, should be confined to the statutory right of set-off recognized by the Civil Code. 'The "banker's lien" referred to in section 3054 of the Civil Code was familiar, as a part of the law, long before the enactment of the codes. Section 3054 does not extend its scope.' (Berry v. Bank of Bakersfield, 177 Cal. 206, 209, 170 P. 415.) We may add, the section does not restrict the scope of the principles thereby recognized. There is no magic in the statutory enactment of a rule derived from equity, whereby in receiving this legislative sanction the principle is deprived of its equitable qualities. It is not just that the representative of an insolvent debtor who on another account is the creditor of his debtor should be permitted to enforce the insolvent's claim without paying the other, merely because the obligation in his favor is due while the correlative obligation is not due. 'It is well settled that the insolvency of a party against whom a set-off is claimed constitutes a sufficient ground for the allowance of a set-off not otherwise available.' (People v. California, etc., Trust Co., 168 Cal. 241, 250 L. R. A. 1915A, 299, 141 P. 1181.)"

The foregoing case also cites with approval Ainsworth, Executrix, etc., v. Bank of California, supra, in the following language: "There is one decision of our supreme court, arising out of facts very much like those of the present action, except that in that case the bank presented to the executrix its claim, although not for the entire amount of the note, but for a stated balance, crediting thereon the amount of the deposit; and except, also, that the fact of insolvency did not appear. At the time of his death the decedent was indebted to defendant on a note not yet due, and had on deposit in the bank a lesser sum. When the note matured the bank applied on the note the amount of the deposit. The bank having refused to pay to the executrix the amount of the deposit, she brought this action. The supreme court, reversing the judgment of the superior court, held that the bank was entitled to credit for the amount of the deposit, as a cross-demand which might be set off against the note; that although the note of deceased was not due when he died, it was sufficient that it had become due when the action was brought. In its decision, the supreme court pointed out that there was no finding or evidence as to the solvency or insolvency of the estate. The decision was grounded upon the proposition that the purpose of the law was to ascertain the balance existing and to give to both the claimant and the estate the benefit of all just offsets, whether the estate be solvent or insolvent. In view of this conclusion, the court held it 'unnecessary to decide whether the appellant had a right to apply the deposit by virtue of the banker's lien claimed by it.'"

In City Investment Co. v. Pringle, 73 Cal. App. 782, 239 P. 302, in adverting to the rule of equitable set-off, the court says: "The majority of the cases wherein the rule has been applied have been those in which a bank has sought to set off the unmatured indebtedness of an insolvent depositor to it as against a claim for the deposit by the depositor or his representative or as against the assignee of such depositor. The principal, however, applies in all cases where a right of the insolvent is asserted, and in accordance with equitable principles set-off should be permitted. As held in Nashville Trust Co. v. Fourth Nat. Bank, supra, cited with approval in the cases of Pendleton v. Hellman Com., etc., Bank, supra, and Coonan v. Loewenthal [147 Cal. 218, 81 P. 527, 109 Am. St. Rep. 128], supra, insolvency itself is a sufficient ground for the application of equitable set-off, and the fact that the indebtedness on one side is not due when set-off is claimed constitutes no obstacle to the assertion of the right as against an insolvent debtor. While it is our view that the claim of appellant as against respondents upon the fund on which it is sought to impose a lien is measured by the rights of the original lessee in the premises, should it be urged that there was no mutuality as between the demands of appellant and respondents, and that, therefore, respondents may not set off a claim for the deposit as against appellant's demand for the rent, it is well settled that a court of equity will take cognizance of a cross-claim between litigants though wanting in mutuality, and set off one against the other whenever it becomes necessary in order to effect a clear equity or prevent irremediable injustice (24 R. C. L., Set-Off and Counterclaim, sec. 70, p. 865; Georgia Seed Co. v. Talmadge [96 Ga. 254, 22 S. E. 1001], supra; Kentucky Flour Co.'s Assignee v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 90 Ky. 225 [9 L. R. A. 108, 13 S. W. 910]); and, as held in the case of People v. California, etc., Trust Co., supra, where an administratrix deposited funds in her hands as administratrix in a bank which held an allowed claim against the estate, the bank having subsequently become insolvent, a want of mutuality was no defense as against the right of the administratrix to set off her deposit claim against the allowed claim of the receiver of the bank."

In the case at bar we are of the opinion that, under the facts above shown, the rule applied by the court in Pendleton v. Hellman Com., etc., Bank, supra, and City Investment Co. v. Pringle, supra, applies with equal force, especially in view of the fact that under the stipulation of the parties all amounts claimed by appellants were then due. Ainsworth, Executrix, etc., v. Bank of California, supra.

[4] One other point in favor of the affirmance of the judgment is made by the respondent relating to the claim of the Electric Loop Land Company and the Richmond Annex Land Company. In each one of these cases the testimony of Miss Peterson, the bookkeeper for said companies, shows that Henderson at the time of the appropriation of the several amounts of money which belonged to the said defendants, stated to her that such payments were merely advances on his commissions; that he was paying himself in advance. We are of the opinion that these declarations on the part of Henderson, irrespective of equitable set-off, are sufficient to justify an affirmance of the judgment in said cases. No such evidence was introduced relating to the Havenscourt Company.

It is further claimed by the respondents that, Henderson being the president of all three defendant corporations, the utmost good faith was required in his dealings with said companies, and that his administratrix cannot now be permitted to set off Henderson's wrongdoings to enable her to collect the amounts claimed in the complaint. Under the views above expressed, it is unnecessary to pass upon this question.

[5] One other contention made by appellant for the reversal of the judgment is based upon the fact that all three of the respondents presented separate claims against the estate of the decedent for the several amounts which Henderson had collected and failed to pay over to them. They also gave credit on said claims for all sums which they had collected subsequent to the death of Henderson and which were due him as commissions. The administratrix of the estate allowed the claims in full, but rejected the right of set-off. It is now claimed that, the right of set-off having been rejected, the respondents were required to bring suit thereon within three months after such rejection, and, having failed to do so, the right of set-off is lost, citing section 1498, Code Civ. Proc. The claims filed by respondents had attached thereto the affidavit provided by section 1494 of the Code of Civil Procedure, where it is held that a claim against an estate must be supported by an affidavit that the amount claimed is justly due and that there are no offsets to the same. We are of the opinion that the claims having been allowed for the full amount, and the only thing disallowed being a credit in favor of the estate, there was no rejected claim requiring suit. In the case of Jones v. Walden, 145 Cal. 523, 78 P. 1046, and in Consolidated Nat. Bank v. Hayes, 112 Cal. 75, 44 P. 469, cited by appellant, there was a partial rejection of the amount of claim, and it was held that, as to the portion of the claim rejected, suit must have been brought within the statutory time. In the case of Holt Manufacturing Co. v. Ewing, 109 Cal. 353, 42 P. 435, cited by appellant, a vendor under a conditional sales contract filed a claim for the purchase price of a harvester. He could not maintain an action for the possession of the same on the theory that title had not passed to the purchaser. We are therefore of the opinion that the contention is unsound.

[6] The further contention of appellant that there is a material variance between the claims presented by the several defendants and their pleadings and proof does not appeal to us as being meritorious. The right of offset was considered by all parties as properly before the court, and whether or not the credit to which the several defendants were entitled be considered as money unlawfully converted by Henderson to his own use or as an advancement by the defendants, it would not constitute such a variance as was held fatal in Etchas v. Orena, 127 Cal. 588, 60 P. 45; Moore v. Gould, 151 Cal. 723, 91 P. 616, and other cases cited by appellant.

We are satisfied that equity and good conscience require that the judgment in each one of the cases be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: NOURSE, Acting P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

PEOPLE v. SMITH et al. (Cr. 1700.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District. Division 2, California. Jan. 22, 1929.

1. Criminal law 🔑1166½(10)—Where court prevented clerk's reading part of information regarding prior conviction, after clerk had uttered a few words indicating defendant had been in court before, there was no prejudicial error (Pen. Code, §§ 1025, 1093).

In prosecution for burglary, where court prevented clerk from reading part of information regarding prior conviction, after clerk had uttered words "that before commission of offense charged in this information said defendant, H. J. P., in the superior court of the state of Washington," there was no prejudicial error, since words quoted conveyed no information that defendant had suffered prior conviction, as contemplated by Pen. Code, §§ 1025, 1093.

2. Criminal law 🔑747—Jury must decide on conflicting testimony.

It is the province of the jury alone to decide on conflicting testimony.

3. Criminal law 🔑696(2), 698(1)—Where defendant's counsel failed to object to testimony, or to move to strike it out, he waived objection to evidence.

Where defendant's counsel failed to object or move court to strike out evidence, which it was claimed related to another offense, it is presumed he waived any objection to the evidence that he might have interposed thereto, and it must be concluded that he acquiesced in its remaining in case.

4. Burglary 🔑16—Where defendant, on first visit with others, saw goods on porch, and later sent the others back for them, second visit was an unlawful entry, with intent in defendant's mind to commit larceny, and was "burglary."

Where defendant went to another's house with others, and saw auto top material on screened porch, and informed the others that he had purchased such material, and later, after returning home, he sent the others back for the auto top material, which did not belong to him, second visit was an unlawful entry, with intent, in mind of defendant, at least to commit crime of larceny, and was "burglary."

5. Burglary 🔑16—Defendant, sending innocent agents to commit crime of burglary, was a "principal" (Pen. Code, § 971).

Under Pen. Code, § 971, defendant, sending innocent agents to commit crime of burglary, by telling them that he had purchased goods which were on another's porch, committed and was "principal" in burglary, though absent in person and not actually participating in commission of crime.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Principal.]

6. Criminal law 🔑1030(1)—Objections raised for first time on appeal cannot be considered.

Objections raised for first time on appeal cannot be considered on appeal.

7. Criminal law 🔑1178—Objection with reference to admission of evidence cannot be considered on appeal, where no citation of authority or argument was offered.

Objection with reference to admission of certain evidence cannot be considered on appeal, where no citation of authority or argument was offered by defendant's counsel.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles L. Bogue, Judge.

Henry J. Peterson was convicted of burglary in the second degree and he appeals. Affirmed.

A. Perry Harris, of Fresno, for appellant.
U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

KEETCH, Justice pro tem. The appellant, Henry J. Peterson, together with Hoyt W. Smith and Thomas I. Boreman, was charged with burglary in an information filed by the district attorney of Los Angeles county. Peterson was found guilty of burglary in the second degree, and Smith and Boreman were acquitted. This appeal is taken from the order denying Peterson's motion for a new trial, and from the judgment of conviction.

Immediately prior to and at the time of his arrest, Peterson was engaged in the business of repairing and renewing auto tops in the town of Sawtelle. Smith and Boreman were inmates of the Soldiers' Home at Sawtelle, and were daily visitors at Peterson's shop; Martis Smith, a brother of the defendant Hoyt Smith, being employed by Peterson. Martis Smith owned a Chevrolet automobile, which he sometimes used in running errands for Peterson. On April 13, 1928, Peterson asked the defendant Hoyt Smith to drive him to Santa Monica to look at a hair picker, a machine used for renovating mattresses. Boreman asked if he might go along, and the three left in the Chevrolet. After looking at the hair picker, which was in a garage in Santa Monica, Peterson procured the address of the owner of the machine and proceeded to his house. The owner was the complaining witness, John G. McNichols. The latter was absent from home at the time, and, not finding any one in the house, the three went inside a screened porch, which ran along one side of the building. In a toilet on this porch they discovered several rolls of auto top material and bow lining. According to the testimony of Smith and Boreman, the appellant, Peterson, then and there stated that he had purchased this material a few days before and would have to have some one take it to his place of business. Upon returning to Peterson's shop, the latter requested the defendant Smith to go back with the Chevrolet and get the material. Smith objected, unless Peterson furnished the cost of gasoline and oil for the trip. This Peterson agreed to do, and promised to give Smith $5 on the following morning. Smith and Boreman then drove back to the McNichols house and took all the material from the screened porch and brought it to Peterson's. A few days later, in company with police officers, McNichols went to appellant's place of business, where some of the material was found in the shop, and a large portion of it in the basement of the building. McNichols identified the property as his, and upon the trial testified that the taking was without his knowledge or consent.

[1] The first point of error claimed by appellant is in connection with the reading of the information before the jury. Peterson was charged with a prior conviction, and on arraignment admitted the charge. It is contended that the clerk, in reading the information to the jury, informed the jurors of the fact of the prior conviction. According to the record, after the reading of the accusatory paragraph relating to the crime for which Peterson was on trial, the clerk began the reading of the next paragraph, as follows: "That before the commission of the offense charged in this information said defendant, Henry J. Peterson, in the superior court of the state of Washington"—At this point the clerk was interrupted by the district attorney as follows: "Just a moment Mr. Clerk." Whereupon the court interposed: "It is not necessary to read that portion, Mr. Clerk." No objection was made by counsel for appellant, nor was a request made of the court to instruct the jury to disregard the mistake and the clerk then concluded the reading of the information, omitting any further reference to the prior conviction. It is claimed that this was in contravention of sections 1025 and 1093 of the Penal Code. In the former section it is provided, in connection with the taking of the plea of a prior conviction: "In case the defendant pleads not guilty and admits that he has suffered the previous conviction, the charge of the previous conviction must not be read to the jury, nor alluded to on the trial." In subdivision 1 of section 1093 it is provided that "in cases where it [the information] charges a previous conviction, and the defendant has confessed the same, the clerk in reading it shall omit therefrom all that relates to such previous conviction."

In support of his contention that the foregoing was prejudicial, appellant cites People v. Meyer, 73 Cal. 548, 15 P. 95. In that case the court permitted the clerk to read, over defendant's objection, that portion of the information charging prior conviction, after such conviction had been admitted by the defendant on arraignment. There are two grounds which distinguish that case from the instant one: First, that the court permitted the reading; and, second, that it was done over the objection of counsel for the defendant. In the instant case it is apparent that, as soon as the trial judge perceived that the clerk was about to make a mistake, he immediately interrupted, and stopped the latter from doing so. The most that can be said of the few words uttered by the clerk before he was interrupted is that they suggested that the defendant Peterson had been in the superior court of Washington, which in and of themselves conveyed no information to the jury that he had suffered a prior conviction, as contemplated and intended by the language of the sections quoted. In the second place, as we have already noted, defendant's counsel failed to object or request the court to instruct the jury on the matter, and it is too well settled to need authority that under such circumstances the appellant will not be heard to object for the first time on appeal.

[2, 3] It is next contended that the evidence does not support the verdict, and attention is called to the testimony of certain witnesses, which counsel contends was "contradictory, most conflicting, and false." Needless to say, it is the province of the jury alone to decide upon conflicting testimony. As is said in People v. McKelvey (Cal. App.) 267 P. 390, 391: "To the jury, as the sole judges of the credibility of a witness, is assigned the duty of determining the weight to be given to the testimony of a witness, and, when the jury has performed this function and entered its decision, neither the trial court, nor this court on review, will interfere with that decision, unless it appears that the verdict was without substantial foundation." To the same effect are the cases of People v. Kelly, 146 Cal. 119, 121, 79 P. 846; People v. Tom Woo, 181 Cal. 315, 326, 184 P. 389; People v. Logan, 123 Cal. 414, 415, 56 P. 56.

It is also urged that the court erred in admitting certain evidence of another offense outside of the issues charged, namely, the possession of wine by appellant. It appears from the testimony of a police officer that a trapdoor led down from Peterson's shop to the basement. Much of the automobile top material taken from the complaining witness' house was found in this basement. The officer testified: "I showed Peterson the material, and he said, yes, that was the material that come out from under the house; he said that he did not know how it got under the house; that he had gone down under the house some time in the night following my first visit there, to look after some wine that he had, and found this automobile top material." If the testimony was objectionable, counsel for the defendant failed to object, or move the court to strike it out. "If he fails to proceed in accordance with this rule, it is presumed that the defendant waives any objection to the evidence he might have interposed thereto, and it must be concluded that he acquiesced in its remaining in the case." 8 Cal. Jur. 500, citing People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 179, 48 P. 75.

[4] In connection with his contention that the evidence does not support the verdict, counsel for appellant raises the point that "Peterson was not present and did not participate in the taking of the auto top material." Beyond this mere statement, no further comment, argument, or authority is offered. In the statement of facts we have already pointed out that upon the first visit to the complaining witness' house Peterson was present at the time of the entry and discovery of the auto top material in the toilet on the screened porch, and thereupon, according to the testimony of his two companions, he informed them that he had purchased this material a few days before, and would have to get some one to take it to his place of business; that upon the return to Peterson's shop the latter requested the defendants Smith and Boreman to go back to the house and get the material. Upon their objecting, because of the expense in the operation of the automobile Peterson promised to give them $5 the next morning. Upon this promise, they testified, they returned to the house, leaving Peterson at his shop. This was in the afternoon, and within a few hours of the first entry. McNichols, the owner of the house, was still absent therefrom, and Smith and Boreman again entered upon the premises, took the material, and brought it back to Peterson, who took possession of it.

The intent is governed by the circumstances and the conduct of the accused. The jury had a right to assume, from the facts in the case, that Peterson, as evidenced by his conduct, had formed the intent and purpose to gain entrance to the house and get possession of the material, by inducing Smith and Boreman to immediately return and make the entry, during the absence of the owner. This second visit, particularly, was an unlawful entry with the intent, in the mind of Peterson, at least, to commit the crime of larceny, and was burglary under the law of this state. Under the common law Peterson would have been an accessory before the fact, but under section 971 of our Penal Code it is provided that "a distinction between an accessory before the fact and a principal, and between principals in the first and second degree, in cases of felony, is abrogated; and all persons concerned in the commission of a felony, whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in its commission, though not present, shall hereafter be prosecuted, tried, and punished as principals." The jury in the instant case found the defendants Smith and Boreman not guilty by their verdict, but had the latter been in fact accomplices under the law, Peterson was a principal, notwithstanding the fact that he did not actually participate in the entry. His was the directing mind, and the defendants Smith and Boreman acted as his agents in the commission of the crime. Whether or not they acted innocently, or had guilty knowledge, does not change the situation so far as Peterson is concerned.

In People v. Outeveras, 48 Cal. 21, 24, the defendant was jointly charged with one Carter with burglary. In pursuance of an understanding between them, Carter entered the house and stole some silver cups. Outeveras did not enter the house, but, at the request of Carter, waited outside until the latter came out with the stolen property. The two then went to the room they occupied together, and endeavored to obliterate the names engraved upon the cups. The point raised on appeal was that under the evidence there was a fatal variance between the indictment, charging the defendant Outeveras as a principal, and the proof, which showed, at the most, that he was an accessory, aiding and abetting. The court, however, said: "At the common law an accessory at the fact might be indicted and convicted as principal, for the common law declares that he who stands by, advises, and encourages the murderer to give the blow, gives the blow himself as much as if he held the weapon in his own hands. Our Legislature has gone one step further, and provided that he who, not being present, hath advised or encouraged the giving of the blow, hath given the blow as much as if he had stood by and encouraged it, or even had struck with his own hands. It is no more a fiction of law to declare that he gives the blow, by advising and encouraging it beforehand, than it is to affirm that he gives it by advising and encouraging it at the time. Both proceed upon the principle that what we advise or procure another to do, in the eye of the law, we do ourselves. All are principals, and as such should be indicted and punished."

[5] By their verdict the jury in the instant case found that the defendants Smith and Boreman were innocent agents of Peterson in the commission of the crime. There do not appear to be any cases directly in point in this state where an innocent party committed a criminal act at the instigation of another, who alone possessed the criminal intent. However, in Russell on Crimes, vol. 1, p. 165, the author says: "When an offense is committed through the medium of an innocent agent, the employer, though absent when the act is done, is answerable as a principal. Thus, if a child under years of discretion, a madman or any other person of defective mind, is incited to commit a murder or other crime, the incitor is the principal ex necessitate, though he were absent when the thing was done. * * * And if a man give another a forged note, that the other may utter it, if the latter be ignorant of the note being forged, the uttering by the latter is the uttering of the former, though the former were absent at the time of the actual uttering."

McClain in his work on Criminal Law, vol. 1, § 187, says: "The general maxim 'qui facit per alium facit per se' is applicable in criminal law to make one accountable for acts done for him by an agent under his instruction or by his consent. And in regard to the liability of the principal it is wholly immaterial whether the act is procured to be done through a guilty or an innocent agent. If the act is done through an innocent agent, the one who procures it to be done is guilty as principal, as though he had done the act himself. But if the agent or servant through whom the act is done is guilty, the principal or master is deemed an accessory before the fact only, unless present."

In Wharton's Criminal Law, vol. 1, p. 312, § 241, the author says: "A party also who acts through the medium of an innocent or insane person, or a slave, is guilty, though absent, as principal in first degree." (Italics ours.)

Based upon such respectable authorities, the conclusion follows that Peterson, as the directing and procuring mind, was the principal in the burglary, though absent in person and not actually participating in the commission of the crime. It makes no difference if he stood in the street outside the house and directed the actions of the agent, or did so from his shop several miles away.

[6, 7] Other contentions raised by counsel for appellant with reference to the admission of certain testimony are subject to the same criticism heretofore made. All the objections are raised for the first time on appeal, with one exception, and therefore cannot be considered. Folsom v. Burns (Cal. App.) 266 P. 1007. As to the one exception, no citation of authority or argument is offered by counsel for appellant, and we are therefore not called to pass upon it. People v. Pilbro (Cal. App.) 260 P. 303.

We concur: CRAIG, Acting P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

[3] It is not questioned that stock certificates, under the law of this state, are not negotiable in the strict sense (Geary St., etc., R. R. Co. v. Bradbury Est. Co., 179 Cal. 46, 52, 175 P. 457; O'Dea v. Hollywood Cemetery Ass'n, 154 Cal. 53, 97 P. 1; 6 Cal. Jur., p. 785), but that by the customs of trade one of the attributes of negotiability, viz. the passing of title to shares of stock by indorsement in blank and delivery of the certificate, has been given to such certificates. Civ. Code, § 324. This, however, does not serve to make them negotiable, in the sense that equities in favor of the owner are cut off by the delivery of a certificate to a bona fide purchaser. Kohn v. Sacramento Elec., Gas & Ry. Co., 168 Cal. 8, 141 P. 626; Civ. Code, § 1459. No title passes to a bona fide purchaser, who receives delivery of a certificate of stock indorsed in blank and stolen by another, without any fault or negligence on the part of the owner. In such case the latter retains title and may pursue his property. Swim v. Wilson, 90 Cal. 126, 27 P. 33, 13 L. R. A. 605, 25 Am. St. Rep. 110; Barstow v. Savage Mining Co., 64 Cal. 388, 1 P. 349, 49 Am. Rep. 705; Sherwood v. Meadow Valley M. Co., 50 Cal. 412.

Exceptions to the general rule that stock certificates indorsed in blank are nonnegotiable, are found, but such exceptions are usually provided for by statute. In the absence of a statute making such instruments negotiable, the declaration by courts that a purchaser for value and without notice of a stock certificate indorsed in blank obtains title thereto has not precluded an investigation into the equities. In proper cases, and this case is one, the equities should be examined in accordance with the familiar principles that, "where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third, he by whose negligence it happened, must be the sufferer" (Civ. Code, § 3543), and that where the true owner clothes another with the indicia of ownership of property, and therefore the apparent authority to transfer title thereto, and innocent third parties are thereby led into dealing with such apparent owner, the true owner will be estopped to deny that the apparent authority is the real authority (Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 3). In such cases the equities are found to be in favor of the bona fide purchaser rather than in favor of the owner who has by his own conduct clothed another with the power to commit the fraud.

In the leading case of McNeil v. Tenth National Bank, 46 N. Y. 325, 7 Am. Rep. 341, the owner of indorsed stock certificates pledged them with his broker as security for a loan, and the broker, without authority, pledged them with another for a larger sum, and the court announced the applicability of the equitable principle of estoppel in the following language: "It must be conceded that, as a general rule, applicable to property other than negotiable securities, the vendor or pledgor can convey no greater right or title than he has. But this is a truism, predicable of a simple transfer from one party to another, where no other element intervenes. It does not interfere with the well-established principle that, where the true owner holds out another, or allows him to appear, as the owner of, or as having full power of disposition over, the property, and innocent third parties are thus led into dealing with such apparent owner, they will be protected. Their rights in such cases do not depend upon the actual title or authority of the party with whom they deal directly, but are derived from the act of the real owner, which precludes him from disputing, as against them, the existence of the title or power which, through negligence or mistaken confidence, he caused or allowed to appear to be vested in the party making the conveyance. * * * 'The mere possession of chattels, by whatever means acquired, if there be no other evidence of property or authority to sell from the true owner, will not enable the possessor to give a good title.' * * * But if the owner entrusts to another, not merely the possession of the property, but also written evidence, over his own signature, of title thereto, and of an unconditional power of disposition over it, the case is vastly different. There can be no occasion for the delivery of such documents, unless it is intended that they shall be used, either at the pleasure of the depositary, or under contingencies to arise. If the conditions upon which this apparent right of control is to be exercised are not expressed on the face of the instrument, but remain in confidence between the owner and the depositary, the case cannot be distinguished in principle, from that of an agent who receives secret instructions qualifying or restricting an apparently absolute power."

This rule has been approved and applied in this state. Northwestern P. C. Co. v. Atlantic P. C. Co., 174 Cal. 308, 163 P. 47; Fowles v. National Bank of California, 167 Cal. 653, 140 P. 271; Brittan v. Oakland Bank of Savings, 124 Cal. 282, 57 P. 84, 71 Am. St. Rep. 58; Arnold v. Johnson, 66 Cal. 402, 5 P. 796; Rapp v. Fred W. Hauger Motors Co., 77 Cal. App. 417, 246 P. 1067. See, also, Shafer v. Lacy, 121 Cal. 574, 54 P. 72, and Barstow v. Savage Mining Co., 64 Cal. 388, 1 P. 349, 49 Am. Rep. 705, where the language of McNeil v. Tenth National Bank, supra, is quoted and approved.

[4, 5] It is not questioned that the indorsement of a stock certificate in blank is an indicium of ownership with which the possessor thereof must be clothed by the owner before his act in relation thereto will operate as an estoppel against him. And it was held in Northwestern P. C. Co. v. Atlantic P. C. Co., supra, that the entry of the transfer on the corporate books is not essential to a legal transfer of the title to the stock and the rights thereunder upon a sale or pledge by delivery of the certificate duly indorsed. The appellant contends that the principles of McNeil v. Tenth National Bank, supra, are applicable to the facts of the present case, while the respondent insists that, because the persons to whom she gave possession of the indorsed stock certificates were, under the facts adduced, guilty of larceny by trick and device, the respondent has not clothed them with indicia of ownership, and the rules governing stolen nonnegotiable instruments are controlling.

We have fully considered the arguments presented and the authorities cited by counsel for both sides and by amici curiæ, and feel constrained to agree with the contentions of the defendant. Without reviewing the authorities in detail, each of the cases relied on by the respondent is distinguishable on the facts from the present case, and in none of them was the owner of the certificate so indorsed in blank guilty of any negligence which was the proximate cause of the loss, nor did he voluntarily part with the possession of such certificates for any purpose and thus by his own act place it within the power of another to hold himself out as the true owner. See Shafer v. Lacy, 121 Cal. 574, 54 P. 72, involving jewelry, where there was no indicium of ownership beyond mere possession; Barstow v. Savage, 64 Cal. 388, 1 P. 349, 49 Am. Rep. 705, theft; Sherwood v. Meadow Valley Mining Co., 50 Cal. 412, loss of certificate; Swim v. Wilson, 90 Cal. 126, 129, 27 P. 33, 13 L. R. A. 605, 25 Am. St. Rep. 110, theft; Kohn v. Sacramento Electric Gas & Ry. Co., 168 Cal. 1, 141 P. 626, theft; The Yamato v. Bank of Southern California, 170 Cal. 351, 149 P. 826, theft; Bryant v. Century Bank of City of New York (Sup.) 155 N. Y. S. 1010, involving checks, wherein it was held that the bank was justified in refusing payment where it had notice that they were obtained by fraud; Soltau v. Gerdau, 119 N. Y. 380, 23 N. E. 864, 16 Am. St. Rep. 843, theft of goods which the thief stored in a warehouse and had warehouse receipts issued to himself. In Reichard v. Hutton & Co., 158 App. Div. 122, 142 N. Y. S. 935, the defendant was held to respond in damages for conversion. The judgment was affirmed, on the theory that, on the facts the defendant had notice of the opportunity which its agent had to perpetrate a fraud on the plaintiff as to one certificate, and as to the others that the defendants participated in the transaction to such an extent that it would not be heard to say that it did not hold its fraudulent agent out as its representative to do what was actually accomplished. The effect of that case is in harmony with the principles approved herein, and any general language in the opinion which might be construed in favor of the respondent herein was unnecessary to the decision, and not in accordance with the law as we find it to be.

[6] The respondent attempts to make a distinction between the present case and cases like McNeil v. Tenth National Bank, supra, and the cases following it, on the ground that, while the facts of the present case may seem to be within the language of the cases relied on by the appellant, yet in the present case there was no intention on the part of the respondent to part with any property in the shares, while in the other cases the owner intended to part with some property interest therein. This is answered first by the fact that the law creates the estoppel, not because of any intention which the owner has to part with some property in the certificates, but from the conduct of the owner in clothing another with all the indicia of ownership, which amounts to a representation by him to innocent third parties that the person in possession has complete power of disposition. It is pointed out that the party against whom an estoppel may operate must have intended others to act upon his representation; but intent, in the sense urged by respondent, is not an element. "It is sufficient if the acts, representations, or silence relied on are of such a character as to induce a reasonable and prudent man to believe that they were meant to be acted on." 21 C. J. p. 1121, and cases cited.

The second answer is that the principle of estoppel has been applied against the original owner in cases which are not distinguishable on the facts from the present case. Russell v. American Bell Tel. Co., 180 Mass. 467, 62 N. E. 751, was a case involving the doctrine of estoppel on a similar state of facts. In that case the owner of a certificate indorsed in blank intrusted it to a fraudulent agent for the purpose of surrendering it to the company in order to obtain a new certificate. See National Safe Deposit, Savings & Trust Co. v. Hibbs, 229 U. S. 391, 395, 33 S. Ct. 818, 57 L. Ed. 1241. The purported agent pledged the stock for his own purposes to the defendant, a bona fide pledgee. The same distinction attempted to be made by the respondent here was urged in that case; i. e., that only the possession, not the property, passed to the agent, and that, "as the possession was obtained by fraud, it was obtained by larceny in judgment of law." The contention was disposed of by Mr. Justice Holmes, then Chief Justice of Massachusetts, speaking for the court, in the following language:

"The qualification of the rule, as not applying when the instrument is stolen, is not based upon the name of the agent's crime but upon the fact that in the ordinary and typical case of theft the owner has not intrusted the agent with the document and therefore is not considered to have done enough to be estopped as against a purchaser in good faith. He certainly has not done enough if the estoppel is based upon the principle that when one of two innocent persons is to suffer the sufferer should be the one whose confidence put into the hands of the wrongdoer the means of doing the wrong. But in a case like the present the agent has been intrusted with the converted property, and it is totally immaterial whether by a stretch which extends larceny beyond the true field of trespass, his wrong has been brought within the criminal law or not. The ground of the estoppel is present and the estoppel arises. The distinction is not new. On the one side are cases like Knox v. Eden Musee Americain Co., 148 N. Y. 441, 42 N. E. 988, 31 L. R. A. 779, 51 Am. St. Rep. 700, where an agent or servant simply had access to a document remaining in the possession of the owner; on the other cases like Appeal of Pennsylvania R. Co., 86 Pa. 80, where possession is intrusted to the agent for one purpose and he uses it for another. It cannot matter in the latter class that the agent intended the fraud from the outset." A judgment for the plaintiff in that case was reversed.

The reasoning and principle of the case has been followed in Baker v. Davie, 211 Mass. 429, 97 N. E. 1094, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 944, where a similar state of facts existed, and also has been approved and similarly applied by the Supreme Court of the United States in National Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Hibbs, 229 U. S. 391, 33 S. Ct. 818, 57 L. Ed. 1241. In the latter case, Mr. Justice Day, delivering the opinion of the court, added: "In such case we think the principles which underlie equitable estoppel place the loss upon him whose misplaced confidence has made the wrong possible."

The Case of Russell v. American Bell Tel. Co., supra, has been approved and quoted from in Kohn v. Sacramento Elec., Gas & Ry. Co., supra, wherein this court distinguished cases of stolen nonnegotiable instruments transferable by delivery, where possession was intrusted to the thief, from cases where possession was obtained by the thief without the consent or fault of the person in possession, although that was a case of the latter type. In Arnold v. Johnson, supra, which follows McNeil v. Tenth National Bank, supra, and distinguishes the facts of the case before it from the case of Barstow v. Savage Mining Co., supra, on the ground that, unlike the latter case, the certificate was voluntarily delivered, the owner had delivered certificates indorsed in blank for a purpose other than a transfer of any property therein, to wit, for the purpose only of exchanging it for a new certificate. The case of Fowles v. National Bank of California, 167 Cal. 653, 140 P. 271, discusses the cases of McNeil v. Tenth National Bank, supra, Barstow v. Savage, and Arnold v. Johnson, supra, and states: "But where such person has not only the possession, but also written indicia of ownership, with which he has been voluntarily furnished by the true owner, the principle [of estoppel] is applicable."

In addition to the foregoing considerations of law which are applicable to a statement of the facts most favorable to the respondent—i. e., that the certificates were to be taken by the two men for purposes of the correction of the corporation's records—there is a consideration of fact, appearing by the testimony of the respondent herself, which shows beyond question that she intended that the certificates should be taken and used as security, to the end that the stock represented by the canceled subscription might be acquired by her or the subscription reinstated. In this respect the record discloses an intention on her part to constitute the two men her agents for that purpose, and thereby to part with some property interest in the shares for purposes of security. This case on all of its facts is therefore farther removed from the application of the law as contended for by the respondent.

The case of Popp v. Exchange Bank, 189 Cal. 296, 208 P. 113 relied on by the respondent, follows the general rule that the seller of nonnegotiable paper can transfer to the buyer no better title than he has himself; but that case is distinguishable from the case at bar on the facts in this: That it did not appear in that case that the true owners of the bonds had by any affirmative act, assuming that they had the legal capacity to act, placed the fraudulent pledgors in a position to mislead the innocent pledgee by evidence on the face of the instruments or otherwise into a belief that the pledgors had a right to pledge the bonds. That case is in line with the rule that the mere possession of nonnegotiable paper by a fraudulent seller or pledgor is not, in itself, sufficient to constitute fault or negligence on the part of the true owner. There was, therefore, in the Popp Case no necessity or occasion to apply the equitable principles which must be applied in this case.

[7] On the record before us the equities of the parties are not equal. The appellant is in the position of an innocent third party who has parted with full value for the stock without notice of the fraud perpetrated on the respondent. On the other hand, the respondent was at fault in misplacing her confidence in the perpetrators of the fraud, and by the affirmative act of placing her signature on the assignment and power of attorney attached to the certificates, enabling the wrongdoers to mislead an innocent third party to his detriment. The last section of the Civil Code and section 1962, subd. 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure, are therefore applicable to the facts in the case, and prevent a recovery by respondent on the record before us.

The respondent is a woman of the age of 70 years, but it is not shown, nor is it claimed that she was laboring under any infirmity or disability in the transaction. It appears that she fully appreciated what she was doing when she intrusted her indorsed stock certificates to the "confidence" men. She was imposed upon and of course had a cause of action against those who defrauded her. It may be assumed that such a right of action would be of doubtful fruition, but we may not be led to announce unsound principles of law because of the misfortune of the respondent.

We therefore conclude that on the findings of the court judgment should have been entered for the appellant.

The judgment is reversed.

MAYHEW v. BURKE et ux. (L. A. 9551.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 31, 1929.

1. Notice 🔑6—Plaintiff's notice of defendants' land contract or of facts sufficient to provoke inquiry after recordation of conveyance to plaintiff cannot affect plaintiff's rights (Civ. Code, §§ 19, 1107, 1161, 1213, 1214, 1217).

Where recordation of defendants' land contract did not charge subsequent purchasers with notice of its contents because it was not acknowledged by vendor and therefore not entitled to recordation under Civ. Code, §§ 1107, 1161, 1213, 1214, 1217, notice to plaintiff of defendants' contract or of facts sufficient to provoke inquiry under section 19, received after recordation of conveyance to plaintiff, would not affect plaintiff's rights.

2. Appeal and error 🔑994(3), 1012(1)—Credibility of witnesses and weight of testimony was for trial court.

It was function of trial court to resolve inconsistencies in testimony and to judge credibility of witnesses and weight of their testimony.

3. Quieting title 🔑44(4)—In action to quiet title, evidence supported finding plaintiff had no notice of defendants' prior land contract when plaintiff received her deed.

In action to quiet title, in which both plaintiff and defendants claimed an interest in real property derived from the same company, evidence held to support finding to effect that plaintiff had no notice of defendants' prior contract when plaintiff received her deed after recordation thereof.

4. Quieting title 🔑44(2)—Where plaintiff purchaser claimed she had no notice of defendants' prior land contract, excluding policy of title insurance issued to plaintiff, stating her title was subject to prior contract, held not error.

In action to quiet title, in which plaintiff claimed that when she purchased real property she had no notice of defendants' prior contract for purchase of same property, excluding policy of title insurance issued to plaintiff, which stated that her title was subject to prior contract, held not error, where such policy was not received by plaintiff until after her deed had been recorded.

5. Principal and agent 🔑178(1)—Title insurance company issuing policy to purchaser was not purchaser's agent, and its knowledge of prior contract cannot be imputed to purchaser.

Title insurance company issuing policy of title insurance to purchaser was not agent of purchaser, and any knowledge it may have possessed regarding condition of title was not imputable to purchaser who claimed that she had no notice of defendants' prior contract for purchase of same real property.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank C. Collier, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Anna E. Mayhew against Harry F. Burke and wife. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Otto & Linn, and Roy A. Linn, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

James, Pace, Smith & Younkin, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J. Defendants appeal from a judgment for plaintiff in a suit brought by plaintiff to quiet her title to certain real property in the city of Los Angeles. Both plaintiff and defendants claim an interest in said real property derived from the Howard Park Realty Company. On November 12, 1919, said company executed a contract of sale agreeing to convey said property to one Melby, upon receipt of full payment of the purchase price, which Melby agreed to pay in monthly installments. The defendant Harry F. Burke is the assignee of the Melby contract of sale, and defendant Frances H. Burke is his wife. Said contract of sale was placed of record on May 23, 1924, and was recorded again on July 30, 1924, after the assignment from Melby to the defendant Harry F. Burke had been placed thereon. The contract was not, however, acknowledged by the Howard Park Realty Company, and hence the record thereof did not operate as constructive notice to plaintiff, who claims title in fee under a contract of sale executed by the company in her favor in 1920, and a deed from said company to herself dated December 11, 1924, and recorded January 9, 1925.

No deed was ever executed by the realty company to Melby or to the Burkes. On or about August 22, 1924, defendants Burke tendered to the realty company $1,250 in payment of the amount due as principal, interest, and taxes on the contract of sale under which they claim. The purchase price of the lot was $1,000, of which $250 was paid at the execution of the contract. None of the monthly installments provided by said contract to be paid had ever been paid. The said contract provided that, if the buyer should fail to make payments therein promised to be made, all his rights should forthwith cease, at the option of the realty company, and without notice to the buyer, and the realty company should be released from all obligations in law or equity to convey said property, or to refund any payments made, and the buyer should thereupon forfeit all right to a conveyance and to all moneys paid, which should be retained by the realty company as rent and liquidated damages, and should surrender possession of the property on demand. Plaintiff does not here claim, however, and from the evidence appearing in the bill of exceptions, it cannot be said that she asserted in the court below that any rights which Melby or the Burkes may have had were forfeited and the contract of sale terminated by their failure to pay the stipulated monthly installments for a period of almost five years.

[1] Plaintiff's contention is that she took title free and clear of any interest of defendants as a purchaser for value without notice of the rights of defendants under the prior Melby contract of sale. Since the recordation of said contract did not charge subsequent purchasers with notice of its contents, for the reason that it was not acknowledged by the realty company, and therefore not entitled to recordation (Civ. Code, §§ 1107, 1161, 1213, 1214, 1217; Keese v. Beardsley, 190 Cal. 465, 213 P. 500, 26 A. L. R. 1538), the question here presented is whether plaintiff was a purchaser with actual notice of said contract, or with notice of circumstances sufficient to put her on inquiry as to the state of the title. "Every person who has actual notice of circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry as to a particular fact, has constructive notice of the fact itself in all cases in which, by prosecuting such inquiry, he might have learned such fact." Civ. Code, § 19. Defendants contend that it appears from the testimony of plaintiff and the witness Tabor, that the latter, a neighbor of plaintiff and an employee of a title insurance company insuring titles to property in the city of Los Angeles, had told her, in the course of a neighborly conversation, that there was a "cloud" against the property. It may be conceded that statements such as those made by Tabor to plaintiff would be sufficient to put a prospective purchaser upon inquiry. It does not appear, however, as a matter of law, that Tabor's statements were made before plaintiff had paid the balance due under her contract of sale and the deed to her had been placed on record. Notice of the contract or of facts sufficient to provoke inquiry, received after recordation of the conveyance, would not, of course, affect plaintiff's rights.

[2, 3] Neither the testimony of plaintiff nor that of Tabor is free from uncertainties and contradictions. Plaintiff expressed an inability to remember clearly, not only dates, but other details of the transaction. She did testify, however, that it was after she received the deed that Mr. Tabor came to her home and told her that he had heard there was some trouble about the title. Plaintiff received the deed from the realty company, to which it had been returned by the recorder after being placed of record. Plaintiff further stated that the final payment of $400 on the lot was made in December, 1924, and that she learned of the Melby contract soon after "she had paid up all on the lot." Plaintiff stated in another portion of her testimony that it was in the summer of 1924 that Tabor talked with her concerning the title. This testimony would also establish the summer of 1924 as the time when the balance of $400 on the purchase price was paid, since plaintiff stated that she did not talk with him until after she paid it. It would be unusual for a delay of several months to take place before the issuance of a deed after payment of the purchase price in full and demand for a deed. The court may have considered this in reaching the conclusion here attacked and accepting the testimony that the final payment was made in December, 1924, and notice acquired after receipt of the deed.

The witness Tabor stated that the conversation with plaintiff probably occurred about March, 1924, and that he told her there was a contract of purchase on record. The Melby contract of purchase, however, was not recorded until May, 1924. In another portion of his testimony he stated that he would not want to say positively, but it was his recollection that he spoke to her about the time the assignment of the contract of sale went on record, which was in July. He also stated that it was possible several months elapsed before the particular subject of the lot came up, and that he would not fix a definite date as to when he told her. It was the function of the court below to resolve inconsistencies in the testimony and to judge of the credibility of the witnesses and of the weight of their testimony. We are of the view that plaintiff's statement, to the effect that the conversation with Tabor took place after she received the deed, a circumstance that would likely fix in the mind approximately the day on which she was made aware of the Melby-Burke transaction, supports the finding upon which judgment was based, to the effect that plaintiff had no notice of the prior contract when she received her deed after recordation thereof. Other statements of plaintiff made in the course of her examination, and the testimony of Tabor, we do not deem of a sufficiently definite and convincing character to warrant us in overthrowing the finding of the trial court.

[4, 5] Defendants also contend that the judgment should be reversed for the refusal of the court below to admit in evidence a policy of title insurance dated January 9, 1925, and issued to plaintiff, which stated that her title was subject to the Melby contract. But said policy could not have been received by her until after her deed had been recorded. Said title insurance company was not the agent of plaintiff, and any knowledge it may have possessed as to the condition of the title was not imputable to plaintiff.

The judgment is affirmed.

WASHBURN v. SPEER et al. (Sac. 4078.)

Supreme Court of California. Feb. 2, 1929.

1. Principal and agent 🔑89(8)—Evidence sustained findings that sale was procured through plaintiff's efforts, and that manufacturer represented commissions extended to all heaters installed in county.

In action for commissions for sale of orchard heaters under exclusive agency contract for particular county, evidence held to sustain findings of trial court that sale for which commissions were sought was made through plaintiff's efforts, and that manufacturer represented to plaintiff that contract provided for payment of commissions on all sales of heaters to be installed in county.

2. Principal and agent 🔑81(2)—Plaintiff held entitled to commissions for sale of heaters installed in his territory, where his efforts induced by defendant contributed to sale.

Plaintiff held entitled to commissions for orchard heaters sold for use in his territory, under contract giving him exclusive agency for sales in that territory, where defendant manufacturer represented that commissions would extend to all local installations and urged plaintiff to undertake sale, and where plaintiff's own efforts materially contributed to the sale, notwithstanding fact that contract of sale was entered into in another county.

J. E. Ricketts, of Covina, for respondent Speer.

CURTIS, J. Action brought to recover for a commission alleged to be due and owing plaintiff on the sale of 10,000 orchard heaters. The plaintiff had judgment, and the defendant the Kittle Manufacturing Company has appealed. The defendant Charles P. Speer, against whom the judgment also ran, has not appealed.

[1] The appellant's first contention is that the findings are not supported by the evidence. The court found: That the sale of said heaters "was made through the joint efforts of the defendant Kittle Manufacturing Company and the plaintiff, Lowell M. Washburn. That the plaintiff was the first to ascertain that the owners of the Camilla Grove were prospects for the purchase of the Kittle Heaters and thereupon advised the defendant corporation thereof, and in company with the said representative of said defendant corporation, and at his request, made several trips to said property and demonstrated said heaters thereon. That the defendant Kittle Manufacturing Company, prior to said sale being made, represented to the plaintiff and led him to believe that his contract provided for the payment of commissions on all sales of heaters made, to be installed in Tulare county, and with full knowledge that the plaintiff so interpreted his contract, said defendant corporation permitted, encouraged and requested the plaintiff to advertise and demonstrate said heaters on the said Camilla Grove."

It appears from the evidence that the appellant, the Kittle Manufacturing Company, entered into a contract with defendant Speer whereby the latter was appointed the agent of appellant to act as sales representative for the Kittle Smokeless Orchard Heater in certain territory of this state, including the county of Tulare. Speer was to receive as compensation for sales made by him a commission of from 20 to 40 cents per heater. While this contract was in force, a representative of Speer named Morehouse called upon the plaintiff for the purpose of interesting plaintiff in the sale of the Kittle heaters in the county of Tulare. Later Morehouse introduced a Mr. Meehan, a representative of the appellant, to the plaintiff. In conversation with Mr. Meehan, the plaintiff informed him that he would not undertake the sale of the heaters unless he would secure the exclusive agency in the county of Tulare. Mr. Meehan replied that Mr. Speer had the exclusive contract for the state, so that any contract must come from Mr. Speer, and that he would take the matter up with the defendant Speer, and have such a contract prepared and sent to plaintiff. A contract was prepared in the office of the appellant and sent to plaintiff. Plaintiff objected to some of its terms and so notified Mr. Meehan personally. The latter acquiesced in the objections made by plaintiff and in the suggestions made by plaintiff as to certain changes in the contract, which if made would render the contract acceptable to plaintiff. These changes were embodied in a subsequent draft of the contract, prepared in the office of the appellant, and the same was executed both by the plaintiff and Speer. During the time these negotiations regarding the terms of the contract were pending, the plaintiff and Meehan engaged in interesting prospective purchasers in Tulare county in the purchase of the type of heaters covered by the contract and which were manufactured by the appellant. Among those solicited by the plaintiff and Meehan in their joint efforts to make sales of heaters was the owner of the Camilla Grove, who, as a result of the efforts of plaintiff, together with the assistance of Meehan, purchased 10,000 of said heaters. The contract between plaintiff and Speer is dated September 5, 1925, and the plaintiff testified that he signed it on that date, and on September 15, 1925, he gave it to his wife to mail, and was under the impression that it had been mailed on the last-named date. On the morning of October 6th plaintiff left on a hunting trip. Just before his departure he received a telegram from Meehan asking him to go to the Camilla Grove and give a further demonstration. Plaintiff had Morehouse, who was then in his employ, make the required demonstration of the heaters on said grove. On the same day Meehan wired plaintiff that 10,000 heaters had been sold to the owner of the Camilla Grove. This telegram did not reach plaintiff until his return from the hunting trip, which was on the 11th of October. The plaintiff then found that the contract between himself and Speer had not been mailed to Speer. He thereupon forwarded the contract to Speer, who refused to accept it for the reason, as stated by him, that he had surrendered his contract covering Tulare county "to the manufacturers several weeks ago." About October 14th the plaintiff had a conversation with Meehan, in which the latter informed plaintiff that Speer had relinquished all his rights in Tulare county, and for that reason no commissions were due him on the sale of the heaters for the Camilla Grove. Meehan further told plaintiff that as he did not make the sale he should not expect any commission. It does not appear that Speer ever claimed any commission on the sale of these heaters. This was probably due to the fact that he had surrendered his contract before the sale was made, and for the further reason that by his contract he was simply appointed by appellant to represent them in territory described therein as its agent in the sale of heaters manufactured by appellant. No attempt was made therein to give him the exclusive agency in any territory whatever. He could not, therefore, have given the plaintiff the exclusive agency for the sale of said heaters in the county of Tulare. It is not shown, however, that plaintiff knew the extent of Speer's contract with appellant, but it plainly appears that Meehan, the secretary and representative of the appellant, must have been familiar with the terms of said contract, and he not only informed plaintiff that Speer could give him an exclusive agency contract, but Meehan had prepared in the office of the appellant such a contract, which was later signed by Speer and the plaintiff. Not only did Meehan represent to plaintiff that Speer had authority from appellant to give to the plaintiff such a contract, but on the strength of these representations he induced the plaintiff to advertise said heaters and to give numerous demonstrations as to their capabilities on the Camilla Grove and elsewhere in said county of Tulare for the purpose of inducing owners of citrus groves to purchase the same. The evidence shows that on the very day on which the plaintiff was informed by Meehan that the heaters here in question were sold, the plaintiff was directed by Meehan to give a further demonstration of said heaters to the owner of said grove. These directions were carried out by the plaintiff through his employé, Morehouse. The sale was made by written contract, executed by the appellant and the owner of the Camilla Grove in San Francisco on the 2d day of October 1925. Just why Meehan directed plaintiff to give a further demonstration of the heaters on the 6th day of that month and after the sales contract had been executed does not appear, but it is clear that he did so and that his directions were complied with by plaintiff. The plaintiff testified that he made five or six trips to the Camilla Grove for the purpose of interesting the owners thereof in the purchase of said heaters. On more than one of these visits demonstrations were given by him of the heaters. On some of these trips he was accompanied by Meehan, and the evidence shows without conflict that the two men worked together for weeks in introducing, advertising, and demonstrating said heaters in different parts of the county of Tulare, and that during all this time Meehan was assuring plaintiff that he would receive a commission on sales made by him in said county, and that he would receive an exclusive agency covering said county for the sale of said heaters. It is true that this agency was to come through Speer, but the latter had no contract which would authorize him to give such authority, which fact must have been known to Meehan at all times, as he was not only the secretary of the appellant, but he appears in a large degree to have had charge of its sales department, particularly was that the case in its dealings with the plaintiff. In fact, Meehan appears to have been the only officer or representative of the Kittle Manufacturing Company with which the plaintiff had any dealings. He was not produced as a witness at the trial. The evidence of the plaintiff, therefore, regarding his dealings with Meehan, is not denied either by Meehan or by any other witness. This evidence, in our opinion, fully sustains the findings of the court in favor of plaintiff, including the finding hereinbefore set out.

[2] It is contended, however, that even if this evidence sustains the contention of plaintiff that he held an exclusive contract for the sale of heaters manufactured by appellant covering the county of Tulare, he has still not shown any right of recovery against appellant, as the contract of sale for said heaters was executed in San Francisco, and outside the said county of Tulare. Appellant insists that there is a broad difference between an exclusive agency for the sale of merchandise in a certain territory and an exclusive right to make sales in that territory. In the former case, according to appellant's contention, the agent would have the right to recover only for commissions on sales which were actually made in said territory, while in the latter case upon a sale being made of merchandise to be used in said territory, the agent would be entitled to a commission, notwithstanding said sale was made and consummated without the territory. It may be conceded that this distinction as to the legal effect of these two classes of contracts exists as contended for by appellant. We do not think, however, that this principle of law alters the liability of the appellant toward the plaintiff. In support of its contention that the plaintiff cannot recover for the reason that the contract for the sale of the heaters was made in San Francisco and not in the county of Tulare, the appellant relies upon the following decisions of the courts of this state: Golden Gate Packing Co. v. Farmers' Union, 55 Cal. 606; Haynes Auto Co. v. Woodill Auto Co., 163 Cal. 102, 124 P. 717, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 971; Parry v. American Motors, etc., Co., 25 Cal. App. 706, 145 P. 165. In each of these actions the agent sued for a commission on sales alleged by him to have been made within the territory in which he held an exclusive agency. Recovery was denied in all of these actions. But it was not shown or claimed in any of said actions that the agent had anything to do with negotiating the sale upon which he claimed a commission. In the cases of Haynes Auto Co. v. Woodill Auto Co., supra, the decision states that: "Defendant [the agent] does not assert that it had anything to do with negotiating the sale, but bases a claim for compensation solely upon the contract between it and plaintiff by which the Woodill Auto Company was given the exclusive sale in Los Angeles and vicinity of the cars manufactured by plaintiff." In Parry v. American Motors, etc., Co., 25 Cal. App. 706, 710, 145 P. 165, 166, the court said: "The evidence as to the sale of these cars, however, shows that, although sold to residents of Alameda County, the sales were made in San Francisco. It is not shown by the plaintiff that in order to effect these sales the defendant's representatives or employees entered the territory of the plaintiff. We think, therefore, that such sales do not come within the terms of the contract, so as to entitle the plaintiff to a commission or discount thereon." In the present action, as we have already seen, the appellant did invade the territory of the plaintiff. Not only did its representative visit Tulare county, but he importuned the plaintiff to undertake the sale of the heaters in said county, and assured plaintiff that he would receive a commission upon all sales made in said county. Upon this assurance upon the part of the representative of appellant the plaintiff rendered services for appellant in demonstrating the heaters upon the Camilla ranch, which, we cannot help but believe, materially contributed to the sale upon which he now claims a commission. These facts take the present action out of the rule enunciated in the authorities cited by appellant, and render the appellant liable to plaintiff for the commission upon the heaters, the sale of which was largely due to the efforts of plaintiff. From the evidence it appears that the owner of the Camilla Grove resided or had its principal place of business in the city of San Francisco, and it was no doubt due to that fact that the contract for the sale of the heaters was made and executed in that city.

The further claim is made that plaintiff's cause of action should be against Speer alone and not against appellant. We think the finding already referred to sufficiently answers this claim. From this finding it appears that the appellant represented to the plaintiff and led him to believe that his contract provided for the payment of commissions on all sales of heaters to be installed in Tulare county, and with full knowledge that plaintiff so interpreted his contract, the appellant permitted, encouraged, and requested the plaintiff to advertise and demonstrate heaters on the Camilla Grove. The evidence further shows that the appellant through its representative Meehan informed plaintiff that Speer had relinquished his contract and that for that reason the plaintiff had no claim for a commission on the heaters sold. These facts unquestionably establish a just and legal claim in favor of plaintiff and against the appellant.

RATTO et al. v. YOUNIE et al. (Sac. 3896.)

Supreme Court of California. Feb. 4, 1929.

1. Appeal and error 🔑1011(1)—Trial court's finding on conflicting evidence, where substantially supported, cannot be disturbed.

Finding of trial court, supported by positive and substantial evidence, cannot be disturbed on appeal, where evidence was conflicting.

2. Mechanics' liens 🔑290(4)—Contractor held not entitled on appeal to recover under implied contract on account of variations, where trial court found building was constructed under original contract and found nature of extras furnished.

In action to foreclose contractor's lien, plaintiffs held not entitled on appeal to disregard original contract and recover under implied contract on account of changes from original plans and specifications, where trial court found that the building was constructed under the original contract and found nature and extent of extras furnished.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen County; H. D. Burroughs, Judge.

Action by A. B. Ratto and Victor Ratto, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of A. B. Ratto & Son, etc., against W. A. Younie and others. From the judgment, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

R. M. Hardy, of Susanville, for appellants.

N. J. Barry and Hardin Barry, both of Susanville, and C. C. Hall, for respondent Younie.

J. A. Pardee, of Susanville, for respondent Lassen Industrial Bank.

CURTIS, J. Action brought to recover the balance claimed to be due plaintiffs upon a contract for the construction of a business block in the city of Susanville, county of Lassen, and to foreclose a contractor's lien against the premises upon which the building is located for the amount found to be due. Plaintiffs sought also to establish the priority of their lien over a mortgage lien held by the defendant the Lassen Industrial Bank against said real property. The trial court gave judgment in plaintiffs' favor in the sum of $3,325.03 against the defendant W. A. Younie and decreed that they were entitled to a lien for that amount against said real property, but held that their lien was subsequent and subject to the lien of the defendant the Lassen Industrial Bank. Plaintiffs concede the correctness of said judgment in so far as it establishes the priority of the lien of said bank over their own lien, but are dissatisfied with the amount awarded them in the judgment against the defendant Younie. They have appealed therefore from that portion of the judgment awarding them judgment against the defendant Younie in the sum of $3,325.03.

[1] Plaintiffs contend that they constructed said building under a contract with Younie whereby they were to be paid the actual cost of all labor and materials furnished in the erection of said structure and in addition thereto 15 per cent. of the actual cost of said labor and materials, in payment of their services for supervising and directing the construction of said building. On the other hand, the defendant Younie contends that prior to the erection of said building he entered into a contract with the plaintiffs whereby they agreed to construct said building for the sum of $45,000. The court found for the defendant upon this issue, and that said building was constructed under said contract; that extras in the amount of $7,792.38 had been furnished by the plaintiffs; and that defendant had paid plaintiffs the sum of $49,467.35, leaving a balance due plaintiffs in the sum of $3,325.03.

Plaintiffs now contend, as they contended before the trial court, that they are entitled to recover upon their contract as pleaded in their amended complaint or upon what is frequently referred to as a "cost-plus contract," rather than upon a contract for a stated or agreed amount. The contract between the parties was verbal, and, as might be expected, the evidence offered by the respective parties to establish the same was contradictory in the extreme. There was positive and substantial evidence given by Younie, and corroborated by apparently reliable and disinterested witnesses, that the building was to be constructed by the plaintiffs for an agreed price of $45,000. Therefore, the finding of the court as to the character of the contract under which the building was constructed cannot be disturbed by this court.

[2] It is further contended by the plaintiffs that the evidence shows, even if the original contract between the parties was for the construction of the building at a fixed amount, that the building as finally erected and completed was so radically different from the one originally contracted for, and deviated so materially from the plans and specifications originally agreed upon by the parties, that the plaintiffs were warranted in disregarding the original contract, and may recover upon an implied contract for the labor and materials furnished in the erection of the building. This contention, we think, is fully answered by the findings of the court. After finding that the parties entered into a contract for the construction of a building at an agreed price of $45,000, the trial court then found that said building was thereafter constructed under said contract. It then proceeded to find the nature of the extras furnished by the plaintiffs and the value of each extra so furnished. This finding of the court that the building was constructed under a contract, fixing the contract price thereof, would preclude this court from holding that the evidence shows that the contract was so far deviated from as to justify the plaintiffs in disregarding it and suing on a quantum meruit. Besides, as just stated, the court found the extent and nature of the extras furnished by the plaintiffs. These extras would denote the changes and deviations made from the original plans and specifications of the building. Without setting them out here in detail, we do not think that they to the least extent justify the claim of the plaintiffs that the building as finally erected and completed was radically different from the one originally agreed upon or that it deviated in any substantial respect from the building delineated in the plans and specifications which the parties adopted at or immediately after they entered into their contract. The authorities cited by plaintiffs in support of this last-mentioned contention no doubt contain a correct statement of the law considered therein, but they are not applicable to any state of facts in the present action. Particularly is this true regarding the case of S. F. Bridge Co. v. Dumbarton L. & I. Co., 119 Cal. 272, 51 P. 335, which plaintiffs contend announces the rule that, where the owner does some act amounting to a rescission of the contract, he cannot set up the original contract to defeat the contractor's action for value of labor and materials furnished. As already intimated, there is nothing in the evidence in the present action which even tends to show that the defendant Younie had committed any act amounting to a rescission of the contract.

CAVASSA v. OFF et al. (S. F. 13001.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 29, 1929.

1. Criminal law 🔑1200—Statute requiring cancellation of pharmacist's license on third conviction of violating act held to limit such power to court in which conviction judgment was rendered (Act to Regulate Practice of Pharmacy 1905, §§ 7(i), 9, 12, as amended).

Act to Regulate Practice of Pharmacy 1905 (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 5886) § 12, as amended, providing that one convicted for third time of violating the act shall, in addition to penalties mentioned, have his registration as a pharmacist canceled, requires cancellation of license to be inflicted by court in which third conviction judgment was rendered, and does not authorize revocation of license by board of pharmacy, since section 7(i), and section 9, authorizing revocation by board whenever license holder is guilty of habitual intemperance, is narcotic addict, or has been convicted of felony, or for nonpayment of license fee, limit powers of board to those specified, under rule expressio unius est exclusio alterius.

2. Indictment and information 🔑114—Prior conviction relied on to increase penalty must be alleged in indictment or complaint and be proved on trial.

Where a prior conviction is relied on for purpose of empowering a court to inflict an increased penalty on defendant, indictment or complaint must allege the prior conviction, and on the trial, unless admitted, such prior conviction must be proved by competent evidence.

3. Criminal law 🔑1202(6)—License of pharmacist convicted of third violation of regulatory statute could not be canceled where prior violations were not alleged nor proved (Act to Regulate Practice of Pharmacy 1905, as amended).

Court in which pharmacist was convicted of a third offense of violating Act to Regulate Practice of Pharmacy 1905, as amended (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 5886), had no power to enter an order canceling his license where it was neither alleged nor proved that defendant had prior thereto been twice convicted of violating the act.

4. Criminal law 🔑1201—Statute providing for cancellation of pharmacist's license on third conviction is penal and should be strictly construed (Act to Regulate Practice of Pharmacy 1905, § 12, as amended).

Act to Regulate Practice of Pharmacy 1905 (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 5886) § 12, as amended, providing for cancellation of pharmacist's license on his third conviction of violating the act, is highly and strictly penal in its nature, and should therefore receive a strict construction and not be construed to include anything which is not embraced within its terms.

5. Property 🔑2—Right to practice profession is "property," which should not be taken away without clear proof of violation of statute.

The right of a person to practice the profession for which he has prepared himself is "property" of the very highest character, and should not be taken from him except on clear proof that he has forfeited it, and then only in strict conformity to the statute authorizing its forfeiture.

Richards, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Application for writ of prohibition by H. A. Cavassa against E. T. Off and others, comprising the California State Board of Pharmacy, and another, to prevent revocation of petitioner's license as pharmacist. From a judgment denying the writ, petitioner appeals. Reversed.

Superseding opinion in 265 P. 1022.

Pardini & Scampini, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Charles A. Wetmore, Jr., Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

CURTIS, J. This proceeding was originally instituted in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. The petitioner is a registered licentiate in pharmacy under the laws of this state, and the respondents, other than the respondent Zeh, constitute the California state board of pharmacy, and the respondent Zeh is the secretary of said board. This action was brought for the purpose of prohibiting the respondents from revoking or canceling the license of petitioner or his registration as a licentiate in pharmacy.

It appears from the record before us that the California state board of pharmacy served written notice upon the petitioner to appear before said board and show cause why his registration as a licentiate in pharmacy should not be canceled because of petitioner's conviction for the third time of the violation of the provisions of the act of the Legislature of the state of California to regulate the practice of pharmacy in the state of California, approved March 20, 1905 (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, No. 5886) and the acts amendatory thereto. Said notice was as follows:

"California State Board of Pharmacy.

"San Francisco, California, July 24, 1926.

"Harry A. Cavassa, Peninsula Drug Company, Colma, California—Dear Sir: You are hereby notified to appear before the California State Board of Pharmacy at its office in the State Building, San Francisco, California on the 30th day of July, 1926, at the hour of two o'clock p. m. on said day then and there to show cause if any you may have why your registration as licentiate in pharmacy, Certificate No. 4146, should not be by this Board cancelled because of your conviction the third time of a violation of the provisions of the Act of the Legislature of the State of California to Regulate the Practice of Pharmacy in the State of California, approved March 20th, 1905 and the acts amendatory thereto. It appears from the official records of the Justices Court of the First and Second Townships, County of San Mateo, State of California that you were convicted of a violation of the said act on March 16th, 1923 and that you suffered a second conviction of a violation of the provisions of said act on March 17th, 1925, and a third conviction for a violation of the provisions of said act on December 16th, 1925.

"By order of the California State Board of Pharmacy. Louis Zeh, Secretary."

Petitioner, instead of appearing before said board in response to said notice, instituted this proceeding, claiming that said board of pharmacy was without jurisdiction to revoke or cancel his license to practice pharmacy upon any ground set forth in said notice. The respondents appeared in said proceeding, and, after an answer was filed by them to petitioner's petition, the matter came on for trial. At the trial there was no dispute as to the facts, but the sole controversy was as to the power of the board of pharmacy to revoke petitioner's license to practice pharmacy on the ground that he had been convicted for the third time of the violation of the provisions of the act of the Legislature regulating the practice of pharmacy in this state. The trial court gave judgment for the respondents, and petitioner has appealed. There is but one question before this court on this appeal and it is the same question that was presented to the trial court at the hearing of this cause in said court, and that is whether the California state board of pharmacy is authorized to revoke and cancel petitioner's license to practice pharmacy in the state of California upon the ground that petitioner had been convicted for the third time of the violation of said act of the Legislature.

The divergent views of the parties hereto are in the main due to the different constructions placed by them upon various sections of said act relating to the powers of said board to revoke and cancel a license issued to a registered pharmacist. By section 7 of said act the powers and duties of said board are defined. By subdivision (i) of said section it is provided that said board shall have power "to provide by proper rules and regulations for the revocation by said board of licenses issued under the provisions of this act, whenever the holder of such license shall be guilty of habitual intemperance or addicted to the use of narcotic drugs, or shall have been convicted of a felony." It is apparent that the board of pharmacy, under the provisions of subdivision (i) of section 7 of said act, has no power to revoke a license issued by it except for one of the causes set forth in this subdivision of said section 7, and conviction for a third time of a violation of the provisions of said act is not one of said causes. Section 9 of said act provides for the revocation of a pharmacist's license upon his failure to pay the annual fee required to be paid by all holders of licenses from the state board of pharmacy. It is equally clear that this section gives no power to said board to revoke petitioner's license on the ground set forth in said notice served upon petitioner.

The only other sections of said act which, by any possible construction or interpretation, might be held to empower the board of pharmacy to proceed against petitioner under said notice served upon him are sections 6 and 12 of said act. They are, in part, as follows:

Section 6. "It shall be the duty of the secretary of the board to erase from the register the name of any registered pharmacist or assistant pharmacist, * * * who in the opinion of the board has forfeited his right under the law to do business in this state." Section 12. "* * * any person violating any of the provisions of this act, when no other penalty is provided, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be liable to punishment by a fine of not less than twenty dollars, and not more than one hundred dollars, or by imprisonment of not exceeding fifty days, or by both such fine and imprisonment. All fines recoverable under this act shall be paid by the magistrate receiving the same to the state board of pharmacy. Any person convicted of violating the provisions of this act the third time shall in addition to the penalties hereinbefore mentioned have his or her registration as a pharmacist cancelled."

[1] Respondents contend that under these sections of the act the board of pharmacy is authorized to proceed under the notice served upon petitioner and cancel his name from the list of registered pharmacists on file in the office of said board. This contention is stated in the brief of the Attorney General, representing the respondents herein, as follows: "In our view of the matter, section 12 of the act itself revokes the license of a pharmacist who has been convicted of violating the provisions of the Pharmacy Act the third time, and the requirement that the registration of such pharmacist be cancelled calls for nothing more than a ministerial act upon the part of the board, and its provisions are mandatory." To a certain extent we are in agreement with the position taken by the Attorney General, as set forth in the above excerpt from his brief. Undoubtedly under section 12 of the act the license of a registered pharmacist may be revoked, as provided in said section, and, when so revoked or canceled, the name of the pharmacist may be erased from the list of registered pharmacists. In order, however, for a license to be revoked, there must be some board, or court, or other power, vested with authority to declare and order such revocation. In whom is the power of revocation provided for in section 12 lodged by the terms of said section? Has the board of pharmacy or the court in which the defendant is convicted this power to declare the license revoked?

An examination of the provisions of section 12 of said act convinces us that it was the intention of the Legislature in the enactment of said section to provide that a revocation or cancellation of a license for the third conviction was a part of the penalty to be inflicted upon the defendant by the court in which such judgment of conviction was rendered, and that said section does not in any way attempt to authorize the revocation of a license by the board of pharmacy upon the third conviction of the holder thereof. Not only by its caption, but by its context, this section refers to the penalty to be suffered by one violating the provisions of said act. In other words, section 12 of the act contains the penal provision enacted for the purpose of making more effective the terms and provisions of said act, and without which the whole act might become exceedingly difficult of enforcement. It provides that any person violating the provisions of said act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and then proceeds to prescribe the punishment, not only for a single conviction under said act, but for subsequent convictions, and finally provides that: "Any person convicted of violating the provisions of this act the third time shall in addition to the penalties hereinbefore mentioned have his or her registration as a pharmacist cancelled." It is perfectly clear from the reading of said section as a whole that it relates to and concerns exclusively proceedings instituted to enforce the penal provisions of said act, and, when it provides for the cancellation of a pharmacist's license for a third conviction, it is dealing with the power of the court in which such third conviction is had and not with the power of the board of pharmacy to cancel said certificate. It is not contended that the court in which petitioner suffered his third conviction directed or ordered the cancellation of petitioner's license. It is true that section 12 is mandatory in this respect, the exact wording being, "shall in addition to the penalties hereinbefore mentioned have his or her registration as a pharmacist cancelled," but this language of the statute must be considered in connection with other provisions of the law applicable to the power of a court to impose an increased penalty upon a person convicted of crime by reason of the fact that he had prior thereto suffered one or more convictions.

[2, 3] The court in which the petitioner was found guilty of violating the provisions of said act for the third time, as just stated, did not order the cancellation of petitioner's license. We doubt, under the facts as shown by the record, whether it had any authority to include such order in its judgment of conviction. There was no legal showing made before said court that the judgment of conviction rendered therein was the third conviction of petitioner. It is not shown that the fact of petitioner's prior convictions was either alleged in the complaint in said action or that any proof was offered before said court of the fact of petitioner's prior convictions. It is well established in this state, where a prior conviction is relied upon for the purpose of empowering a court to inflict an increased penalty upon a defendant, that the indictment or complaint must allege the prior conviction, and upon the trial, unless admitted, such prior conviction must be proven by competent evidence. People v. Delany, 49 Cal. 394, People v. Coleman, 145 Cal. 609, 612, 79 P. 283. In the Coleman Case this court said: "The former conviction is a fact, and a very important one, which constitutes or goes to make up this aggravated offense, and being a material fact in the case, necessarily it must be pleaded, and if issue be joined in reference thereto, * * * must be proven as any other material fact in the trial of the cause." Therefore the court in which petitioner was convicted of the third offense had no power to enter an order canceling his license, even if it had attempted to do so, by reason of the fact that it was neither alleged nor proven that petitioner had prior thereto been twice convicted of a violation of said act.

[4] The provision of section 12, providing for a cancellation of a pharmacist's license upon his third conviction, is highly and strictly penal in its nature, and should therefore receive a strict construction. In the case of Schomig v. Keiser, 189 Cal. 596, 598, 209 P. 550, 551, in construing a provision of the Real Estate Broker's Act (Stats. 1919, p. 1256) relative to the power of the state real estate commissioner to revoke the license of a real estate broker, this court, in an opinion written by Chief Justice Shaw, held that: "The portion of the act which authorizes the real estate commissioner to forfeit the license of a broker or salesman and take it away from him is highly penal in its nature, and should not be construed to include anything which is not embraced within its terms." We think this same rule should apply with equal potency with reference to the terms of the act before us, providing for the forfeiture of a license held by a registered pharmacist. In our opinion section 12 of the act relates only to the authority of the court in which the third conviction may be had, giving it power to revoke the license of a registered pharmacist upon his third conviction, and it should not be construed to give to the board of pharmacy this same power, as there is nothing in the section, or in any other part of the act, which directly or by reasonable implication confers such power upon said board.

We think it reasonably appears from the provisions of said act, and particularly from subdivision (i) of section 7 of said act and from section 7 of said act, above referred to, that it was not the intention to give to said board of pharmacy power to revoke the license of a registered pharmacist upon his third conviction of the violation of the terms of said act. In said subdivision (i) it is set forth that the board shall have power to provide proper rules and regulations for the revocation by said board of licenses issued by it "whenever the holder of such license shall be guilty of habitual intemperance or addicted to the use of narcotic drugs or shall have been convicted of a felony" Had it been intended to vest said board with power to revoke a license for the third conviction of a holder thereof of the violation of said act, it would seem that such power would have been included in subdivision (i) of said section 7. The well-established rule, expressio unius est exclusio alterius, would seem to apply in the construction of this provision of the act. The same may be said regarding section 9 of said act, giving power to the board to revoke a license for the nonpayment of license fee. In these two sections of the act four instances are specified in which a license may be revoked by the board of pharmacy. The express mention of these four instances in which the board may revoke a license under the act would seem, under the rule above announced, to exclude any other instance not included therein.

[5] The right of a person to practice the profession for which he has prepared himself is property of the very highest character. Hewitt v. Board of Medical Examiners, 148 Cal. 590, 84 P. 39, 3 L. R. A. (N S) 896, 113 Am. St. Rep. 315, 7 Ann Cas. 750. Due to the severe and exacting tests now generally required before a person can legally follow a profession at the present day, this right can only be acquired after years of arduous effort and closest application. It is generally the only means of the holder thereof whereby he may support himself and family, and it usually affords such holder the best opportunity to become a useful and sustaining member of the community in which he resides. This right should not be taken from one who has thus acquired it, except upon clear proof that he has forfeited the same, and then only in strict conformity to the statute authorizing its forfeiture. We are satisfied, for the reasons given herein, that the board of pharmacy has no authority under the proceedings instituted by it to revoke petitioner's license nor to cancel or erase his name from the list of registered pharmacists kept by it in the office of its secretary.

The judgment is therefore reversed.

CALIFORNIA-MICHIGAN LAND & WATER CO. v. FLETCHER et al. (L. A. 9521.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 31, 1929.

1. Quieting title 🔑35(2)—Complaint, in action to quiet title, alleging that plaintiff is owner and that defendants claim adversely but have no interest, held sufficient.

Complaint, alleging that plaintiff is owner of particular described property, that defendants claim interest therein adverse to plaintiff and that such claim is without right, and that defendants have no right, title, or interest in the premises or any part thereof, held sufficient in action to quiet title.

2. Injunction 🔑118(3)—Count incorporating allegations of plaintiff's title, and further alleging that plaintiff had sold lots subject to restrictive covenant which defendants were violating, held insufficient for injunction.

Count of complaint, incorporating by reference allegations of previous count, alleging plaintiff's title to premises, and setting forth in addition that plaintiff had sold part of lots in tract subject to building restrictions for benefit of remaining portion of tract, and that defendants were erecting building on lot in violation of restrictions, held not to state cause of action for injunction, since it did not appear to whom the property was sold or that defendants did not have possession as trespassers or under claim of title from third party.

3. Injunction 🔑62(3)—One selling land subject to restrictive covenants could not enjoin violation thereof as against trespassers upon his own land.

If building restrictions imposed on sale of lots in tract by plaintiff are regarded as covenants, plaintiff retaining ownership of part of lands had no cause of action in equity to enjoin violation of the covenants as against trespassers or adverse possessors of his own land.

4. Deeds 🔑168—Equity will not adjudge plaintiff's title to property for breach of condition of deed, where plaintiff's title was never divested.

Equity will not adjudge title to be vested in plaintiff for forfeiture of conditions attached to deed, where title to particular property involved was never divested by sale or otherwise.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Action by the California-Michigan Land & Water Company against John E. Fletcher and others. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Reversed in part and affirmed in part.

Goodspeed, Pendell & Neff and Ezra Neff, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Thomas T. Robinson, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J. This appeal is taken from a judgment of dismissal entered after defendants' demurrer to plaintiff's complaint had been sustained with leave to amend and plaintiff failed or refused to amend. The grounds of demurrer were: First, that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; second, that the facts set forth as a second cause of action failed to state a cause of action; third, fourth, and fifth, that said complaint was ambiguous, uncertain, and unintelligible, respectively, in that it could not be ascertained therefrom by or on what theory plaintiff sought to enforce restrictions against these defendants.

The complaint is in two counts. The first count contains the usual averments appropriate in a suit to quiet title, alleging that plaintiff is the owner of certain described land and premises situate in the Michillinda tract in the county of Los Angeles, that defendants claim an estate or interest in said property adverse to plaintiff, and that the claim of defendants is without any right whatever, and they have no estate, right, title, or interest whatever in said land or premises or any part thereof.

"For a further and second cause of action," plaintiff incorporates by reference the allegations of the first count of the complaint, and then proceeds to allege that defendants are erecting upon said land and premises a building to be used as a dwelling which will be of a cost and value of less than $5,000, to wit, of the value of $500, and are occupying the uncompleted structure for residence purposes. It is further alleged that "plaintiff was at one time the owner of all of said Michillinda Tract, but has since sold more than half of the lots in said tract, * * * and has made all of such sales and the subsequent use of each lot to be sold expressly subject to the conditions and restrictions substantially similar to the following:

" 'It is provided and covenanted, said covenants running with the land herein described * * * that any building to be used as a dwelling erected or moved upon said premises shall be of the cost and value of not less than five thousand dollars ($5000). * * * No building on said premises shall be occupied for residence purposes until the completion thereof and full compliance with said requirements as to location and cost.' "

It is also alleged that "in selling said lots in said tract under said conditions, plaintiff has followed a 'general scheme' of building and use restrictions for the benefit of the remaining portion of said tract, which is still owned by plaintiff." Allegations that plaintiff has no plain, adequate, direct, and speedy remedy at law, and that it has demanded of defendants that they desist from erecting said building, conclude the statement of the second cause of action. It is not alleged that defendants are plaintiff's grantees, or deraign title through it, or through or from any of its grantees.

The prayer of the complaint is that defendants be enjoined during the pendency of the action from erecting a building of less than $5,000 in value and from occupying said premises, or any part thereof, and that the court make said injunctions prayed for permanent, quiet plaintiff's title to the property involved, and assess such damages as may be just.

[1] Beyond question the first count of the complaint states a cause of action to quiet title. It is alleged therein that plaintiff is the owner of the described property, that defendants claim an interest therein adverse to plaintiff, and that such claim is without right, and defendants have no estate, right, title, or interest whatever in said premises or any part thereof. That is all the law requires. Hyatt v. Colkins, 174 Cal. 580, 163 P. 1007. We conclude, therefore, that the trial court erred in sustaining the demurrer to said first cause of action.

[2-4] As to the second cause of action, a different situation is presented. Insufficiency of the facts set forth in the said second cause of action was specifically urged as a ground of demurrer. In the second division of the complaint plaintiff plainly intended to set forth a cause of action based on the alleged violation of a building restriction against the erection of a dwelling at a cost of less than $5,000, and the occupation of said dwelling before it was completed. The statement of said cause of action attempted to be set forth is insufficient, in that it does not appear from the facts alleged that defendants are persons against whom a cause of action based on a violation of said restrictions could be sustained. Considered together, the allegations of said count are to the effect that defendants are building upon a lot owned by plaintiff, in which defendants have no right, title, or interest. Although it is alleged that plaintiff once owned the entire tract, and has since sold part of it subject to restrictions for the benefit of the entire tract, it is not alleged either directly or inferentially that plaintiff ever sold the lot in question to defendants or to any other person. For aught that appears in said count, defendants may have entered upon said land as trespassers or in the exercise of rights of ownership claimed by them to have been derived from some other source than plaintiff. If the restrictions be regarded as covenants, there would be no cause for a court of equity to enjoin violations of restrictive covenants by injunction against trespassers or adverse possessors upon land owned by plaintiff. If, on the other hand, the restrictions created conditions, a court of law would not adjudge title to be vested in plaintiff as a result of a forfeiture and revestiture of title for breach of conditions where its title was never divested by a sale or otherwise.

Plaintiff having failed in its attempt to state a cause of action based on the violation of building restrictions, the court below did not err in sustaining the demurrer as to said cause of action.

The judgment is reversed as to the first cause of action, and as to the second cause it is affirmed.

PARSONS v. ROBINSON et al. (L. A. 8775.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 31, 1929.

Judgment ⚷780(5)—Wife to whom husband executed deed to qualify her as surety on bail bond had title to which lien of judgment attached.

Wife to whom husband executed deed of realty for purpose of qualifying her to become surety on his bail bond had title to which lien of judgment against her attached, without regard to agreement of parties that deed was not to be recorded.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court of Los Angeles County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by S. J. Parsons against Annie Dell Robinson, also known as A. D. Robinson (formerly Annie Dell Segno), and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion in 266 P. 833.

Hilton & Christensen, of San Francisco, for appellants.

S. J. Parsons, of Los Angeles, in pro. per.

CURTIS, J. This action is one in the nature of a creditor's bill, to subject certain real property, situated in the county of Los Angeles, to the payment of a judgment, rendered in the superior court of said county in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant A. D. Robinson (formerly Annie Dell Segno).

The plaintiff was the owner of a valid judgment against said defendant A. D. Robinson (formerly Annie Dell Segno) on the 19th day of October, 1923, the day on which there was conveyed to her the real property sought by this action to be charged with the payment of said judgment. Said judgment was docketed in the office of the clerk of the court in which it was rendered on the 7th day of April, 1919, and thereby became a valid lien upon all real property then owned by said defendant, or which she might thereafter acquire during the life of said lien, situated in said county and not exempt from execution.

On the 19th day of October, 1923, the defendant Harry T. Robinson was the owner of said real property. He had been arrested upon a charge preferred against him in the United States court, and required a bail bond in the sum of $25,000. A friend of his by the name of R. E. Fitzgerald offered to go on his bond, but Robinson was informed by his attorney that he required two bondsmen in order to effect his release from imprisonment. His wife, the said defendant A. D. Robinson (formerly Annie Dell Segno), was asked to act as the second bondsman. She replied that she had no property and could not justify as a bondsman. It was then suggested that the defendant Harry T. Robinson convey to his wife the real property described in the complaint herein for the purpose of enabling her to qualify as one of said bondsmen. This suggestion was acted upon, and the defendant Harry T. Robinson by grant deed conveyed said real property to his wife in order that she might qualify as a bondsman upon the bond then required of him. On the same day said defendant A. D. Robinson, together with the said R. E. Fitzgerald, and one Olive S. Fitzgerald, executed said bond, and the same was approved, and the defendant Harry T. Robinson was released from custody. In order for said bondsmen to qualify on said bond, it was necessary for each of them to be worth the amount of said bond, and to make oath to that fact. In compliance with this requirement, the said defendant A. D. Robinson, R. E. Fitzgerald, and Olive S. Fitzgerald each subscribed and swore to the verification annexed to said bond, which verification, exclusive of its formal parts, was as follows: "Mrs. A. D. Robinson, R. E. Fitzgerald and Mrs. Olive S. Fitzgerald, being duly sworn, each for himself, deposes and says that he is a householder in said district, and is worth the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars, exclusive of property exempt from execution, and over and above all debts and liabilities."

At the time of the execution and delivery of said grant deed by the said defendant Harry T. Robinson to his wife, it was understood and agreed that it should not be placed of record in the office of the county recorder of said county, but, upon the advice of the attorney for the defendant Harry T. Robinson, said deed was on the day of its date filed for record in the office of said county recorder. On the release of Mr. Robinson from jail, he learned that said deed had been placed of record in the office of said county recorder. He immediately took steps to make different arrangements for his bail bond. The result of said action on his part was that a day or two after the execution of said deed, Mrs. Robinson, at the request of her husband, conveyed said real property to defendant Thomas D. Shannon, and the latter was substituted as a bondsman in the place of Mrs. Robinson. Shannon was a friend of Harry T. Robinson, and said conveyance was made to him in order that he might be able to qualify as one of Robinson's bondsmen. It appears that the reason the defendant Harry T. Robinson directed his attorney not to record the deed to his wife was that he knew of plaintiff's judgment, and he did not wish to make himself liable for its payment.

The court found the foregoing facts, and also "that no other consideration passed from the said A. D. Robinson to the said Harry T. Robinson for the said real property at the time of the conveyance of the real property, except as set forth in finding III above (finding III deals with the facts and circumstances surrounding the giving of the bail bond and the conveyance of said real property to the said A. D. Robinson for the purpose of qualifying her to become a surety on said bail bond, as related above), it being understood and agreed at the time between the said Harry T. Robinson and the said Annie Dell Robinson, otherwise known as A. D. Robinson, that upon the exoneration of the bail bond aforesaid, the said real property should be reconveyed by the said A. D. Robinson to the said Harry T. Robinson." The court also found, finding XVI: "That the said deed made, executed and delivered by Harry T. Robinson to A. D. Robinson on the 19th day of October, 1923, is a valid deed given for a valuable consideration and vested title in fee to said property in A. D. Robinson." The trial court upon this finding rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendants have appealed.

Appellants contend that Mrs. Robinson by the deed from her husband, dated October 19, 1923, took merely the naked legal title to the real property described therein and that respondent's judgment lien did not attach to said real property, or to any interest therein, and that the complete equitable title remained in the said appellant Harry T. Robinson. Appellants have cited the case of Fulkerson v. Stiles, 156 Cal. 703, 105 P. 966, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 181, and a large number of other cases decided by the appellate courts of this and other states in support of their foregoing contention. There can be no question but that the cases relied upon by the appellants correctly state the law applicable to the facts, as claimed by the appellants. In our opinion, however, the appellants have misconceived the legal effect of the facts as found by the court. Appellants insist that Mrs. Robinson received nothing but the naked legal title to the real property conveyed to her by her husband, and that all the facts and circumstances surrounding the execution and delivery of the deed established that such was the intention of the parties to said deed. In this we think the appellants are in error. There is no dispute as to just what actually took place at the time the deed was executed and delivered. Mr. Robinson desired another bondsman. It was suggested that his wife act as such bondsman, and she replied that she had no property and could not therefore legally qualify as a bondsman. It was then decided by her and her husband that the latter would convey to his wife sufficient property so as to enable her to qualify as a bondsman on the $25,000 required of him. In order for her to qualify, it was necessary that she be the actual owner of property equal to the amount of the bond. Not only was this required of her, but the further requirement of the law was that she should make affidavit to that fact. It is conceded that she made the required affidavit and swore that she was worth the amount of the bond—$25,000. She could not truthfully have made such an affidavit if she were merely the owner of the naked legal title to said property. The property was conveyed to her by her husband for the express purpose of qualifying her to act as such bondsman. Can it now be successfully contended by the parties to said deed that Mrs. Robinson took only a naked legal title to said real property? In order to so hold, it would be necessary to disregard the uncontroverted evidence, not only of said parties, but of all witnesses who testified regarding said transaction.

In Fulkerson v. Stiles, supra, community real property had been taken in the name of the wife, against whom the defendant held a judgment which he claimed became a lien upon said real property. In an action by the husband to quiet his title to said real property, both the husband and the wife testified that, in taking title to said real property in the name of the wife, there was no intention to make a gift thereof to the wife, but it was done merely for the purpose of pleasing the wife. There was no evidence to the contrary, and the court held that no title passed to the wife by such conveyance. Another case relied upon by appellants is Fanning v. Green, 156 Cal. 279, 104 P. 308. In that case the controversy was between the surviving husband and the heirs of the deceased wife over certain real property which stood in the wife's name at the time of her death. The court held that, while the intent that the property should become the separate property of the wife might, "and possibly must, be inferred where there is no other evidence than that showing the mere direction by the husband [that the deed be made in the wife's name], it may also be shown not to have existed by any competent evidence. In the present case the evidence is held sufficient to sustain the finding that the husband did not intend to make a gift to his wife." Other cases are cited and relied upon by appellants. In a number of them the facts show that, where property is paid for by one person and the title is taken in the name of another, the latter takes but the naked legal title, and he has not such an interest in said property to which judgment against him can attach. It is manifest that none of these cases reach the exact point involved in the present action.

In none of these cases, nor in any others to which our attention has been called, or which we have been able to discover, has it been held, where the express intent of the parties to a deed to real property was to invest the grantee with an absolute title in fee to the property conveyed, that said grantee does not hold said title absolutely for all purposes, and that he does not have such an interest in said real property to which a judgment against said grantee would attach. We confess we have not been able to find any authority directly holding that an interest in real property, such as that acquired by Mrs. Robinson under the deed from her husband, is subject to the lien of a judgment rendered against the grantee named in said deed. But it seems illogical and contrary to well established principles of law to hold, when the absolute legal title to real property is voluntarily transferred by the owner thereof to another, that the grantor can complain of the results which naturally flow from his voluntary act.

It is suggested by appellants that the agreement of the parties, that the deed from Robinson to his wife was not to be recorded, is strong proof that Robinson did not intend to make a deed to the property to his wife. Just what this agreement might imply, standing by itself, is not necessary for us at this time to determine, as the testimony of Robinson himself is that the reason that he did not want the deed recorded was that he knew of the judgment against his wife and did not wish to become responsible for it. He no doubt realized, at the time he planned to execute and deliver the deed to his wife, that he was thereby vesting title in her to said property to which the respondent's judgment lien would attach. Under these circumstances, we hardly think that the agreement between Robinson and his wife that the deed should not be recorded is entitled to any great consideration.

A further contention is made by appellants that, if the property was not conveyed to Mrs. Robinson in trust and thereby she acquired merely a naked legal interest therein, the evidence shows that it was conveyed to her as security, and for the purpose of indemnifying her against any loss that she might sustain by reason of her becoming a surety on her husband's bail bond. A complete answer to this contention is that there is not a scintilla of evidence to support this contention. Nothing was said by any of the parties at any time about indemnifying Mrs. Robinson against any loss she might incur as a bondsman on said bond, but, on the other hand, the evidence is clear, convincing, and uncontroverted that the sole purpose Robinson had in mind in executing and delivering the deed to his wife was to invest her with the title to property of a sufficient value that she would be able to qualify as one of his bondsmen.

We can see no escape from the conclusion that respondent's judgment against Mrs. Robinson attached to and became a lien upon the real property conveyed to her by her husband by the deed of date October 19, 1923.

The present action is therefore maintainable, and the judgment rendered therein in favor of the respondent should be and is hereby affirmed.

We concur: SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LANGDON, J.

PRESTON, J. (dissenting). I respectfully dissent from the views announced by Mr. Justice CURTIS in the above cause. The undisputed facts disclosed by the findings are that the deed in question was made by Robinson to his wife solely to qualify her as a bondsman upon the bail bond required of him in the federal court. The understanding was that, when liability ceased on said bond, the property was to be reconveyed. No consideration other than this called the transaction into being.

The opinion holds that, inasmuch as the wife was required to take an oath that she was worth the amount of the bail over and above all her just debts and liabilities and property exempt from execution, she of necessity took the whole beneficial interest in the property under this deed, and the husband must have so intended it.

But no contention is made that the transaction was anything other than as found by the court, nor that any rule of public policy condemned such an arrangement, nor that any rule of estoppel would prevent the husband from demanding the return of said property upon the cessation of liability upon said undertaking. This being true, no reason appears for holding that the wife received anything more than a qualified estate subject to defeat upon the release of her liability upon the bond. It should also be here noted that, within two days after making this deed to her, her liability on this undertaking did cease; the defendant Shannon being substituted for her thereon. The said husband and wife conveyed the property covered by said deed to him to secure him for the assumption of said liability. The effect of this transaction has been noted in the opinion.

Whatever estate the wife may have received, if any, under this deed, it was, when she was released from said liability, divested out of her. The release from liability left her with only the bare, naked, legal title. The principles of law controlling here are well understood and everywhere recognized. "* * * The judgment * * * becomes a lien upon all the real property of the judgment debtor, * * * owned by him at the time, or which he may afterwards, and before the lien expires, acquire. The lien continues for five years. * * *" Code Civ. Proc. § 674.

"The law is well settled that the lien of a judgment does not attach to a naked title, but only to the judgment debtor's interest in the real estate; and if he has no interest, though possessing the naked title, then no lien attaches." Iknoian v. Winter (Cal. App.) 270 P. 999. See, also, Riverdale Min. Co. v. Wicks, 14 Cal. App. 526, 112 P. 896; Nat. Bank of Pacific v. W. P. R. R., 157 Cal. 573, 108 P. 676, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 987, 21 Ann. Cas. 1391.

"The interest which the lien of judgment affects is the actual interest which the debtor has in the property, and a court of equity will always permit the real owner to show that the apparent ownership of another is or was not real, and, when the judgment debtor has no other interest except the naked legal title, the lien of judgment does not attach." Iknoian v. Winter, supra, citing Freeman on Judgments (4th Ed.) § 357, and Black on Judgments (2d Ed.) §§ 420, 421.

This principle has been expressed in various ways by the courts. In Eagle v. McKown (W. Va.) 142 S. E. 65, 67, the court says: "Where statute enactments do not interfere, a judgment creditor can acquire no better right to the estate of the debtor than the debtor himself had when the judgment was recovered; and his lien will be limited to the actual interest of the judgment debtor in the property."

Again: "The lien of a judgment is subject to prior liens, and will not prevail over prior equitable claims on the same property. It is subject to every equity which existed against the land in the hands of the judgment debtor at the time of the rendition of the judgment, and courts of equity will protect the equitable rights of third persons against the legal lien, and will limit such lien to the actual interest which the judgment debtor has in the estate." 15 R. C. L. p. 798, § 255.

In Knaak v. Brown, 115 Neb. 268, 212 N. W. 434, 51 A. L. R. 242, it is said: "Indeed, this bank, by the filing of its transcript, obtained a lien. But its lien attached only to the actual interests of the judgment debtor, Van Valin, in the mortgaged premises, and was subject to all existing equities, whether of record or not. Judgment lien merely conferred the right to levy upon the property in litigation here to the exclusion of all other adverse interests subject to the judgment. [Citing cases.] 'A judgment lien is, in equity, but a charge on the title held by the defendant when the lien attaches, or which is subsequently acquired. It can only hold the legal estate subject to the equity. "It is well settled that a judgment lien on the land of the debtor is subject to every equity which existed against the debtor at the rendition of the judgment; and courts of equity will always limit the lien to the actual interest of the judgment debtor." * * * Thus, if through an innocent mistake the holder of a trust deed has released it as to more of the land than was intended, the lien of an intervening judgment is subject to the equitable right to have the release reformed, notwithstanding a recital in it of full payment.' 2 Freeman, Judgm. (5th Ed.) p. 1997, § 950, and cases cited."

Again: "It is generally conceded that the lien of a judgment does not attach to land to which the judgment debtor has only a naked legal title, unaccompanied by any beneficial interest, the equitable and beneficial title being in another. A judgment lien attaches only to the interest which the debtor has in real estate, and if he has no actual interest, though possessing the legal title, then no lien attaches." 15 R. C. L. § 270, pp. 807, 808. See the same quotation in 117 Am. St. Rep. 782.

Still more to the point and controlling in this case is the language found in Hunter v. Citizens' Savings, etc., Co., 157 Iowa, 171, 138 N. W. 476, Ann. Cas. 1915C, pp. 1019, 1020, as follows: "But a judgment lien has no effect to create any property right in the judgment creditor. It does not attach to the land as distinct from the title held or obtained by the debtor. His lien simply gives him a prior right as against a general creditor to enforce his claim by levy upon and sale of the debtor's legal or equitable estate in the land, but he can not seize, sell, or acquire any greater interest than is owned by the debtor himself. If there be any equities, limitations, or conditions attaching to the debtor's title which would defeat it in the hands of the debtor himself, it would be subject to the same infirmities and liabilities in the hands of the purchaser under such levy. Even if the debtor has some real or apparent interest in land to which the lien is attached, yet if his title has been so qualified in the instrument creating it that it may be defeated or divested by a power intrusted to another, and it is in fact thereafter so defeated or divested, the lien falls with it, and the creditor can not pursue the property in the hands of a third person who has acquired it through the exercise of that power. This is not only the reasonable rule, but is we think sustained by all the authorities. The thought will perhaps be more clear if we keep in mind the fact that a judgment lien does not attach to the land, but to the judgment debtor's interest in it, and, if that interest be subject to any infirmity or condition by reason of which it is eliminated or ceases to exist, the lien attaching thereto ceases with it. (Beaver v. Ross, 140 Iowa, 154, 118 N. W. 287, 17 Ann. Cas. 640, 20 L. R. A. [N. S.] 65; Thomas v. Kennedy, 24 Iowa, 405, 95 Am. Dec. 740; Bucknell v. Deering, 99 Iowa, 548, 68 N. W. 825; Holden v. Garrett, 23 Kan. 98; Shipe v. Repass, [172] 28 Grat. [Va.] 715 [716]; Sinclair v. Sinclair, 79 Va. 40; Snyder v. Martin, 17 W. Va. 276, 41 Am. Rep. 670; Scudder v. Voorhis, 5 Sandf. [7 N. Y. Super. Ct. (N. Y.)] 271.) Applying this principle, the New York court in Moore v. Pitts, 53 N. Y. 86, where a lien was sought to be enforced against one Hall, says: 'It is obvious that the lien of Gilman's judgment could only attach to such estate as Hall had in the premises. If that estate was subject to be divested by the breach of any condition subsequent, any such breach that would divest the estate would of necessity destroy the lien.' See, also, Ackerman v. Gorton, 67 N. Y. 63; Rose v. Hatch, 125 N. Y. 427, 26 N. E. 467; Leeds v. Wakefield, 10 Gray (Mass.) 514; Smyth v. Anderson, 31 Ohio St. 144; Baker v. Copenbarger, 15 Ill. 103, 58 Am. Dec. 600; Wetmore v. Midmer, 21 N. J. Eq. 242; Morse v. Hackensack Sav. Bank, 47 N. J. Eq. 279, 20 A. 961, 12 L. R. A. 62; Mayo v. Merritt, 107 Mass. 505."

Under the doctrine of these cases, and particularly under the doctrine last above cited, whatever beneficial interest the wife may have received under this deed was subject to divestment upon her release from liability on said undertaking. This liability admittedly ceased before this action was begun; therefore any beneficial estate she may have held fell upon the happening of that event, and with it fell the lien, if any ever existed, of the judgment in question. It is therefore my view that the judgment of the court below should be reversed.

BENNETT v. BROWN et al. (L. A. 9536.)

Supreme Court of California. Feb. 4, 1929.

1. Divorce 🔑275(1)—Evidence required finding that defendant receiving husband's property in son's name, knowingly aided husband in defrauding wife.

Evidence held to require finding that defendant, who received conveyance of husband's property in his son's name, received the property with full knowledge of intent on husband's part to defeat wife's recovery of alimony, and for purpose of aiding in that scheme.

2. Divorce 🔑275(1)—Neither husband, conveying property, nor father of grantee was entitled to equitable relief, where conveyance was for express purpose of defrauding wife.

In suit by husband to set aside conveyance of property transferred to defendant's son for purpose of defeating wife's recovery of alimony, neither party was entitled to any affirmative relief in equity, where original transaction was consummated by both parties for express purpose of defrauding wife, since parties came into equity with unclean hands.

3. Divorce 🔑275(1)—Denial of affirmative relief to husband, conveying property in fraud of wife, and to father of grantee, held not to prejudice wife, notwithstanding her previous quitclaim deed.

Denial, under doctrine of unclean hands, of affirmative relief to husband, conveying property for purpose of defeating rights of wife to alimony, and to defendant, taking title in his son's name with knowledge of husband's purpose, held not to extend to wife, or prejudice her right to have her claims to the property adjudicated in the light of the fraud, notwithstanding quitclaim deed executed by her before fraud was fully discovered.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; F. C. Valentine, Judge.

Action by Walton L. Bennett against Arthur J. Brown and Robert A. Brown, in which the two defendants first named interposed a cross-complaint, joining Sarah E. Bennett as defendant. From the judgment, plaintiff and defendant last named appeal. Reversed, with directions.

Goodwin J. Knight, of Los Angeles, for appellant Sarah E. Bennett.

James E. Fenton and Charles J. Kelly, both of Los Angeles, for appellant Walton L. Bennett.

Frank G. Tyrrell and C. W. Stahl, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PRESTON, J. The judgment in this cause is reversed, with directions to the court below to deny all relief on all issues between the plaintiff and the defendants, but without prejudice to the rights of the cross-defendant Sarah E. Bennett, who alone is entitled to have her costs of appeal herein as against the respondents.

This decision is made, and this direction to the court below given, because the record shows without substantial conflict that both plaintiff, Walton L. Bennett, and respondent Robert A. Brown have entered a court of equity with unclean hands asking for aid. Arthur J. Brown is the son of Robert A. Brown, who held a power of attorney from him, and all the transactions herein were made by the father so acting for the son; all acts upon the part of the son were imputable to the father, and reference will hereinafter be made in the main only to the father. Robert A. Brown had several money judgments of record against him, which fact doubtless explains the existence of these transactions in the name of the son. The truth of the observation as to unclean hands will abundantly appear from the following:

Walton L. Bennett was at all times herein, and for some years prior thereto, living in discordant relationship with his wife, Sarah E. Bennett. A state of separation and of armed neutrality was in existence at the period herein considered. Bennett had considerable separate property, a part of which was the residence and contents therein, also certain personalty within the curtilage, all the subject of this action. The wife was in the home, and refused to be ejected therefrom. She was defending her possessions against all comers, and was breathing fumes of anathemas upon the head of her husband. Bennett sought to dispose of said property so as not to lose the right thereto and to a reconveyance thereof, when he should have rid himself by divorce of the burden of said wife.

In the early part of 1921 he fell in with Robert A. Brown, a real estate broker, who had offices in connection with those of his attorney, and who immediately inclined an ear to his voice, and, with the sole intention of defeating the claims of said wife for alimony and maintenance, concocted the scheme of having Bennett deed said residence to Arthur J. Brown, the son of Robert A. Brown, and convey to him the household and kitchen contents of said building, which was accomplished by a document, consisting of many pages of items, which included everything in said home, even the crumb tray and the trusty rolling pin. This scheme was carried out on March 24, 1921. Arthur J. Brown in turn deeded to Bennett, through his father, as attorney in fact, a tract of 160 acres of Texas land of unknown and extremely uncertain value—a tract of land to which the title was in doubt, and likewise a tract which none of the parties had ever seen. Bennett also passed a check to Brown for $100, which he says was a camouflage, and the proceeds thereof were returned to him later.

Bennett, with the knowledge and connivance of the elder Brown, then journeyed secretly into Nevada, there to establish a residence and stay the period of time required to sue said Sarah E. Bennett, and thus to rid himself of the marriage tie and the concomitant obligations thereof. He reached Reno, Nev., in a few days after execution of said conveyances, from which point he conducted a continued correspondence with the senior Brown, under the name of Livingston. Brown, in writing, aided and abetted him in every way in concealing himself from his said wife and in effectuating his purpose of removal. Brown gave him repeated bulletins upon the sayings and doings of his wife, who, until ousted by court proceedings, remained in the home.

The senior Brown, in the name of his said son, brought suit against Sarah E. Bennett for possession of the property, including the items of personalty aforesaid. The expenses of this litigation were paid by an attorney on behalf of Bennett. Finally, in August, 1921, Mrs. Bennett quitclaimed to Arthur J. Brown for $350, $250 of which was paid by Bennett himself, her interest in said property. Brown thus prevailed, and the wife was ousted. The elder Brown then went into possession of the property. The correspondence between Bennett and Brown continued, and therein Brown guardedly, but nevertheless effectually, admitted a trust relationship in said property in favor of Bennett. In fact, after the quitclaim deed was executed by the wife, on one or two occasions he wrote that he had caused to be executed the necessary papers for a reconveyance of both the real and personal property to Bennett. After securing possession of said property, Brown continued in his efforts to keep Bennett's whereabouts concealed from the wife, and offered many suggestions as to the method of so doing.

In the fullness of time, to wit, in September, 1922, Bennett brought his divorce action in Reno to trial, testifying that he owned no property; that no one held the property here in controversy or any other property in trust for him, and that he had sold the property involved to the junior Brown. After the purpose of his trip to Nevada had been wrought, Bennett returned to Los Angeles to gather together the broken fragments of his former estate. He brought suit against the Browns, claiming that the trade made with them was a sham to defeat the wife. The Browns countered, claiming full title in themselves and asking affirmative relief by cross-complaint to this effect. In the meantime, the wife, suspecting perfidy on the part of both her husband and the Browns, had brought a suit against them—against the husband for desertion and separate maintenance, and against the Browns to upset the transfer here involved. Later, by amended cross-complaint of the Browns, she was made a party defendant to the present action, and showed not only her claims as a deserted wife, but also that she was a judgment creditor of her husband.

[1, 2] The court, by its findings, exonerated the Browns, and confirmed the title in them, denying relief in toto to either Bennett or his said wife. To the extent that the findings exonerate Brown, Sr., from being particeps criminis in the scheme to defraud the wife, and to the extent that they hold that Brown did not with full knowledge receive the property to aid in that scheme, said findings are without substantial support in the evidence. We need not pause to discuss the fact that the evidence is in conflict as to the extent of the interest Bennett intended to convey to Brown in said property. It is sufficient for our purposes to know that these parties were acting in concert with respect to the transaction to defraud Sarah E. Bennett. This being admitted, the law will lend help to neither party in a suit involving said transaction, but will leave the parties where it finds them.

[3] Under the above recital of facts, no authorities need be amassed to show that equity will not afford either party relief. As to Sarah E. Bennett, who has appealed, attacking the transaction as fraudulent, the situation is different. She is entitled to have her claims adjudicated in the light of this palpable fraud against her. Her quitclaim deed, under these circumstances, may not be said by this court at least to foreclose her from relief upon her independent suit against the parties to this transaction or in the issues tendered by her in the present action.

Much more might be written in disposing of this cause. Counsel for appellant, omitting to recognize that we are not sitting as a trial court to resolve conflicting evidence, has amassed a brief of some 350 pages, dealing in a partisan way with the evidence. He fails wholly to see the fraud and perjury of his client. Respondents see these shortcomings of appellant, and, while observing the mote in appellant's eye, fail wholly to see the beam in their own.

The facts of this case stir deeply the conscience of a court of equity, and none of the parties should be heard in their petitions. There is, therefore, no alternative but to give the judgment first hereinabove announced.

BANK OF ITALY v. E. N. CADENASSO et al.

Supreme Court of California. Feb. 6, 1929.

1. Appeal and error 🔑1199—Judgment, though void for trial judge's disqualification, cannot be attacked on motion, after affirmance by Supreme Court, for first time raising question of disqualification (Code Civ. Proc. § 170, subd. 1).

Judgment, though void for disqualification of trial judge, under Code Civ. Proc. § 170, subd. 1, cannot be attacked in Supreme Court by motion to set aside judgment after affirmance of judgment by Supreme Court, where no question of trial judge's disqualification was raised in trial court or in Supreme Court on appeal until after affirmance of judgment.

2. Appeal and error 🔑169, 671(1)—Appellate courts will not assume functions of equity or nisi prius courts and hear questions of law and fact not raised at trial nor presented by record on appeal.

Courts of appellate jurisdiction will not assume functions of courts of equity or nisi prius courts and hear and decide questions of law and fact which were neither raised in trial court nor presented to appellate court by record on appeal.

3. Judgment 🔑392—Judgment affirmed by Supreme Court is not void on its face for disqualification of trial judge, and party attacking invalidity must establish it before judgment will be deemed void.

Judgment affirmed by Supreme Court is not void on its face for disqualification of trial judge by reason of his owning stock in plaintiff bank, and hence party asserting invalidity of judgment must establish it before judgment will be deemed void.

4. Appeal and error 🔑1199—Every presumption favors validity of judgment sought to be set aside after affirmance by Supreme Court.

On motion to set aside judgment of superior court after affirmance by Supreme Court, every presumption must be indulged in favor of validity of judgment.

5. Judgment 🔑403—Equity courts offer adequate relief against void judgments by injunctive relief if necessary.

Courts of equity offer plain, speedy, and adequate relief against evil effects which may flow from void judgments by injunctive relief, if exigencies of situation so require.

6. Judgment ⚷385—Motion to set aside judgment as void because of trial judge's disqualification should be brought in trial court and not appellate court (Code Civ. Proc. § 170, subd. 1).

Motion to set aside judgment after affirmance by Supreme Court on ground that judgment was void because of disqualification of trial judge under Code Civ. Action by the Bank of Italy against E. N. Cadenasso and another, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of E. N. Cadenasso, and another. Judgment of the superior court for plaintiff was affirmed by Department 1 of the Supreme Court. On motion by defendants to set aside the judgment. Motion denied.

See, also, 274 P. 536.

Frank J. Solinsky and Edward R. Solinsky, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

Louis Ferrari and J. J. Posner, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J. This motion is before us pursuant to a notice of motion given by appellants to respondent that appellants would move thereafter, on a day certain, to vacate and set aside the judgment of the superior court appealed from, and also the decision and order of Department 1 of this court affirming said judgment made and entered some twelve days prior to the date of said notice of motion to vacate and set aside as aforesaid. Said judgment appealed from was entered more than three years before this proceeding was initiated. The ground upon which the motion was noticed to be made and upon which it was subsequently made, was that the judgment of the lower court was void because of the disqualification of the judge who tried said cause and that the department decision and order of this court were accordingly void.

The disqualification of said trial judge is based upon affidavits, which are not disputed, wherein it is averred that during all the time he presided at the trial of said cause, including the entry of judgment therein, he was, and for a number of years prior thereto had been, the holder and owner of shares of the capital stock of respondent, Bank of Italy. It is insisted that said ownership of shares of stock of said bank brings him directly and squarely within the inhibitory clauses of section 170, subd. 1, Code of Civil Procedure, as interpreted by this court in City of Vallejo v. Superior Court, 199 Cal. 408, 249 P. 1084, Adams v. Minor, 121 Cal. 372, 53 P. 815, Hall v. Superior Court, 198 Cal. 373, 245 P. 814, Lindsay-Strathmore Irr. Dist. v. Superior Court, 182 Cal. 315, 187 P. 1056, and other cases. In City of Vallejo, supra, it is said that Adams v. Minor, supra, and other cited cases are conclusive on the question that a judge who is a stockholder in a bank which is a party to an action is an "interested" party within the meaning of section 170, Code of Civil Procedure, and is therefore disqualified from sitting or acting in said case. It is further held that whatever action, orders, or judgments have been made or entered by said judge during the existence of such disqualification are and continue to be void.

[1-4] Granting, without deciding, that the judgment herein assailed is void, it may not be attacked in this court in the proceeding which appellants have adopted. No question of disqualification of the trial judge was raised in the trial court or in this court upon appeal, or at all until after the affirmance of said judgment. While it is sometimes stated in general terms that a void judgment may be attacked anywhere, directly or collaterally, this does not mean that courts of appellate jurisdiction will assume the functions of courts of equity or nisi prius courts and hear and decide questions of law and fact which were neither raised in the trial court nor presented to the appellate court by the record on appeal. Counsel quotes authority to the effect that the affirmance of a void judgment upon appeal imparts no validity to the judgment, but is itself void by reason of the nullity of the judgment appealed from. Pioneer Land Co. v. Maddux, 109 Cal. 633, 42 P. 295, 50 Am. St. Rep. 67. All that the court meant to say is that the affirmance of a void judgment by this court does not bar the right of an aggrieved party to thereafter attack it on the ground that it is void. The judgment before us is not void upon its face. Every presumption of its validity must be indulged. It is therefore incumbent upon the party asserting its invalidity to establish it before said judgment will be deemed void. This done, every act which followed as an incident of said judgment, including the order of affirmance, falls with it.

It will not be contended that this court upon a rehearing will entertain a motion to vacate a judgment regular upon its face on the ground of the disqualification of the trial judge, where no such question was raised in the trial court and the record on appeal is absolutely silent on the subject.

[5, 6] Courts of equity offer plain, speedy, and adequate relief against the evil effects that may flow from void judgments. Such courts may grant injunctive relief if the exigencies of the situation would seem to so require. The proper forum for the determination of the issues sought to be raised by the Action for money had and received by the Bank of Italy against E. N. Cadenasso and another, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of E. N. Cadenasso, and another, in which defendants filed a cross-complaint. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

F. J. Solinsky and Edward R. Solinsky, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

Louis Ferrari and J. J. Posner, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This cause is before us for a hearing in bank upon an order granting said hearing after decision by Department 1 of this court.

[1] We have given consideration to the points made by appellants in their original briefs and also in the briefs filed since said order granting a hearing in bank was made, and we are of the view that the findings of the trial court are supported by the evidence. The rule is that, if there is any substantial evidence in the record by which the findings of the trial court may be sustained, this court will not disturb the judgment appealed from.

[2] While appellants have moved to vacate and set aside the judgment herein upon the grounds that the judge who tried the cause was disqualified by reason of the matters set forth in said motion (Bank of Italy v. E. N. Cadenasso and Mario J. Cadenasso, copartners, etc., S. F. No. 11861, this day filed, 274 P. 534), we are not to permit any point made upon the presentation of said motion to enter into the consideration of this appeal, which was taken from the judgment.

The department decision, Curtis, J., which we hereby adopt as our decision upon hearing in bank, sufficiently covers the case as made in the court below. Said decision follows.[1]

Upon the grounds set forth in the foregoing opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ira F. Thompson, Judge.

Action by Hattie L. Seney against the Pickwick Stages, Northern Division, Inc., and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Superseding opinion in 268 P. 451.

See, also, 263 P. 299.

Edwin S. Earhart, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Warren E. Libby, B. P. Gibbs, M. Tellefson, and Wm. A. Sherwin, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The appellant, with her husband and five months old child, was a passenger on an autostage operated by the respondent on its line between San Francisco and Portland. The stage overturned and was wrecked. The appellant's husband and child were killed, and appellant suffered severe injuries. Alleging that the accident was caused by the stage company in the negligent operation of the stage upon which the decedents and she were passengers, the appellant instituted two suits against the Pickwick Stages. One, a suit for damages for the death of her husband, was tried by the court without a jury, and resulted in a judgment in favor of the plaintiff herein. On appeal by the defendant, the judgment was affirmed by the District Court of Appeal in an opinion which fully states the facts. Seney v. Pickwick Stages, 82 Cal. App. 226, 232, 255 P. 279. A petition by the appellant to have the case heard in this court was denied.

In the second action, the one now here, appellant again alleging the negligence of the respondent in the operation of the stage, seeks damages for the wrongful death of her minor child, as well as damages arising out of the severe personal injuries sustained by her in the overturning of the stage. The respondent, answering, alleged, among other defenses, facts on which it contended that the injuries were caused by an unavoidable and inevitable accident. This action was brought on for trial after the trial of the first cause, but before the affirmance of the judgment on appeal. It was also tried by the court, another judge sitting, without a jury. With the exception of the evidence necessary to establish the amount of damages sustained by the plaintiff, the evidence in the second trial was identical with that in the first case—the parties stipulating that the entire record and transcript of the testimony introduced in the first case be introduced and considered in evidence on the trial of the second. The trial court found in favor of the respondent and against the appellant on the issue of negligence. It found that the overturning of the stage was the result of unavoidable accident, and that there was no negligence upon the part of the respondent, its servants, agents, or employees. As a consequence of these findings, judgment was entered for the stage company. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment and from an order denying her motion for a new trial.

The appeal presents a rather unusual situation. On the same evidence in two actions, between the same parties, and involving the same issue of negligence, the same court, but with different trial judges sitting, reached opposite conclusions.

[1-3] It is at once apparent that neither the doctrine of the law of the case, nor the doctrine of res adjudicata, are applicable on this appeal, for the reason that the subject-matter of the two actions was not the same. It is also obvious, considering the fundamental difference between the function of trial courts and of appellate courts, that the latter may not disturb the findings of the trial court based on sufficient evidence except as the power to do so may have been enlarged by the provisions of section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure, enacted by the Legislature in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 583). For the reason that a finding of the trial court on the question of the amount of damages is deemed desirable upon a reversal of the judgment, we find it unnecessary to construe the power of this court under that section in the present case.

We deem it necessary only to determine whether there was evidence before the trial court sufficient to support the finding that there was no negligence on the part of the defendant and that the accident complained of was unavoidable. In other words, we are called upon to determine the propriety of the order denying the motion for a new trial. The question of contributory negligence on the part of the appellant is not involved. This identical evidence was thoroughly considered and reviewed on the appeal in the former case, and the court arrived at the conclusion that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applied to the situation presented, that it was not shown that the accident was unavoidable, and that "the evidence in this case absolutely establishes the negligence of the defendants, with or without the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur." Seney v. Pickwick Stages, 82 Cal. App. 226, 232, 255 P. 279, 281.

[4-7] While the foregoing conclusions of the court on the appeal in the former case are not binding on the respondent on this appeal, nor are they binding on this court after denial of the petition for transfer to this court, we have examined the evidence anew and have concluded that said evidence establishes the negligence of the respondent as matter of law. Applying the rule that the finding of the trial court is entitled to the benefit of all reasonable inferences and presumptions in support thereof, we are still unable to conclude that the evidence affords any substantial basis for the finding of want of negligence on the part of the respondent or that the accident was unavoidable. Under these circumstances, the court committed prejudicial error in denying the motion for a new trial. While the order denying said motion is reveiwable on this appeal, said order is nonappealable, and the appeal therefrom is dismissed.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded to the trial court, with directions to take evidence as to the amount of damages to which the appellant is entitled and to render judgment accordingly.

5. Waters and water courses ⟹197—Landowner in water district cannot defeat action against him for invasion of right common to all landowners, because costs of litigation are borne from fund made up of taxes, including his contribution (St. 1913, p. 1059, § 12, subd. 6, as amended by St. 1923, p. 312).

Landowner or taxpayer within water district cannot defeat or abate an action by water district under St. 1913, p. 1059, § 12, subd. 6, as amended by St. 1923, p. 312, to restrain him from preventing, obstructing, or impeding natural flow of river, in violation of a right common to all of landowners and water users in district, merely because costs of litigation are borne from fund made up of taxes, including his own contribution thereto.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; G. R. Freeman, Judge.

Action to restrain the taking of water by the Coachella Valley County Water District against Prescott T. Stevens. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

★Rehearing denied.

Rehearing denied: CURTIS, J., dissenting. Superseding opinion in 266 P. 341.

H. L. Carnahan and J. M. Stevens, both of Los Angeles, and Thomas C. Yager, of Indio, for appellant.

W. G. Irving and Sarau & Thompson, all of Riverside, for respondent.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of dismissal, following an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend. The action was brought to restrain the defendant, Stevens, from preventing, obstructing or impeding the natural flow of the Whitewater river in Riverside county, except as the same may be necessary for reasonable uses and purposes on the lands of said defendant.

It appears from the allegations of the complaint that the plaintiff is, and since January 16, 1918, has been, a county water district duly organized and existing under the provisions of an act called in these proceedings the County Water District Act (Stats. 1913, p. 1049); that from time immemorial there has existed a natural depression or valley in the county of Riverside, extending for a distance of approximately 60 miles southeasterly from the summit of San Gorgonio pass, which is about 2,500 feet in elevation, to the westerly shore of the Salton Sea, which is 250 feet below sea level; that within said pass, for a distance of about 16 miles southeasterly from said summit, said valley is narrow, and varies from 2 to 4 miles in width, and is bounded on the northerly side by San Gorgonio mountain, 11,000 feet high, and on the southerly side by San Jacinto peak, more than 10,000 feet high; that thence southerly said valley widens, and is bounded on the northeasterly side by a chain of clay hills, and on the southwesterly side by a spur of high, rocky, barren mountains, constituting the foothills of San Jacinto peak; that within said pass the grade of the valley is steep, and generally exceeds 80 feet per mile; that from the southeasterly end of said pass, for a distance of about 24 miles, the grade is about 40 feet per mile; that thence southeasterly from its westerly boundary, which is about 50 feet above sea level, and for a distance of about 20 miles, said valley spreads into a broad and nearly level plain, commonly called Coachella valley or plain, sloping gently toward the Salton Sea; that the Whitewater river is a natural innavigable stream, flowing in a well-defined natural channel; that the stream rises in the southerly and easterly slopes of San Gorgonio mountain and other mountains adjacent thereto in the San Bernardino range, and proceeds along its course and over the land particularly described in the complaint and within the district; that regularly during the rainy season each year, and also at other times, large quantities of water fall as rain or snow upon the slopes of said mountains, within the watershed of said stream and its tributaries, and are carried thence down said stream without substantial loss to and below an underground dike existing across the channel of said stream, near the northerly boundary line of section 2, township 3 south, range 3 east, S. B. B. & M.; that said dike causes all water flowing thereto in said stream, or percolating thereto through the soil beneath, and adjacent to said stream, to rise, at and where said dike exists, and for a short distance above said dike, to within 15 feet of the surface of the ground and thereby forms a natural underground reservoir or basin above said dike, and from said reservoir said water flows over said dike to the lands below, forming a surface and also a vast underground body of water; that below said dike in the Coachella plain are lands riparian to the stream, other lands to which rights to said water have attached by appropriation, other lands benefited by the waters of said stream by percolation and subirrigation, and other lands supplied with water from wells tapping this underground supply of water; that not less than 1,400 inhabitants of said district, residing in the towns and villages of Indio, Coachella, Thermal, and Mecca, situated within said Coachella plain, require the use, and for more than 10 years prior to the commencement of the action have regularly and continuously required and used, for municipal, domestic, manufacturing, and other uses in said towns and villages, large quantities of water exceeding in amount 250,000 gallons per day; that the climate in said Coachella plain and throughout all that part of the remainder of said valley lying within the boundaries of said water district is arid, and that the average annual rainfall therein is less than 3 inches, substantially all of which is quickly evaporated from the surface of the soil on which it falls; that the soil lying within said plain and within the district is fertile, and with the application of water obtained from the subterranean supply readily responds with profitable crops of farm and garden products, and of cotton, grapes, dates, and of citrus and other fruits; that more than 13,000 acres of land within said plain have been reclaimed from its wild and arid state by the owners thereof and their tenants, and have been made productive and valuable by the use of said waters by means of irrigation, and that without sufficient water for irrigating the same said lands would be of little or no value; that the owners of said cultivated lands have likewise used waters from said subterranean supply for irrigation for more than 10 years, and that said source of water supply and the waters thereof in the quantities heretofore used are and will be necessary in order that said lands be productive; that any diminution in said underground water supply will cause great and irreparable injury and damage to each of the owners of land within said plain and to each of the inhabitants of said district.

It is further alleged that the defendant Stevens is and has been for more than 20 years the owner of lands above said dike, acquired by him or by his predecessors in interest from the United States government, and that no part of said lands is suitable for cultivation, and that no part of the water of said stream is necessary for irrigating the same or any part thereof, and that the only beneficial use that has or can reasonably be made of the waters of said stream on said lands or by said defendant is for the domestic uses and purposes of the occupants thereof, and that for said purposes a constant flow of one-fiftieth of a cubic inch per second is reasonably sufficient; that within three months prior to the commencement of the action the defendant entered upon the lands at and above said dike and over said natural reservoir, and without the consent of the plaintiff, or of any user of the waters of said stream below the lands of the defendant, and against the protest of the plaintiff and of said users, and the inhabitants of said district below said dike and natural reservoir, began to construct and will complete wells on the lands of the defendant and over and within said natural reservoir, and that the defendant intends thereby to pump or otherwise obtain all waters flowing in said stream or retained in said reservoir, and to construct dams and other works and ditches for the diversion of said waters above said dam, and by means of other works, ditches, pipe lines, and other conduits to take, divert, appropriate, and carry away from said stream, and from said natural reservoir, and from the lands below, all of the waters so impounded by said reservoir, to the amount of 60 cubic feet per second constant flow, or more, and by such means to spread and waste the waters so diverted upon other lands; that prior to the year 1922 the defendant Stevens and his predecessors in interest claimed and now claim the right to divert certain waters of said river above said reservoir, and the defendant Stevens is now threatening to proceed approximately 17,000 feet up the bed of said stream from said original point of diversion, and thereby take and remove said waters from the bed of the Whitewater river, and change the natural course thereof, and diminish the flow thereof to the said reservoir and the lands below. It is further alleged that none of the waters of said river, if taken and spread upon or otherwise used by the defendants on their lands, will return to said river or to the subterranean channels thereof running to the Coachella plain, and that by the threatened acts of the defendants all of the owners of land and users of water in said plain will be wrongfully deprived of the use of the waters of said river.

[1] In the foregoing outline of the allegations of the complaint enough has been stated to show that the controversy is not one solely between an upper riparian owner and lower riparian owners and appropriators, as contended by the defendant, but is one affecting all of the users of the waters of said river below the natural reservoir, whether such users be landowners riparian to the river, or be appropriators under the laws of the state, or be owners and operators of wells constructed on the lands overlying the subterranean and percolating waters away from the river proper, or otherwise be users of the waters from the river for irrigation, domestic or other purposes. In other words, under the allegations of the complaint, this litigation affects the rights of every landowner and every inhabitant of the district using the waters of the river, including the subterranean flow thereof, and in these classes of persons are included all of the persons residing in or owning land in the Coachella plain. Under these circumstances the complaint sets forth an alleged grievance against the defendant, which is and should be cognizable in a court of justice.

The defendant Stevens filed a demurrer to the complaint, under which it was claimed in the trial court and it is now insisted (1) that the plaintiff has not legal capacity to sue; (2) that the complaint does not state a cause of action; and (3) that there is a defect or misjoinder of parties plaintiff.

From what has been hereinbefore stated with reference to the allegations of the complaint, it is clear that sufficient has been set forth therein to constitute a cause of action. The second ground of objection to the complaint is therefore found to be without merit. The defendant Stevens concedes that "there is no question that each individual riparian owner, or owner of land overlying the alleged subterranean water body, and each appropriator can bring an action in his individual name alone to protect his indivdual and several right," and it is not contended by him that the facts alleged in the complaint are insufficient to constitute a cause of action on behalf of each individual owner and user of water. Notwithstanding the foregoing concession of counsel for said defendant, the allegations of the complaint have been referred to somewhat at length, for the purpose of disclosing the general situation of water users in the Coachella plain and the bearing which that general situation has upon the main point of said defendant that the plaintiff has not the legal capacity to sue. In this connection it is claimed that it is not shown that there are any lands or other property rights owned by the district which will be injured by the alleged threatened acts of the defendant, and that therefore the defendant is not being sued by the real party or parties in interest. It must be conceded that there is an absence in the complaint of any allegation showing that title to any land or other property is held by the district as such; consequently the authority to maintain the action must appear in the act under which the district was organized, or under that act as supplemented by other statutes bearing on the subject. Otherwise, it has no legal capacity to maintain the action.

[2] That the district was organized in all respects as provided by the act of 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 1049) following a favorable vote of the electors residing in the territory included within the district, is not questioned. The act is entitled: "An act to provide for the incorporation and organization and management of county water districts, and to provide for the acquisition of water rights or construction thereby of waterworks and for the acquisition of all property necessary therefor, and also to provide for the distribution and sale of water by said districts."

Section 1 of the act provides that "a county water district may be organized and incorporated and managed as herein expressly provided and may exercise the powers herein expressly granted or necessarily implied." Section 12 enumerates the powers of the district. Subdivision 2 of that section provides that the district shall have power "to sue and be sued, except as otherwise provided herein or by law, in all actions and proceedings in all courts and tribunals of competent jurisdiction." Subdivision 6 of that section as originally enacted provided that the district should have power "to store water for the benefit of the district, and to conserve water for future use and to appropriate, acquire and preserve water and water rights and for this purpose to sue, intervene and compromise, in the name of the district, and assume the costs of litigation involving the ownership of waters or water rights within the district and those used and useful for the purposes of the district or of any of the lands situated therein." In 1923 said section 12 was amended. Stats. 1923, p. 312. By the amendment, subdivision 6 was re-enacted in substantially the original form, except that the following was added to the same subdivision, relating to the powers of the district: "To commence, maintain, intervene in, defend and compromise actions and proceedings to prevent interference with or diminution of the natural flow of any stream or natural subterranean supply of waters used or useful for any purpose of the district or a common benefit to the lands within the district or its inhabitants; and to commence, maintain and defend actions and proceedings to prevent any such interference with the aforesaid waters as may endanger the inhabitants or lands of the district."

The present action was commenced on July 22, 1924. At that time the amendment of 1923 was in effect, and it is not contended that the language of the amendment, taken alone, is in any way insufficient to authorize the district to commence and prosecute this action, and it may not well be so contended, for it would be difficult to find words contemplating more precisely the action sought to be authorized in the name of the district, or more direct in its application to the facts alleged in the present complaint.

But it is insisted that the original act and the amendment of 1923 are unconstitutional, in so far as those enactments purport to authorize the district to prosecute such an action as the present one, for the reason that the titles of the enactments did not specifically mention the subject of the grant of power to sue on behalf of the landowners and water users in the district. The title of the original act has been quoted. The title of the amendatory statute was made to read: "An act to amend sections, twelve, fifteen, twenty-one and twenty-two of an act entitled 'An act [here the title of the original act is repeated],' approved June 10, 1913, as amended." Certain sections of the original act were amended in 1915 (Stats. 1915, p. 26), but in no respects affecting the questions involved herein.

It is urged that there is no suggestion in the title that any subject other than the acquisition of water and water rights, and the distribution and sale of water so acquired is to be dealt with in the body of the act. The case of In re Werner, 129 Cal. 567, 62 P. 97, is relied upon as directly in point. That case involved the validity of a commitment for the alleged violation of an ordinance of the North Pasadena sewer district. The district was organized under an Act of March 31, 1891 (St. 1891, p. 223), entitled "An act to provide for the formation, government, operation and dissolution of sanitary districts in any part of the state, for the construction of sewers and other sanitary purposes," etc. In 1895 (St. 1895, p. 85) the title was amended by adding "and for empowering sanitary boards to provide in other respects for the good order and welfare of sanitary districts." Section 2 of the amendatory act amended section 5 of the act, purporting to empower the board to determine the qualifications of persons authorized to sell liquors at retail, and that no license to keep a saloon or sell liquors at retail should be operative unless approved by the sanitary board. Thereafter the board passed an ordinance making it unlawful for any person to keep a saloon or sell liquors at retail within the district, without having procured a license therefor approved by the sanitary board. It was held that there was "nothing in the title of the act under consideration. even as attempted to be amended, which in the remotest degree refers to the question of regulating the sale of liquors or prescribing the qualifications of persons dealing in the same," and that a "sanitary district, no more than an irrigation district, or a reclamation district, or a drainage district, possesses police powers properly belonging to cities and municipal bodies exercising local governmental functions. Such districts are created for the purpose generally of some special local improvement, and should exercise only such powers as may be conferred upon them by the Legislature in the line of the object of their creation."

In the present case we think it indisputable that the power conferred on a county water district to sue and be sued with respect to the preservation and conservation of the sources of water supply used and usable for the lands and inhabitants within the district is directly in line with the objects of the creation of the district and germane to the purposes for which it was organized. The power to sue and be sued has been conferred upon numerous public corporations of this character and the conferring of such power without specific mention thereof in the title of the acts has not, so far as we have discovered, ever been successfully brought into question. For example, the original Wright Irrigation Act was enacted 42 years ago and was entitled: "An act to provide for the organization and government of irrigation districts, and to provide for the acquisition of water and other property, and for the distribution of water thereby for irrigation purposes." Stats. 1887, p. 29. In section 14 thereof the board of directors was authorized "to institute and maintain any and all actions and proceedings, suits at law or in equity, necessary or proper in order to fully carry out the provisions of this act, or to enforce, maintain, protect, or preserve any and all rights, privileges, and immunities created by this act or acquired in pursuance thereof. And in all courts, actions, suits, or proceedings, the said Board may sue, appear, and defend, in person or by attorneys, and in the name of such irrigation district." Superseding the original act came the Bridgeford Act in 1897 (Stats. 1897, p. 254), with a title no more comprehensive than the original act, so far as the power to sue was concerned, and in section 15 thereof the provisions of section 14 of the Wright Act were re-enacted.

Numerous other examples could be cited. It is sufficient to say that, when the statute provides for the organization and government of such public corporations, the power to sue and be sued need not be expressed in the title, for the reason that such power is incidental to the general purposes of the act. See Islais Creek Reclamation District v. All Persons, 200 Cal. 277, 252 P. 1043; Robinson v. Kerrigan, 151 Cal. 40, 50, 90 P. 129 (121 Am. St. Rep. 90, 12 Ann. Cas. 829). It is but natural to assume that, when the creation of such a corporation is provided for and the general purpose is expressed in the title, the corporate body should possess the right to have recourse to the courts for the protection of its rights and the redress of wrongs committed in violation of those rights. We therefore conclude that the title of the original County Water District Act and the title of the amending act were fully sufficient to enable the Legislature to incorporate in the body of such acts the provisions with reference to legal proceedings to preserve and protect the rights which in reality constitute one of the main reasons for the creation of the district.

Furthermore, we find no objection in providing in the body of the act without specific mention thereof in the title for the prosecution of proceedings to prevent interference with or diminution of the natural flow of any stream or subterranean water supply used or useful for any purpose of the district or a common benefit to the lands within the district or its inhabitants. One of the express purposes of the act is to conserve water for future use and to preserve water and water rights. The fact that the district as such does not assert title in itself to any of such rights is of no consequence, if it has the power to proceed in a representative capacity to protect the rights of all of the landowners and other users of water in the district. And this power the district unquestionably possesses not only under the clear provisions of the act but under well-recognized principles of equity jurisprudence.

[3, 4] Conceding properly, as the defendant does, that an action would lie on behalf of each landowner in the district to protect his individual right, it would necessarily follow that under section 382 of the Code of Civil Procedure one might sue for the benefit of all. See Miller v. Bay Cities Water Co., 157 Cal. 256, 288, 107 P. 115 [27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 772]. It is true that section 367 of the same code provides that every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest but the same section excepts actions prosecuted as provided in section 369 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The last section referred to provides that a person expressly authorized by statute may sue without joining with him the persons for whose benefit the action is prosecuted. The county water district act expressly authorizes the present action and any final determination therein would necessarily bind the parties for whose benefit it is prosecuted. Furthermore, no good reason has been suggested why, under the authority of the statute, the landowners and other water users in the district may not set up such a governmental agency to act in a representative capacity in their behalf. In our opinion they have done so and having done so they will necessarily be bound by the result of the litigation.

[5] It is further contended by the respondent that by the terms of the water district act and the action of the district in prosecuting this cause, he is deprived of the equal protection of the law. Particularly the point is that as a landowner in the district he is subject to taxes or assessments levied by the district a portion of the revenue from which is devoted to the costs of prosecuting this action against him. It is argued that the respondent is thus required to assist in furnishing funds to maintain and prosecute an action against himself in which, it is claimed, no right of the district as such is involved. Assuming, as we have held, that the district has legal authority to prosecute the action, the further answer to the contention would seem to be that a landowner or taxpayer within such a public corporation should not be permitted to defeat or abate an action against himself for an alleged invasion of a right common to all of the landowners and water users in the district merely because costs of the litigation are borne from a fund made up of taxes including his own contribution thereto. To hold that a public corporation might not sue one of its taxpayers and pay the costs of the litigation out of tax moneys would be novel indeed. Reduced to the lowest terms, such is the contention, and its statement suggests it own answer.

From the nature of the problems presented on this appeal it is obvious that we are not dealing with the merits of the controversy, but only holding that the complaint states a cause of action, and that the plaintiff has legal capacity to sue, and that there is no defect in parties plaintiff.

Sufficient has been said to dispose of the appeal without a discussion of other points argued by counsel.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; PRESTON, J.; SEAWELL, J.

CURTIS, J. I dissent from the foregoing opinion. The act under which the appellant was organized (section 12, subd. 6), in so far as it purports to authorize the organization of a district with power "to commence, maintain, intervene in and compromise, in the name of the district, and to assume the costs of any action or proceeding involving or affecting the ownership or use of waters or water rights within the district, used or useful for any purpose of the district or a benefit to any land situated therein," is unconstitutional for the reason that the title of the act does not mention this grant of power. Section 12, subd. 6, of the act purporting to invest the district with this power was amended in 1923, and by said amendment it was sought to enlarge the powers of the district, given by the original act, to sue on behalf of the landowners and water users in the district. But in the amendatory act no mention or reference is made in its title to such power or to the enlarged powers which it was sought by said amendment to confer upon said district. The titles to each the original and amendatory act are set forth in the majority opinion, and I submit that no one reading them would have any notice or intimation that a water district of the character, which the appellant claims to be, and with the broad and unusual powers with which the enactments attempt to invest said district, was contemplated or provided for in the enactments themselves.

Furthermore, from a reading of the act and the amendment thereto, as a whole, conceding the legislation to be constitutional, it seems clear that its only purpose was to enable persons residing within a compact territory, who were the owners of water rights used therein, and who desired to act in unison in protecting them, to form themselves into a district for such purpose, but it was not the intention of the act as originally passed or as subsequently amended to set up a legal entity with power to settle, compromise and litigate the several rights of said owners between themselves. This is what is being attempted in the present action. The lower owners are complaining of those residing in the upper part of the district, and owning land therein, that the latter are taking or attempting to take water belonging to the former. I agree with the views of Mr. Justice Plummer, expressed by him in an opinion in this same action, when the same was before the District Court of Appeal, in which he said:

"It certainly cannot be held that it was the intent of the Legislature to create a legal entity which might play the part of a superplaintiff or a superdefendant in settlement of mere private rights, or that such a superplaintiff or superdefendant should exercise the prerogative of settling, compromising, or adjusting mere private disputes. The different provisions of the subdivision of the section referred to must all go back and relate to the purposes for which water districts may be created, and when we go back to the title of the act and read therefrom the purpose or purposes, we find that it is for the acquisition of water rights, for the construction of water works, and for the distribution and sale of water by said districts, which includes, of course, the management of the machinery of the corporation. There is not a single intimation in the title that the Legislature had in view the creation of a legal entity which might appear either as plaintiff or defendant in disputes over private water rights between private individuals, concerning water which might be used within the territorial limits of a water district in which the district, as a district, had neither ownership nor right of possession nor any legal right to the control thereof. If the contention of the appellant is correct, that the district is a legal entity authorized to appear in actions involving only private rights, the question is immediately presented, On which side should the district appear? Should it appear as plaintiff, or should it appear as defendant? If it has a right to advance the costs of such an action, should it finance the plaintiff's side of the case, or should it finance the defendant's? In any of these situations, if the district has a right to create itself a party, either as plaintiff or defendant, in the settlement of mere private rights, then the Legislature has created a corporation with power within itself to determine the extent of the private rights of individuals in and to property in which the corporation known as the district has absolutely no ownership or pecuniary interest whatever."

SAWYER v. SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA GAS CO. (L. A. 8326.)★

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 31, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 28, 1929.

1. Gas 🔑16—Gas companies cannot turn on meters connecting with uncapped pipes without incurring liability for injuries, though ordered to turn on gas.

Gas company, though not under duty to inspect house pipes after service has been established, and consequently not liable for injuries from escape of gas through defective house pipes, may not necessarily turn on meters through which gas passes into uncapped house pipes without incurring liability for injury to person or property caused thereby, even though it has been ordered by occupant of building to turn on gas.

2. Gas 🔑17—Gas company must investigate to determine that pipes are closed when turning on meters.

Gas company is under duty to make some inquiry or investigation to satisfy itself that all openings in house pipes are closed at time it turns on its meters.

3. Gas 🔑17—Gas company's duty to furnish gas indiscriminately does not require turning on of meter without assurance that no injury will result.

Obligation imposed by law on gas company, as public utility, to serve all who apply to it for gas without discrimination, does not command it to install or turn on meters without some assurance that safety of lives and property of those residing in or coming on premises will not be imperiled thereby.

4. Gas 🔑17—Plumbing inspector's certificate approving plumbing, but not certifying pipes were capped, did not free gas company from duty of ascertaining that pipes were capped before turning on meters.

Certificate of plumbing inspector approving plumbing, but not purporting to certify that all openings or pipes were capped, held not sufficient to free gas company from duty to make reasonably certain that all pipes were capped before turning on its meters, where it could be reasonably assumed that gas company knew of inspector's custom to leave one pipe uncapped to test plumbing and that such pipe was not capped by inspector.

5. Gas 🔑20(4)—Gas company's negligence in turning on meter connected with uncapped pipe injuring customer in store may raise question for jury.

In action for injuries to customer in store caused by explosion of gas which had escaped from uncapped pipe, question for jury may arise as to negligence of gas company which turns on meter connected with uncapped pipe.

6. Gas 🔑20(4)—Direction by owner or tenant to install meter connecting with uncapped pipe does not, as matter of law, relieve gas company from negligence causing explosion injuring third person.

Gas company is not, as matter of law, relieved of charge of negligence in installing meter connecting with uncapped house pipe, because owner or tenant of premises on which third person receives injuries by gas explosion has directed gas company to install meter.

7. Gas 🔑20(4)—That meter connecting with uncapped pipe, through which gas escaped, was turned on for curiosity or maliciously, held not shown as matter of law.

In action for injuries to customer on premises caused by explosion of gas escaping from uncapped pipe, evidence that meter might have been turned on inadvertently as result of confusion as to which of several meters served various shops, and that gas company had not prohibited patrons to turn on meter, did not show as matter of law that employé of another installing stove turned on meter from motives of curiosity or malicious desire to cause injuries.

8. Evidence 🔑21—Court may judicially notice gas company's custom of permitting others than own employés to turn on or shut meters.

In action for damages for personal injuries to customer in store caused by explosion of gas escaping from uncapped pipe, court may take judicial notice of customs of gas companies to permit their meters to be turned on and off by other persons than own employés as needs of patrons may demand.

9. Gas 🔑20(4)—Action for injuries by explosion of gas from uncapped pipe held for jury under evidence showing gas company could have determined danger when installing meter.

In action for personal injuries to customer in store caused by explosion of gas which escaped from uncapped pipe, evidence that gas company could have known that one of several meters for store on which plaintiff was injured had not been used for many months, and that leakage of gas through uncapped pipe could have been discovered by turning on meter for moment when it was set, and that accident might happen by act of third person in turning meter on, persented issue of fact for jury.

10. Gas ⚷20(2)—Evidence of feasibility of locking meter held relevant to gas company's liability for explosion by gas from uncapped pipe.

In action for injuries to customer in store caused by explosion of gas escaping from uncapped pipe, evidence as to feasibility of placing lock or other device on gas meter, to prevent its being turned on by others than gas company, was relevant to liability of company and should have been admitted.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by Fred H. Sawyer against the Southern California Gas Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Rehearing denied: WASTE, C. J., and SHENK and PRESTON, JJ., dissenting.

Superseding opinion in 261 P. 1025.

Earle M. Daniels and Julius V. Patrosso, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

O'Melveny, Millikin & Tuller and Thomas J. Reynolds, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J. Plaintiff, Fred H. Sawyer, appeals from a judgment of nonsuit entered in favor of defendant, Southern California Gas Company, in an action brought by him to recover damages for personal injuries sustained from an explosion of illuminating gas. Defendant is a public utility corporation supplying gas for fuel and illuminating purposes in the southern section of this state, including the city of Glendale, county of Los Angeles.

The explosion occurred on December 3, 1922, in a building containing four stores in said city of Glendale. One of the storerooms was occupied by a bakery, another by a meat market, the third by a confectionery and cigar store, and the fourth by an automobile accessories shop conducted by one Hooper, in connection with an automobile service and filling station maintained by him on adjoining premises. The building was completed during March, 1922, and before that time had been piped for gas. Four meters to register the amount of gas consumed by the respective tenants of the four stores had been ordered installed by the owner of the building in January, 1922, while it was being constructed, and were thereafter placed by defendant gas company in the bakery shop beneath the bakery display window at the front of said shop. The three meters serving the bakery, meat market, and cigar and confectionery store had been turned on to supply gas for appliances used in said stores. Hooper had occupied the room used by him as an accessories shop from the time the building had been completed. Said room contained no appliances requiring gas, and no gas had ever been conducted through the meter connecting with said room until the day of the explosion. No order to turn on said meter had ever been given to the defendant company, and said company had at no time directed or authorized anyone to turn it on.

On the day of the accident resulting in injuries to plaintiff, which was Sunday, a gas oven used by Fawkes, the baker, was removed, and a new gas oven, purchased by Fawkes from one Steen, was placed in the rear room of the bakery. Before the old stove was disconnected and moved, the meter supplying gas to the bakery was shut off. Fawkes testified that he himself turned off said gas meter soon after the arrival of Woodruff and Redfern, employés of Steen who had been sent to remove the old oven and install the new one. Said employés arrived soon after 9 o'clock in the morning. Fawkes testified that he knew at all times which was his own meter and that on said day he touched none of the four meters except his own. He further stated that he was in his shop throughout the day and that the only person who went near the meters on said day besides himself was Geisler, an employé of Steen. In some way the meter for the accessories shop was turned on, with the result that gas escaped into said shop through an uncapped house pipe leading from said meter to the accessories shop, ignited, and exploded about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, causing injuries to plaintiff, a customer, and the death of Selby T. Brengle, an employé of Hooper. The accessories shop meter, through which no gas had passed prior to the day of the accident, registered a flow of 4,500 cubic feet after the explosion. Plaintiff offered evidence proving that said pipe in the accessories shop was uncapped when defendant company installed the meter and had remained uncapped to the date of the explosion. The company made no inspection to detect the uncapped pipe when the meter was installed.

Not only was the bakery meter shut off and the accessories shop meter turned on, but there is evidence that the proprietor of the cigar and confectionery store came into the bakery and complained that the supply of gas in his premises had been cut off. Fawkes testified that he saw Geisler kneeling in front of the meters after he had shut off his own meter, and that he later told Geisler to turn on the meter for the cigar and confectionery store after complaint had been made of its having been turned off. Plaintiff herein brought a separate action against Steen, Woodruff, Redfern, and Geisler, which was consolidated for trial with the action herein. In said action against Steen et al., the court granted nonsuits in favor of Woodruff and Redfern, and the jury returned a verdict in favor of Steen and against Geisler for $10,000 damages. The judgment in said action, affirmed by the District Court of Appeal, Sawyer v. Steen et al., 261 P. 1025, has now become final. In returning the verdict against Geisler the jury impliedly found that it was he who turned on the meter serving the accessories shop.

Plaintiff contends that the court erred in taking from the jury the case against defendant gas company for the reason that the evidence supports the conclusion that said company was negligent in failing to ascertain at the time it installed the meter whether or not the gas pipe was properly capped, and also in not guarding against the possibility of its meter being turned on by placing thereon a lock or other mechanical device. Defendant gas company contends that no duty rested upon it to inspect the pipes or to lock the meter at the time of installation, and asserts that in any event the proximate cause of the accident was not set in motion by any omission on its part in the respects urged, but that the intervening wrongful or negligent act of a third person who turned on the meter was the proximate cause of the explosion.

The meters were inclosed in the space beneath the bakery display window. They were accessible by means of a board swung on hinges, which served as a door. The installation of the meters consisted in connecting them with the gas mains of the company and the house pipes within the building, which were the property of the owner thereof, in such a manner that when the meter was turned on gas would pass from the main through the meter and into the house pipes for consumption. A wrench or other similar tool was required to turn on the gas.

Respondent's position is that a gas company, even though it turns on a meter connecting with an uncapped house pipe pursuant to the direction of an occupant of a building, cannot be held liable for the escape and explosion of gas which may thereafter ensue, and hence it cannot be held liable where, as in the instant case, it has merely installed the meter pursuant to orders of the owner of the building, and left it turned off, and it has subsequently been turned on by some person having no connection with the gas company.

It is not in all cases a sufficient answer to a claim of liability against a gas company that the cause of the escape and explosion of gas is to be found in the condition of the house pipes, which the gas company does not own or control. There are well-considered cases of other jurisdictions to the effect that a gas company may be liable where it either directs its employés to turn on a gas meter, or authorizes the person applying for gas to turn it on, and an explosion occurs by reason of an escape of gas through a house pipe connected with the meter which was uncapped or severed at the time the meter was turned on. Christo v. Macon Gas Co., 18 Ga. App. 454, 89 S. E. 532; Schmeer v. Gas Light Co., 147 N. Y. 529, 42 N. E. 202, 30 L. R. A. 653; Hayes v. Cohoes Gas Light Co., 183 App. Div. 182, 170 N. Y. S. 312; Swayzee v. City of Augusta, 113 Kan. 658, 216 P. 265; Hebert v. Baton Rouge Electric Co., 150 La. 957, 91 So. 406, 25 A. L. R. 245.

[1, 2] While it is generally held that there is no duty on the part of a gas company to inspect house pipes after service has once been established, and consequently no liability for injuries resulting from an escape of gas through house pipes which become defective in the absence of notice of a leak in the house pipes or other special circumstances creating a duty to cut off its supply of gas, such as were present in Merrill v. Los Angeles Gas & Electric Co., 158 Cal. 499, 111 P. 534, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 559, 139 Am. St. Rep. 134, it does not follow that a gas company may turn on meters through which gas passes into uncapped house pipes without incurring liability for injuries to persons or property caused thereby, even though it has been ordered by an occupant of the building to turn on the gas supply. Gas companies, as manufacturers and distributors of a highly explosive and inflammable substance, possess technical knowledge of the dangers to be guarded against in handling or installing gas appliances for illuminating and commercial purposes far beyond the knowledge possessed by the average person. It would appear to be the duty of a gas company to make some inquiry or investigation to satisfy itself that all openings in the house pipes are closed at the time it turns on its meters. H. P. Courtney, foreman of the defendant gas company testified that when a meter is turned on a dial registers the slightest leakage. He further testified that it was customary upon turning on meters to watch this dial for five minutes to detect any leakage, and that if a leak was observed the meter was immediately turned off. It is not imposing an obligation of undue hardship upon gas companies to require them to make use of the means readily available to them to ascertain that all pipes connected with a meter to be turned on are capped.

[3, 4] The obligation imposed by law upon a gas company as a public utility to serve all who apply to it for gas without discrimination does not command it to install or turn on meters without some assurance that the safety of the lives and property of those residing in or coming upon the premises will not be imperiled thereby. Nor would a certificate such as that given by the plumbing inspector of the city of Glendale, in the instant case, free a gas company from what we conceive to be its duty to make reasonably certain that all pipes are capped before turning on its meters. Said plumbing inspector testified that meters were not to be set until his "O. K." had been given.

He further testified that it was customary to leave one pipe uncapped in order that he might test the strength of the piping, and that said uncapped pipe would not be capped by him. It is reasonable to assume that the gas company had knowledge of this custom. The certificate of the plumbing inspector approving the plumbing did not purport to certify that all openings or pipes were capped.

[5] Having concluded that a question for the jury may arise as to the negligence of a gas company which turns on a meter connected with an uncapped house pipe, we pass now to a consideration of the instant case, where the act of the gas company did not consist in turning on the meter, but in "setting" it upon the order of the owner of the building given before the completion thereof and the commencement of the tenancy of Hooper, and thus placing it within the power of others to turn on said meter and cause gas to flow into the premises of Hooper, who had not ordered a supply of gas.

[6] In the several cases from other jurisdictions cited above, except Hebert v. Baton Rouge Electric Co., 150 La. 957, 91 So. 406, 25 A. L. R. 245, as supporting the doctrine that a gas company may be held liable where it turns on a meter connecting with uncapped or severed house pipes upon the order of an occupant of the said building, gas passed into the apartment of a tenant who had not applied for it, through a pipe in his apartment which was uncapped or severed at the time the meter was turned on upon the application of the tenant of another apartment supplied by the same meter. In said cases the courts placed some emphasis on the circumstance that the person injured was not a tenant who had applied for gas, and stated that a gas company, before turning on gas or permitting it to be turned on for the benefit of a tenant in an apartment house who has applied for it, must use reasonable precautions to ascertain that gas will not escape through uncapped or broken pipes in the apartment of tenants who have not applied for it, implying that a distinction as to the liability of a gas company might be made between cases where the tenant requesting a supply of gas is injured and cases involving injuries to an occupant of another apartment. In the instant case the gas company had neither turned on the meter itself nor authorized any other person to turn it on. It had, however, upon the direction of Turner, the owner of the building, installed the meter, and thus placed it within the power of another to turn it on and cause gas to flow into the premises of a tenant who had not directed that the gas supply be turned on. While there might be grounds for contending that if Turner, who ordered the meter installed when the pipe was uncapped, had been injured, he would be guilty of contributory negligence barring recovery, a question we need not here decide, his negligence or the negligence of Hooper, the tenant, if there were any negligence on his part, would not affect plaintiff, a stranger, who went upon the premises as a customer of the service station maintained by Hooper. We are of the view that a gas company is not, as a matter of law, relieved of the charge of negligence in installing a meter connecting with an uncapped house pipe because the owner or tenant of the premises upon which a third person receives injuries has directed the gas company to install the meter.

In its brief respondent company sets forth at length a quotation from Hale v. Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co., 42 Cal. App. 55, 183 P. 280, which we regard as containing a proper statement of the law as to the liability of a defendant for injuries which would not have ensued but for intervening acts of a third person. A portion of said quotation is as follows: "The rule, as we understand it, applicable to such cases, is that where the original negligence of a defendant is followed by an independent act of a third person which results in a direct injury to a plaintiff, the negligence of such defendant may, nevertheless, constitute the proximate cause thereof if, in the ordinary and natural course of events, the defendant should have known the intervening act was likely to happen; but if the intervening act constituting the immediate cause of the injury was one which it was not incumbent upon the defendant to have anticipated as reasonably likely to happen, then, since the chain of causation is broken, he owes no duty to the plaintiff to anticipate such further acts, and the original negligence cannot be said to be the proximate cause of the final injury."

Other cases to the same effect are Katz v. Helbing (Cal. Sup.) 271 P. 1062; Merrill v. Los Angeles Gas & Electric Co., 158 Cal. 499, 111 P. 534, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 559, 139 Am. St. Rep. 134; Pastene v. Adams, 49 Cal. 87; Feeney v. Standard Oil Co., 58 Cal. App. 587, 209 P. 85; Louisville Gas Co., v. Gutenkuntz, 82 Ky. 432; Chisholm v. Atlanta Gas Light Co., 57 Ga. 29.

[7, 8] It does not appear, as a matter of law, that Geisler, against whom the jury returned a verdict in the action against Steen and others, consolidated for trial with the present action, acted either from motives of idle curiosity or a malicious desire to cause injuries to lives or property. It is highly probable that the accessories shop meter was turned on inadvertently as the result of a confusion as to which of the several meters served the different shops. The gas company had not issued any rule prohibiting its patrons from turning on and off the supply of gas at the meter after the original establishment of the service. We may take judicial notice of the custom of gas companies to permit their meters to be turned on and off by other persons than their own employés as the needs of patrons may demand. In fact, the terms and rules of the gas company, printed on the reverse side of the applications for service signed by Turner, the owner of the building, which were introduced in evidence, contain the following provision: "No light shall be taken near an escape of gas, and as an additional precaution the gas must be shut off at the stopcock whenever a leak is discovered. * * *" (Italics supplied.)

[9] It might prove exceedingly dangerous if meters were not accessible and so constructed that they could be turned off without securing the services of the gas company. This is not a case where a single meter is installed in a building, but of several meters installed in one place. The accessories shop meter was installed some time after the other three meters, and after one or more of said meters had been turned on. It would be apparent, from the dials on said meters registering the flow of gas, to the employés of the gas company installing the accessories shop meter and thereafter inspecting the meters, that said other meter or meters were turned on, and the records of the company would show that for a period of about eight months no use had been made of said accessories shop meter. In the exercise of due care, the jury might have concluded that it should have occurred to the employés of the gas company, a dealer for profit in a dangerous commodity, that occasions might arise when other tenants would wish their meters turned off and on again and in so doing persons less familiar with the handling of gas and gas appliances than the agents of the company might become confused as to which of the meters served the several shops. By turning on the accessories shop meter for but a moment at the time it was set, the leakage of gas through the uncapped house pipe would have been apparent. Prudence required that it be determined whether there was an uncapped pipe before the meter was left connected with the gas mains and house pipes.

The probability of an accident happening through the acts of a third person in the manner in which it did happen, in the circumstances of the case, presented an issue of fact that may well have been submitted to the jury.

[10] Evidence excluded by the court below as to the feasibility of placing a lock or other device upon the accessories shop meter to prevent its being turned on by others than the gas company was relevant to the liability of the said company and should have been admitted.

BRENGLE et al. v. SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA GAS CO. (L. A. 8661.)★

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 31, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 28, 1929.

Gas ⚷20(2)—Gas meter is presumed to have been installed on proper order, persons injured by explosion having burden of proving contrary.

In action for injuries caused by explosion of gas escaping from uncapped pipe when meter was turned on in absence of affirmative evidence that installation of meter was not authorized, it must be presumed that meter was installed on order of proper person, since burden of proving meter was installed without order would be on plaintiffs, suing for injuries, who were required to prove all facts necessary to establish liability.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Victor R. McLucas, Judge.

Action by Helen L. Brengle and others against the Southern California Gas Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Rehearing denied: WASTE, C. J., and SHENK and PRESTON, JJ., dissenting.

Superseding opinion in 261 P. 1023.

Jennings & Belcher, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Vernon Brydolf, of Pasadena, and O'Melveny, Millikin, Tuller & Macneil, James C. Sheppard, Jr., and Thos. J. Reynolds, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J. This action arose out of the same explosion of illuminating gas as that involved in Sawyer v. Southern California Gas Company (L. A. 8326) 274 P. 544, this day decided. Plaintiffs herein are the surviving wife and minor daughter, respectively, of Selby T. Brengle, deceased, who died from injuries received in said explosion, and the compensation insurance carrier of Hooper, the owner of the accessories shop in which the explosion took place. Brengle was an employé of Hooper. The plaintiff insurance company has paid the death benefit provided for in the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended) to said surviving wife and minor daughter of Brengle.

A nonsuit in favor of the Southern California Gas Company was granted in the case herein, as in the Sawyer Case, and a judgment of dismissal entered thereon. The evidence is substantially similar in the two cases, except that it was not shown in the instant case that the four meters were installed pursuant to orders which Turner, the owner of the building, had given to the gas company before the completion of said building. It was shown herein that the meter connecting with the accessories shop was not ordered turned on, but it was not affirmatively shown that the installation was made without a proper order. In the absence of affirmative evidence showing that the installation of the accessories shop meter was not authorized, it must be presumed that said meter was installed upon the order of a proper person, since the burden of proof to establish that the meter was installed without an order would be upon plaintiffs, who were required to prove all facts necessary to establish liability. However, for the reasons stated in the Sawyer Case, the evidence presented a question for the jury as to the liability of the gas company, notwithstanding the fact that the installation of the meter supplying the accessories shop had been ordered by the owner of the building.

Judgment reversed.

GINSBERG TILE CO. v. FARAONE et al.★

(Civ. 5870.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 31, 1929.

Rehearing Granted March 1, 1929.

1. Partnership 🔑197—Statute expressly permitting partnership to be sued in firm name held to manifest intent to prohibit such practice with partnership as plaintiff (Code Civ. Proc. § 388).

Code Civ. Proc. § 388, by expressly permitting a copartnership to be sued in its firm name, manifests legislative intention to prohibit such practice, where copartnership is the plaintiff.

2. Partnership 🔑197—Defendants must object to suit by partners in partnership name at very outset, or they waive objection.

If partners sue in their partnership name, defendants must interpose their objection at the very outset, or they waive it.

3. Parties 🔑76(7)—Demurrer to complaint in partnership name on ground plaintiffs had not legal capacity to sue, held to sufficiently "specify grounds" (Code Civ. Proc. § 431).

Demurrer by defendants to complaint in action by partners in partnership name, and motion to dismiss, on sole ground that plaintiff had not legal capacity to sue, held a sufficient, distinct specification of the ground on which objection was taken, within Code Civ. Proc. § 431, and there was no waiver of the defect by failure to demur, on ground of defect or nonjoinder of parties plaintiff.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by the Ginsberg Tile Company (a copartnership) against Salvatore Faraone and others. From an order granting defendants' motion to dismiss the action, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Russell W. Cantrell, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Devoto, Richardson & Devoto, of San Francisco, for respondents.

GOODELL, Justice pro tem. This appeal was taken on the judgment roll alone from an order granting the motion of the respondents to dismiss. The action was commenced in the name "Ginsberg Tile Company, a copartnership, plaintiff," and the appeal was taken in the same name. The facts are that on May 25, 1926, a complaint was filed by "Ginsberg Tile Company, a copartnership," against Salvatore Faraone and Jennie Faraone, his wife, defendants, alleging that certain work had been done by the plaintiff upon the improved real property of the defendants, under an agreement between them whereby plaintiff was to be paid $593.75 for his work, which amount was unpaid, and that a claim of lien had been filed for record on February 24, 1926. The complaint prayed for judgment for $593.75 and for the foreclosure of the lien. There was no allegation in the complaint respecting the copartnership named in the caption, or showing who were its constituent members.

The defendants demurred upon the sole ground that plaintiff had no legal capacity to sue, and they moved to dismiss upon the same ground. Before the demurrer and motion were heard, an amended complaint was filed in the name of the same "plaintiff," and with two personal defendants (G. M. Sourich and T. A. Sourich) and four fictitious defendants added, and containing an allegation that plaintiff Ginsberg Tile Company was at all times mentioned a copartnership composed of H. Ginsberg and S. Ginsberg, and that they had complied with the provisions of sections 2466 and 2468 of the Civil Code. The amended complaint amplified in many important respects the rather sketchy averments of the original pleading, added allegations not found in the original, and changed the theory of the action from the one based upon a contract made directly with Faraone and wife to one based upon a subcontract between plaintiff and G. M. Sourich and T. A. Sourich, original contractors, for work upon property owned by the Faraones.

The respondents promptly demurred to the the amended complaint again upon the ground of plaintiff's lack of capacity to sue, and again moved to dismiss upon the same ground, and moved to strike the amended complaint from the files upon the ground that it changed the cause of action originally set forth. The trial court granted the motion to dismiss, but took no action upon the demurrer or motion to strike. "The principal and substantial question presented for decision," to adopt the appellant's own statement of it, "is whether the filing of a complaint by a copartnership in its firm name, instead of having the individual names of the copartners appear in the caption thereof, is such a fatal defect as to render the action a nullity, legally justifying its dismissal on this ground, or whether such a defect is merely an irregularity, which may be taken advantage of by special demurrer, for nonjoinder of parties plaintiff, and, if no objection is thus specifically taken to the complaint, the defect is waived."

Bliss, in his work on Code Pleading (3d Ed.) at section 145, says: "The full names of both plaintiffs and defendants should be given as plaintiffs and as defendants—not, as at common law and in equity, by describing them in the body of the pleading, but in the form of a title to the cause, and they may be afterwards referred to, without naming them, as 'the plaintiff' or 'the defendant.' In an action by or against a partnership, the full names of all the partners must be stated."

[1] Section 388 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that, "when two or more persons, associated in any business, transact such business under a common name, whether it comprises the names of such persons or not, the associates may be sued by such common name. * * *" The Legislature, as early as 1854, thus modified the common-law rule which permits partners neither to sue nor be sued in their partnership name. But it will be noted that the rule was relaxed with respect to defendants only. Had the Legislature intended to authorize or sanction a procedure such as that attempted here, obviously it would have been necessary simply to have provided that "the associates may sue or be sued by such common name." On settled and familiar principles, it is clear that by expressly permitting such practice in the case of defendants the Legislature manifested an intention to prohibit it in the case of plaintiffs.

[2, 3] "While a copartnership acting under a fictitious name may be sued in that name * * * the rule governing its prosecution of an action is that the full names of all the partners must be stated." Holden v. Mensinger, 175 Cal. 300, 165 P. 950. But it is settled that, if plaintiffs do sue in their partnership name, the defendants must interpose their objection at the very outset or they waive it (Agricultural Extension Club v. Hirsch, 39 Cal. App. 433, 179 P. 430, and Gilman v. Cosgrove, 22 Cal. 356), and it is claimed that in the instant case there has been such waiver.

The basis for this assertion of waiver is not, that the defendants made no preliminary objection at all, but that they put it on the wrong ground. The defendants promptly demurred to both complaints, and twice moved to dismiss, upon the sole ground that the plaintiff had not legal capacity to sue. The appellant contends that this was ineffective for two reasons: "First, because the demurrers did not "distinctly specify the grounds" upon which the objection was taken (Code Civ. Proc. § 431); and, second, because the demurrers should have been upon the ground of "a defect or misjoinder of parties plaintiff." It is difficult to find any real or substantial difference between the ground which was specified and that now urged as the only proper one. When it is borne in mind that waiver presupposes voluntary abandonment, and that the respondents asserted their point without any delay at all, the waiver argument loses its force.

As between the two grounds, there is authority both ways. In the Gilman Case, supra, where the defendants answered without having first objected to the suit in the firm name, it was held that they had waived the objection and "should have demurred to the complaint for a defect of parties." On the other hand, in the Agricultural Extension Club Case, supra, where in similar circumstances the defendants likewise answered, it is said that "the defect is one which may be taken advantage of upon the plea that the plaintiff has not legal capacity to sue." Dicta to the same effect are indeed found in two cases relied upon by the appellant. Thus in Los Angeles Ry. Co. v. Davis, 146 Cal. 179, 79 P. 865, 106 Am. St. Rep. 20, the court said that "the point that plaintiff was not a corporation goes only to its capacity to maintain an action, * * * and therefore it could be raised by demurrer to the complaint only under subdivision 2 of section 430, * * * which provides as a cause of demurrer 'that plaintiff has not legal capacity to sue.' * * *" And so in Fruit Cleaning Co. v. Fresno Home Packing Co. (C. C.) 94 F. 845, 847, it is said: "Nor is it a question of misjoinder or nonjoinder of parties plaintiff, but it is the legal question whether there is an actual party plaintiff in the case."

H. Ginsberg and S. Ginsberg undoubtedly had legal capacity to sue. And, had they incorporated their business, the corporation certainly would have had legal capacity to sue. But the suit was brought in the name of neither a natural nor an artificial person. The plaintiff admittedly did that which at common law cannot be done at all, and that which a plaintiff in this state cannot do.

As we see it, the ground that plaintiff had not legal capacity to sue was no less appropriate than the ground of defect or nonjoinder. It called the attention of the pleader directly and pointedly to the fact that he was not suing in the name of a legal entity at all; that he was using as a so-called plaintiff a mere name, instead of suing in the names of natural persons who happened to use such name or symbol in transacting their business. The bare statement of the ground in the demurrer and motion, in the statutory language, was itself a "distinct specification of the ground," and could not fail to rivet the attention of counsel upon the fact that he had no plaintiff before the court. (Parenthetically it should be said that counsel who now prosecutes this appeal was not in the case when these pleadings were drawn.) On the other hand, a demurrer for nonjoinder would concede that the plaintiff named was itself proper enough, but would suggest that other parties should be joined as plaintiffs, which was not, by any means, what the respondents wanted to point out. What they sought to do was to point out that there was no plaintiff at all before the court, and we think their demurrer and motion were designed fairly and effectively to accomplish this.

Counsel for appellant states the question for decision as follows: "May a complaint, filed by a copartnership in its firm name, when met by a plea of abatement, be amended?" Whether or not as a general rule a complaint filed in the name of no legal entity at all may be amended so as to insert the names of proper plaintiffs, need not be decided. The only question before us is whether the action of the trial court in dismissing this action was correct, after two demurrers and two motions had called the defect to counsel's attention. There is nothing in the record to show that an application to amend was made in the lower court, or that the question of amendment was discussed therein. Counsel for appellant does not even now seek to amend. He asks for a reversal "with instructions to the lower court to overrule the demurrer interposed to the amended complaint, with leave to the defendants to answer." Thus he stands upon the technical ground discussed above, namely, that by demurring and moving on one ground, and not on the other, the defendants waived the admitted defect and irregularity.

From the framework of both complaints it is apparent that the theory of the pleader was that a partnership, as such, is a legal entity, and, as in the case of a corporation or natural person, may sue and be sued, and not that the individuals making up the partnership are the parties plaintiff, irrespective of the name under which they operate.

The appellant contends that it is not indispensable that the copartnership relation of the plaintiffs be shown in the caption so long as, in the body of the complaint, such partnership relation is specifically averred. This, of course, is true, but it does not meet the difficulty here. The cases of Wise et al. v. Williams, 72 Cal. 544, 14 P. 204, and Fruit Cleaning Co. v. Fresno Home Packing Co. (C. C.) 94 F. 845, are cited, but neither is in point. In the first, John H. Wise and Thomas Denigan were plaintiffs, and were so named in the caption. In the caption, however, they were not described as copartners. The body of the complaint contained the allegation that they were copartners doing business under the firm name of Christy and Wise. All that the case holds is that language descriptive of the partnership relation need not be contained in the caption (the real parties, natural persons, being named therein), so long as the allegations in the body of the complaint show such relationship. The cases would be parallel if in the case at bar H. Ginsberg and S. Ginsberg appeared as plaintiffs. They do not so appear, either in the caption or in the body of the complaint. The federal case falls into the class of the Gilman and Agricultural Extension Club Cases, supra, for the reason that objection to the defect there was not taken until seven months after a replication had been filed, at which time the respondents sought to file an amended answer setting up the defect. Moreover, the names of the parties were set out in the bill of complaint sufficiently to conform to the equity rule of the federal courts.

It is conceded by the appellant "that, under the old common law, an action brought in the name of an unincorporated association or partnership is, in strictness, not a misnomer of a party plaintiff, but rather the omission of a party plaintiff, rendering the action a nullity." (Italics ours.) But counsel adds that "this harsh doctrine, according to the trend of present-day authority, even in England, has been moderated," etc.

With respect to the common-law rule the Supreme Court, in the case of Holden v. Mensinger, 175 Cal. 300, 165 P. 950, says: " 'Partners cannot, at common law, sue or be sued by their partnership names, but by statute in some of the states, as in Ohio, Iowa, etc., this is allowed, and so far partnerships are treated as corporations. Elsewhere their demands are joint and personal, and must be enforced by them as individuals.' Bliss on Code Pleading, § 145; Williams v. Southern Pac. R. R. Co., 110 Cal. 457, 42 P. 974; Clement v. British-American Assur. Co., 141 Mass. 303, 5 N. E. 847."

In California the Legislature, with power to moderate the common-law rule to the fullest extent, has relaxed it only in part. Code Civ. Proc. § 388. The courts, in the cases to which we have referred, have moderated it further by holding that, unless raised at the threshold, the objection is waived. But the only implication from those cases is that, if the objection is interposed in a timely and proper manner, it is perfectly good. The objection here certainly was timely, and we are satisfied that the manner of asserting it was proper.

Counsel for appellant discusses at some length the procedural question; i. e., whether a motion to dismiss is recognized in a case such as this. However, he concedes that the effect of the granting of the motion to dismiss was the same as the sustaining of a demurrer without leave to amend, so no purpose would be served by any extended consideration of the point. The views herein expressed render unnecessary a discussion of the other points raised in the briefs on the appeal itself.

The respondents, consistently with their position in the lower court that the "plaintiff" had no legal capacity to sue, have moved to dismiss this appeal upon the ground that the "appellant" cannot, for the same reason, prosecute an appeal. No action, however, need be taken on the motion to dismiss.

The order of the lower court is affirmed.

PELLISSIER v. TITLE GUARANTEE & TRUST CO. et al. (Civ. 3630.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 28, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 27, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court March 28, 1929.

1. Appeal and error 🔑1011(1)—Trial court's findings on conflicting evidence were conclusive, where supported by evidence.

Trial court's findings of facts on conflicting evidence were conclusive, where they were supported by the evidence.

2. Judgment 🔑580—Where appeal was still pending from judgment, such judgment could not be pleaded as bar to subsequent action (Code Civ. Proc. § 1049).

Where appeal had been taken from judgment, and action was still pending and undetermined, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1049, at time of instant action, such judgment could not be pleaded as bar to instant action.

3. Abatement and revival 🔑16—Party in whose favor judgment appealed from was rendered, may plead prior action in abatement, and lay foundation for securing continuance until final determination of first action.

Party, in whose favor prior judgment, from which appeal has been taken, has been rendered, may, in subsequent action, plead prior action in abatement, and lay foundation for securing continuance of trial of second action until final determination of first.

4. Deeds 🔑54—Deed must be delivered to effectuate passing of title.

Delivery of a deed must be made to effectuate passing of title from grantor to grantee, and, if delivery is wanting, the deed is void ab initio, and is no better than a blank form.

5. Vendor and purchaser 🔑229(1)—It was unnecessary that purchasers of lots have actual notice that title company executing sales contract held only legal title, and that approval of plaintiff, seeking to rescind contract, was necessary to consummate deal.

It was unnecessary that defendant purchasers of lots have actual notice that title company executing sales contract held only legal title to lots, and that approval of plaintiff, who was suing to rescind contract was necessary to consummate deal, but it was sufficient, if circumstances were such as to put prudent person upon inquiry.

6. Vendor and purchaser 🔑244—Evidence supported finding that purchasers of lots had notice that title company, executing sales contract, held only legal title, and that plaintiff's approval was necessary to consummate deal.

In action to rescind contract for sale of real property, evidence held sufficient to support finding that defendant purchasers had notice that title company, executing sales contract, held only the legal title, and that approval of plaintiff was necessary to consummate deal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lucien Shaw, Judge.

Action to rescind a contract for the sale of real property by Marie Julie Pellissier against the Title Guarantee & Trust Company, Emma Summers, Francis W. Henry, and others. From a decree for plaintiff, the last named defendants appeal. Affirmed.

I. Henry Harris, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Denis & Griffith, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

E. W. Sargent and J. F. Keogh, both of Los Angeles, for defendant Title Guarantee & Trust Co.

PLUMMER, J. The plaintiff's complaint in this action sets forth the incorporation of the Title Guarantee & Trust Company; that prior to the date hereinafter mentioned the plaintiff was the owner in fee simple of all that certain real property described as the west half of the northwest quarter of section 25, township 1 south, range 14 west, S. B. M., in the county of Los Angeles; that on or about the ——— day of February, 1913, the plaintiff executed and delivered to the defendant Title Guarantee & Trust Company an instrument absolute in form, conveying all of said property to the Title Guarantee & Trust Company; that upon the same date an agreement in writing was entered into between the plaintiff and the Title Guarantee & Trust Company, wherein and whereby it was agreed that said conveyance, though absolute in form, was made in trust; that no consideration was paid therefor; that the title to said property was held in trust by the Title Company for the benefit of the plaintiff; that the conveyance was made by the plaintiff to the Title Company for the purpose of enabling the Title Company to subdivide and make sales of lots in said tract, to such persons, at such prices, and upon such terms as the Title Company should be thereafter instructed by the plaintiff; that said trust agreement has, since the date thereof, remained in full force and effect, and was in full force and effect at the time of the institution of this action.

It is further set forth in the complaint that, after the execution of the instruments just referred to, the Title Company proceeded to subdivide said real property into city lots, and had a map of the subdivision thereof duly recorded; that in said subdivision and upon said map there were two lots described as lots 188 and 189 of tract No. 2189, commonly known as Pellissier Square. The complaint further alleges that on or about the 1st day of February, 1923, and while said trust agreement referred to was in full force and effect, the Title Company executed a written contract for the sale of said lots 188 and 189 to one Francis W. Henry, for the total purchase price of $27,500. It is further alleged in the complaint that the defendant Emma Summers was the real party in interest, and that the contract executed in the name of Francis W. Henry was for her uses and purposes. The complaint then alleges that the defendants Summers and Henry, and each of them, knew and had actual notice that the defendant Title Guarantee & Trust Company held only the naked legal title to said property; that it was held in trust for the plaintiff; that the plaintiff was the real owner thereof, and that her consent and approval were required before the Title Company could make any conveyance or agreement for the sale of said lots, or either of them. It is then alleged that the plaintiff never instructed the Title Company to make any sale of said property, or to execute or deliver the contract of sale therefor, and never consented to or approved the making of any such sale or such contract, and had no prior knowledge of the execution of said contract, and, immediately upon learning thereof, informed the Title Company that she did not consent to or approve the same, and forthwith caused defendants Summers and Henry to be advised of such fact, and demanded a return and cancellation of the contract.

The prayer of the complaint is for a decree declaring said contract void; that it be delivered up and canceled; that the defendants Summers and Henry be held as involuntary trustees for the benefit of the plaintiff, if any rights they have under said contract. A copy of the contract referred to is attached to the complaint, marked Exhibit A, bearing date of February 1, 1923, purporting to have been executed between the Title Guarantee & Trust Company and Francis W. Henry, whereby the Title Company agrees to convey to Francis W. Henry lots 188 and 189 of tract No. 2189, known as Pellissier Square, for the sum of $27,500, payable in installments, the first installment being the sum of $2,500, to be paid on the execution of the contract; the other installments to be paid at stated times and in the amount set forth in the contract. A number of restrictions are set forth in the contract, not necessary to be particularly referred to herein. The contract is signed by the Title Guarantee & Trust Company, by A. F. Morlan, vice president, and A. R. Kilgore, secretary, and by Francis W. Henry; approved by W. H. Taggert, assistant trust officer. The answer of the defendants Summers and Henry denies each and every of the allegations of the plaintiff's complaint. The defendant Paul M. Reidy was brought in by an amendment to the complaint, but whatever interest the defendant Reidy acquired was acquired from the defendant Francis W. Henry, after the beginning of this action, or after the controversy, relating to the contract referred to, had arisen, and is subject to, and dependent upon, any rights, if any, which the defendant Francis W. Henry may have in and to said lots, and need not be further mentioned herein. The Title Company, by its answer, admitted practically all of the allegations of the complaint, but set forth in its answer that the contract referred to was never delivered by it to either the defendant Summers or the defendant Henry, although its possession was obtained by said defendants, who declined and refused to return the same to the Title Guarantee & Trust Company when demand was made therefor.

While the plaintiff's complaint does not allege the nondelivery of the contract by the Title Company to the defendant Francis W. Henry, or to his agent, Emma Summers, the cause was tried as though delivery was one of the issues tendered for determination by the court. As a considerable portion of the testimony is directed to the question of delivery, and the argument of counsel is directed to the same subject, we conclude that the trial was had upon the theory that the issue of delivery was tendered to the court, even though not specifically set forth in the pleadings, and the decision of this cause must be had in view of the theory entertained at the trial of the action.

The findings of fact, after referring to many items which are not disputed, find in paragraph No. 5: That the contract between the Title Company and the defendant Francis W. Henry was executed in duplicate, the material part of which is in these words: "The said contract was prepared in duplicate, and one copy of it was afterwards taken away from the office of said Title Guarantee & Trust Company, without the knowledge or consent of said Company or of plaintiff, and thereafter, without the knowledge or consent of said Company, or this plaintiff, was signed and acknowledged in due form by Francis W.

Henry before said Anna C. Durkee, as notary public, and the certificate of acknowledgment was signed by her under the date of March 15, 1923, and not otherwise. Said contract was never delivered to said Henry, or to any person for her, or at all. Said Emma A. Summers obtained possession of the said copy of said contract so acknowledged by said Henry, before said acknowledgment was made, and would not return it to said Title Guarantee & Trust Company, although due demand therefor was made on her." And then further found in paragraph No. 7: "That the said defendants Summers and Henry, and each of them, knew and had actual notice that the defendant Title Guarantee & Trust Company, held only the naked legal title to said property in trust for this plaintiff, and that this plaintiff was the real owner of the property, and that her consent and approval was required before said defendant Title Guarantee & Trust Company could make any conveyance or agreement for the sale of said lots, or either of them." It may be here stated that the finding of the court that the contract was "signed" by Francis W. Henry before Anna C. Durkee, as notary public, has no support whatever in the testimony. There is no controversy whatever that both copies of the contract were signed by the defendant Francis W. Henry at the residence of the defendant Emma Summers, prior to the signing thereof by Morlan and Kilgore acting for the company. The finding as to acknowledging and recording is likewise unquestioned. The decree went in favor of the plaintiff, and from this decree the defendants Summers and Henry appeal.

Finding No. 8 is to the effect that the plaintiff never instructed the Title Company to make any sale of the lots in question, or to execute or deliver any contract of sale therefor; that she never consented to or approved of the contract, and does not now consent thereto or approve the same; that, immediately upon learning of the contract, she informed the Title Company of her disapproval, and had demand made upon the defendants Summers and Henry for the return of the contract, etc.; and, further, that the plaintiff never received any of the purchase price for said lots.

The first point made by the appellants is that findings Nos. 7 and 8 are not supported by the evidence, in that there is no evidence to show that the appellants knew and had actual knowledge that said Title Company held only the naked legal title in trust for plaintiff, or that appellants knew that plaintiff's consent and approval was required before the Title Company could make any conveyance or agreement of sale, or that plaintiff never instructed the Title Company to make any sale of the property, or execute or deliver said contract of sale, or that plaintiff had no prior knowledge of such contract, or that, immediately upon learning thereof, informed the Title Company that she did not approve.

Point 2 is based upon the denial of the appellants' motion for nonsuit.

Point 3 is based upon the fact that the evidence shows there was a previous action upon identical issues, wherein the same parties were adverse in interest, the Title Company suing in a representative capacity for Mrs. Pellissier.

Point 4 made by the appellants is to the effect that, by the terms of the trust agreement, Mrs. Pellissier is estopped from suing the defendants Summers and Henry.

Point 5: That plaintiff is bound by the acts of her agent.

Point 6 relates to the manner in which Mrs. Summers obtained possession of the contract.

The seventh ground for reversal set forth by the appellants is urged upon the theory that the plaintiff has no cause of action, and no standing in court.

Before considering the 7 assignments of why a reversal should be had, we will state that the admitted or uncontroverted facts set forth in the record are: Execution, delivery, and recordation of a deed, absolute in form, by which the plaintiff purported to convey to the Title Company the premises involved in this action, the same being included in the larger tract mentioned in the conveyance; that the trust agreement executed between said parties at the same time was not placed upon record, nor were its terms and conditions ever made known to the appellants; that for a period of some years James J. Donahue had been the real estate broker or sales agent negotiating and making sales of lots in Pellissier Square; that, while acting as such broker or sales agent, the appellant Summers interviewed him relative to the purchase of the two lots in controversy; that, following the negotiations between Summers and Donahue, Summers made an offer for the property of $27,500; that, in pursuance of this offer, Donahue executed a preliminary agreement for the sale of the lots and asked of, and received from, the appellants the sum of $500, which was to be applied as a part of the first payment to be specified in the contract of purchase; that the negotiations between Summers and Donahue resulted in an understanding between them as to the terms of payment to be set forth in the contract, and also as to other conditions to be inserted in the contract, not necessary here to mention; that, following these negotiations, a contract was drawn up in duplicate by the trust officer of the Title Company; that, after the contract was so executed in duplicate, it was delivered to Donahue, who took the same to the residence of Mrs. Summers, and there the duplicate copies of the contract were signed by the appellant Francis W. Henry, and then handed back to Mr. Donahue, who returned the contracts to the Title Company, and in a day or two thereafter

Mrs. Summers went to the office of the Title Company, having with her a cashier's check for the sum of $2,000; that Mr. Taggert, the trust officer of the company, produced the duplicate copies of the contract which had not then been signed or executed on the part of the company; that Mr Taggert took the duplicate copies of the contract, went into the appropriate offices of the company, where the name of the Title Company was affixed by, and together with, the names of the vice president, A. F. Morlan, and the secretary, A. R. Kilgore, and the seal of the company affixed, following which Mr. Taggert returned to the presence of Mrs. Summers with the duplicate contract in his possession. The subsequent history of the contract is controverted.

The trust agreement, among other provisions, contained the following paragraphs, numbered third, fifth, and seventh, to which our attention has been specifically directed: "Third: When said map has been duly accepted and recorded as required by law, the party of the second part shall issue contracts of sale and convey lots in such subdivision to such person or persons, at such prices, and upon such terms as it shall be hereafter instructed by the said party of the first part, her heirs or assigns." "Fifth: The party of the second part shall impose such restrictions, covenants and conditions in all agreements and deeds executed by it as it shall be in writing requested to do by said party of the first part, her heirs or assigns." "Seventh: Any conveyance made by the Title Guarantee & Trust Company to the purchasers of lots shall vest in such purchasers an absolute and unassailable title, and there shall be no obligation on the part of the purchasers to see to the application of the purchase money, it being expressly understood by all parties hereto that any conveyance made by the party of the second part shall be binding upon all parties hereto, and should the party of the second part violate any of the provisions hereof, then the beneficiary shall have recourse only against said party of the second part."

While many reasons have been assigned by appellants for reversal, the determination of this cause really depends upon whether material findings are supported by the testimony. It may be here stated that finding 5, to the effect that the contract was never delivered, is not assailed as being contrary to the evidence, the argument of appellants being that, after the signature of the Title Company was properly attached, the delivery of the contract by the trust officer Taggert was immaterial.

Did the appellants know that the Title Company held only the legal title, and that the approval of Mrs. Pellissier was necessary to consummate the deal, or have knowledge of circumstances sufficient to put them upon inquiry? The deed and trust agreement herein referred to covering Pellissier Square were executed in the year 1913. The negotiations relative to lots 188 and 189 involved in this action practically all took place during the latter portion of January and the month of February, 1923. The record shows that in the year 1920, seven years after the execution of the deed of conveyance by the plaintiff to the Title Company, and three years preceding the negotiations involved in this action, Mrs. Summers had and carried on negotiations with Mr. Donahue, and, also, personally, with Mrs. Pellissier, relative to the purchase of a certain other lot included in Pellissier Square, fronting on that certain street known as Western avenue. It appears from the testimony that this lot was priced by Mrs. Pellissier at $3,700, and that Mrs. Summers offered to Mr. Donahue for said lot the sum of $3,500; that Mrs. Pellissier declined to accept Mrs. Summers' offer, and Mrs. Summers finally agreed to buy the lot at the figure named by Mrs. Pellissier. The testimony of Mr. Donahue is as follows: "At that time (1920) I had some lots south on Wilshire Boulevard on the east side of Western avenue, at $3,700.00. She (meaning Mrs. Summers) asked me if I could deliver one of them for $3,500.00. I told her no, I didn't think I could deliver it because of our price of $3,700.00. Mrs. Pellissier as a rule never cut her prices. She was very firm about prices she had given on properties. She (referring to Mrs. Summers) said, 'Isn't there any way for you to go to her, or for me to go to her?' I said, 'I don't see why it would be necessary, Mrs. Summers.' But after persuading me to go down, I had Mrs. Summers go in and meet Mrs. Pellissier at her residence at the corner of Serrano and Seventh street, Los Angeles, and she spoke to Mrs. Pellissier, and Mrs. Pellissier turned her down on the $3,500.00 offer." The testimony in the record shows that a contract for the sale of the lot just referred to facing on Western avenue was executed in favor of Mrs. Summers, but our attention has not been called to, and we have not discovered in the transcript, by whom the contract of sale was executed, unless it is covered by general testimony, set out in the record, that all contracts for the sale of lots in Pellissier Square were executed by the Title Company.

In relation to the negotiations covering the lots in controversy, the witness Donahue testified, in substance that, during the month of January, 1923, Mrs. Summers came to him and offered $22,500 for the two lots. The exact words of the witness' testimony in this particular are: "I refer now back to when she made the offer of $22,500.00, and I told her that Mrs. Pellissier would not take it, I was positive of that." The witness further stated that at that time he took the $25,000 offer from Mrs. Summers to Mrs. Pellissier, and it was refused; that the first offer was made on or about the 2d or 3d of January, 1923. In relation to the different offers, the witness Donahue further testified: "I told Mrs. Summers the $25,000.00 offer was refused by Mrs. Pellissier, and again she made another offer of $27,500.00, with the terms about the same that were in the former contract. When I speak of the former contract I mean the contract for $25,000.00. At this time I drew another contract, on the evening of February 3d, at her home—(meaning Mrs. Summers' home)—for $27,500.00. At that time Mrs. Summers said she wanted to have the deal completed as fast as possible. I told her I would. Within the next two or three days I went to the Title Company. I did not get hold of Mrs. Pellissier, and I ordered the Title Company to bring down a contract showing it in Francis Henry. I drew the contract for $27,500.00, and Mrs. Summers at the time put up $500.00 in currency. This was in the reception-hall at the home of Mrs. Pellissier. Mrs. Summers took the contracts, went out in the reception-hall and had the contract signed by Francis W. Henry." The testimony of the trust officer Taggert, tending to bring home to the knowledge of Mrs. Summers the interest of Mrs. Pellissier in the lots, is as follows: "When Mrs. Summers came in I passed the copy of the contract to her to read. She objected to certain things in the contract and asked for certain modifications or amendments. I said, 'I can't grant this. I will have to call Mrs. Pellissier up and see whether or not she will permit it.' I stepped to the telephone and called Mrs. Pellissier's phone, and Mrs. de Rulet answered the phone. I explained to her what Mrs. Summers wanted, and she said she couldn't answer the question for me that she would have to see her mother, so I came back from the phone and told Mrs. Summers that I couldn't give her an answer, and that if she would come in tomorrow, I would perhaps get in touch with Mrs. Pellissier, or words to that effect. I gave her a receipt, however, for her check for $2,000.00, before she left. I think, at the time she gave me the cashier's check, I gave her the receipt, because I wasn't ready yet to deliver the contract, and the receipt for the money would be sufficient until I delivered the contract." The testimony of Mrs. Summers, called as a witness for the plaintiff, and examined under the provisions of section 2055, Code of Civil Procedure, was to the effect that three years previous to the negotiations involved in this action she went with Mr. Donahue to the residence of Mrs. Pellissier to see her about a lot in Pellissier Square situate on Western avenue; that Mr. Donahue said: "We would have to go and see her about the piece of property." The testimony of Mrs. Summers, as to the negotiations had in 1923, covering the two lots, was substantially the same as that given by Mr. Donahue, save and except that, where the witness Donahue used the name "Mrs. Pellissier," Mrs. Summers testified that Donahue used the name "owner." Appellants not having raised the question that the testimony was insufficient to support the finding of nondelivery of the contract, it is unnecessary to set forth any of the testimony further than to say there is sufficient testimony to show that the contract came into the possession of Mrs. Summers without any manual tradition from the Title Company. In other words, that, when the contract was handed to Mrs. Summers to look over or examine, she proceeded to take the contract away with her. As we read her testimony, this is not denied by Mrs. Summers, the contention of appellants being that delivery was nonessential.

[1] The record shows that at a date previous to the negotiations between Summers and Donahue, relative to lots 188 and 189, the plaintiff had substantially stated that she would sell the two lots for $27,500, but we find no testimony in the record that the plaintiff ever authorized the particular sale or execution of the particular contract now before the court. Whether the facts presented in the record were sufficient to justify the trial court in drawing the inference that such authorization had been given, rather than the finding that such authorization had not been given, was a matter exclusively for the trial court, as in all these matters there was considerable conflicting testimony, and nothing has been presented to us justifying the conclusion that the assailed findings have no support in the evidence.

The motion for nonsuit is so bound up with the other assignments of error as not to require separate consideration. The third assignment of error, and the reason why a reversal should be had, is based upon the fact that there was a previous action begun and prosecuted by the Title Company against the appellants, involving the validity of the contract now under consideration; that in such prior action the appellants had judgment against the Title Company.

[2, 3] While the record in the former action was introduced in testimony at the trial of this cause, a reference to the answer of the appellants shows that the pendency of said action was not pleaded in abatement of the present action, and that no effort was made to have the trial of this action continued until the final determination of the action between the Title Company and the appellants. The record in the case of the Title Company against the appellants showed that an appeal had been taken from the judgment of the trial court in that action, and that, under the provisions of section 1049 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it was still pending and undetermined at the time of the trial of the present action, and did not constitute a bar. Until a judgment has become final, it cannot be pleaded as a bar to a subsequent action, but, if the party, in whose favor the prior judgment has been rendered, so elects, he may in a subsequent action plead a prior action in abatement, and lay the foundation for securing a continuance of the trial of the second action until the final determination of the first. Brown v. Campbell, 100 Cal. 635, 35 P. 433, 38 Am. St. Rep. 314; Harris v. Barnhart, 97 Cal. 546, 32 P. 589; Leonard v. Flynn, 89 Cal. 335, 26 P. 1097, 23 Am. St. Rep. 500; Estate of Ricks v. Ricks, 160 Cal. 467, 117 P. 539; Howard v. Howard, 67 Cal. App. 56, 226 P. 984. By reason of the failure of the appellants to properly plead the judgment in the former action by way of abatement it is unnecessary for us to consider the cases cited to the effect that an action prosecuted by a trustee, in which the trustor does not join, is binding upon the trustor. The cases cited by the appellants state the law accurately as to the facts presented, but are not applicable here.

[4] We cannot agree with appellant's contention that delivery of the contract was not essential to its binding force and effect. The law applicable to delivery, and the necessity therefor, is very clearly stated in 9 California Jurisprudence, p. 149, § 48, and is peculiarly applicable here: "There is no better established legal principle than that the transfer of the ownership of real estate, so far as the transfer is to be made by deed, necessitates a delivery of that deed to effectuate the passing of title from the grantor to the grantee. Delivery is the force that vitalizes the instrument without which, though signed and acknowledged, it is invalid, and not effective for any purpose. If delivery is wanting, the deed is void ab initio, and it is no better than a blank form. Consequently it is recognized that prior to its actual delivery the grantor named in the instrument may change the character of the delivery originally contemplated, and has the right to destroy and nullify the instrument itself. And this operative characteristic of delivery is not peculiar to deeds, but attaches to all written contracts."

[5, 6] Whether the appellants had actual written notice is not necessary to support the finding of notice. If the circumstances are such as to put a prudent person upon inquiry, that is all that is required. See 25 Cal. Jur., page 637, § 283, where the rule is fully stated. It is argued, however, that under the terms of a trust agreement the only remedy on the part of the plaintiff is by an action against the Trust Company. This would be true if the other factors set forth in this opinion had not entered into this cause. The dealing of Mrs. Summers with Mrs. Pellissier in 1920, after the execution of the conveyance to the Title Company, unquestionably gave her knowledge of the beneficial interest and ownership of Mrs. Pellissier in the property involved. This, coupled with the fact that the finding, that the contract was never delivered, necessitates an affirmance of the judgment, and it is so ordered.

I concur: FINCH, P. J.

SUN-MAID RAISIN GROWERS OF CALIFORNIA v. JONES, Sheriff. (Civ. 6416.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 6, 1929.

Rehearing Denied March 1, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 1, 1929.

1. Sales ⟹200(1)—Title to grapes purchased under raisin contract was in buyer at time crop was in sweat boxes undergoing final curing process.

Under raisin contract providing for sale of all raisin grapes to be produced during certain years and evidencing intention of parties to pass to and vest in buyer a present title and right of possession, the title to raisins covered thereby was in the buyer at time of levy by attachment on a portion of the crop while in sweat boxes undergoing final curing process, in that title passed thereunder when grapes first became property which could be subject of ownership and sale.

2. Sales ⟹199—Parties may agree when title shall pass under contract of sale, even though subject-matter has only potential existence.

Under a contract of sale, parties may agree when title shall pass, and, if they expressly do so, their contract controls, even though the subject-matter has only a potential existence.

3. Sales ⟹201(3)—Transfer of grape crop by means of raisin contract was not void because not capable of delivery (Civ. Code, § 3440).

Transfer of grape crop under a raisin contract providing for sale of all raisin grapes to be produced during certain years was not void under Civ. Code, § 3440, on ground crop was not capable of delivery, such section only declaring transfers without delivery void if made by a person having at the time possession or control of property.

4. Attachment ⟹374—Evidence held to sustain finding as to value of raisins seized by sheriff under writ of attachment.

Evidence in action in conversion held to sustain finding as to value of raisins seized by sheriff acting under writ of attachment.

5. Appeal and error ⟹176—Stipulation as to assignment of raisin contract dispensed with proof of facts showing valid assignment, and point was not available on appeal.

Where defendant in action for conversion did not raise the point that assignee of raisin contract was not proven to come within contract clause prohibiting assignment by the buyer except to nonprofit co-operative association, and on the contrary stipulated without reservation that said contract was assigned, the stipulation dispensed with proof of facts showing valid assignment, and point was not available on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Charles R. Barnard, Judge.

Action by the Sun-Maid Raisin Growers of California against W. F. Jones, as Sheriff of the County of Fresno. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

B. M. Benson, of Fresno, for appellant.

Harry M. Creech, of San Francisco, and Harris, Johnson, Willey & Griffith, of Fresno, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. Action in conversion. Plaintiff claimed to be the owner of 14 tons of raisins grown during 1926 on land owned by one George Betel. These raisins were seized by the defendant sheriff while they were in sweat boxes on the land of Betel. Defendant was acting under a writ of attachment in an action entitled Dauer v. Betel, and the raisins were seized as the property of Betel. In April, 1923, Betel had signed a contract with plaintiff's assignor, commonly known as the "raisin contract."

[1] The first and chief point raised by appellant is that under this instrument the title to the raisins attached by appellant was at that time in Betel, the grower and defendant in the attachment suit, and was not in the plaintiff who recovered judgment for conversion in the trial court.

The contract commenced, "Witnesseth: That the buyer (Sun-Maid Raisin Growers, a corporation) does hereby purchase and the seller (Betel) does hereby sell all of the raisin grapes to be produced during the years 1923 to 1937 inclusive. * * *" It specified how the raisin grapes should be cured and delivered, how and when they should be paid for by the familiar pooling, marketing, and dividend scheme. It contained a provision for liquidated damages and other relief in case of breach of the agreement. It also contained other provisions which are much discussed by the parties in their argument upon this appeal. A paragraph greatly relied upon by respondent reads as follows: "This instrument is intended by the parties to pass to and vest in the buyer a present title and right of possession to all of the crops of raisin grapes covered hereby. The buyer shall at all times have the right to enter upon said premises and remove the said crops therefrom; but the right of the buyer to so enter and remove said crops shall not affect the obligation of the seller to pick, cure and deliver the same as above provided."

Appellant concedes that the first part of the paragraph last quoted imports an executed contract of sale, under the terms of which a present title passes, but contends that this is overcome by many other provisions in the contract manifesting an intent that title should not pass until delivery. These provisions of the contract include the following: The grapes must be grown, dried, and cured and graded at time of delivery as to quality. Upon delivery an account payment was to be made, the amount thereof to be discretionary with the buyer. The price was to be slightly raised by a bonus for extra quality and reduced for inferior quality. It provides for liquidated damages. It provided "that, if at the time of such delivery there stands of record a crop mortgage covering the crop so delivered, such payments or advances shall be made as directed by request in writing signed by both mortgagor and mortgagee." The buyer could enter and take possession. Crops not to be in existence for thirteen years were sold. Contract terms were to be modified as required by the federal court.

[2] Appellant has cited a large number of cases in which one or more of the last-mentioned contract provisions, or similar ones, have been used by the courts to ascertain that the contracting parties did not intend that title to sold goods should pass at a given time. But none of these cases, nor counsel for appellant, questions that the intention is the guiding rule. Consideration of such contract provisions for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the parties is resorted to when that intention is not manifested in a clear and more definite way. None of the authorities relied upon by appellant contain, as here, a clear, direct, and express statement to the effect that the parties intend by their writing to pass to and vest in the buyer a present title. Rules of construction are designed and used for the purpose of ascertaining the intent and meaning of the writing as a whole where the intention is not clearly expressed. Where a certain clause is said to indicate a given meaning of the whole contract, the courts are merely stating that such clause reveals that such was the intention of the parties. Here the intention is so clearly expressed as to leave no excuse or reason for construction. If any rules of construction were needed, then the first one requires that all parts of the document be given force and meaning, if that is possible. The contract provisions which appellant points to as showing the intent that title remains in the seller are not all more consistent with title being in the seller than with title being in the buyer, and we do not find that any one of them is so inconsistent as to be entirely irreconcilable. Further construction is not justified until a provision is found impossible of being reconciled with the direct and clear expression of what the parties intended. Therefore, whatever controlling force these various contract provisions might have in the construction of an executory agreement of sale which contained no directly expressed intention, they are not controlling here. In Turner, Kuhn & Fraser, Inc., v. Jones, 61 Cal. App. 732, at page 734, 215 P. 1033, 1034, relied upon by appellant, it is said: "Under a contract of sale the parties may agree when title shall pass. If they expressly do so, their contract controls, even though the subject-matter has only a potential existence." See, also, Hogue-Kellogg Co. v. Baker, 47 Cal. App. 247, 190 P. 493; Farmer v. Leaf, 46 Cal. App. 542, 189 P. 735; Hamilton v. Klinke, 42 Cal. App. 426, 183 P. 675; Arques v. Wasson, 51 Cal. 620, 21 Am. Rep. 718. McLaughlin v. Piatti, 27 Cal. 451, is not to the contrary, nor does it deal with such a clause directly expressing the intent of the parties that title shall pass immediately. There the instrument stated that sellers "granted, bargained and sold" 500 head of cattle to be selected by buyer out of a certain large herd, The court held the instrument to be executory, because the chattels were not identified. This is no more than the rule of Civil Code, § 1140. "Not too great stress must be laid upon the use of the words 'sell' or 'buy' or 'sold' or 'bought' by the parties. These words are constantly used as meaning or including contract to sell or contract to buy." Williston on Sales (2d Ed.) vol. 1, § 262; Wance v. Thomas, 75 Cal. App. 238, 242 P. 509. The use of the word "sold" in McLaughlin v. Piatti, supra, may be compared with the words "does hereby sell" in the beginning of the raisin growers' contract, but it by no means has any similarity to the clause directly expressing the agreement of the parties that a present title to the raisin grapes shall pass and vest.

We need not in the present case determine the exact time the title passes, so long as it was before the attachment. Title passed when first the raisin grapes became property which could be the subject of ownership and sale. A potential existence of the grapes seems to answer this requirement. Arques v. Wasson, supra. This, of course, was long before the attachment which was levied upon a portion of the crop while in "sweat boxes" undergoing the final curing process. When the grower's creditor, therefore, attached the raisin grapes or the raisins, whichever they were at the time of the levy, they belonged to respondent.

[3] This transfer was not void under Civil Code, § 3440, because the crop was not capable of delivery. The section only declares transfers without delivery void "if made by a person having at the time the possession or control of the property." "At the time" in this case means when Betel signed the raisin contract in April, 1923. He was not then in possession or control of the raisins or raisin grapes attached in 1926 within the meaning of the section. The section does not require the delivery of growing crops. Globe Grain & Mill Co. v. Drenth, 36 Cal. App. 156, 171 P. 821, and cases therein cited.

[4] The value of the raisins was sufficiently proven by the evidence to sustain the finding and judgment on that issue. The valuation arrived at by the court was based on the lowest price named by the expert testimony, which means that it was based upon the assumption that the raisins were of the lowest quality within the rather detailed description given them in the questions bringing out this testimony. Appellant cannot complain of this.

[5] Appellant raises in this court for the first time the point that respondent, the assignee of the original buyer, Sun-Maid Raisin Growers, a corporation, was not proven by the testimony to come within the contract clause prohibiting an assignment by the buyer "* * * except to a nonprofit co-operative association, * * * etc., * * * or any corporation or organization of a co-operative nature. * * *" This point is not available to appellant because not raised in the trial court. On the contrary, appellant at the trial stipulated without reservation that said contract was assigned by the original buyer to respondent. This stipulation dispensed with proof of facts showing a valid assignment. Otherwise we should be disposed to permit the fact to be proven in this court.

96 Cal. App. 655

In re HOLLAND. (Civ. 6148.)

1. Attorney and client 🔑48—Jurisdiction was acquired in proceeding to cancel license to practice law by publication of citation for 30 days (Code Civ. Proc. § 187).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 187, together with inherent power of court over its officers, jurisdiction, in proceeding to cancel license to practice law, was acquired over person of respondent by publication of citation for period of 30 days, after it appeared by affidavit that he could not, after due diligence, be found within state.

2. Attorney and client 🔑40—Conduct of applicant, for admission to practice law, in concealing prior convictions, constituted fraud requiring revocation of license.

Conduct of applicant, for admission to practice law, in withholding information relative to prior conviction of offenses, and averring that he had never been charged with offense involving moral turpitude, held to constitute fraud upon the court, which authorized and compelled it to revoke the license theretofore granted.

Original proceeding to revoke and cancel the license of Albert W. Holland to practice law. License revoked and canceled.

R. H. Purdue, of Los Angeles, for petitioner State Bar of California.

THOMPSON, J. [1, 2] Albert W. Holland was admitted to practice in all of the courts of California by an order made by this court on the 8th day of November, 1926. The present proceeding is one to revoke and cancel his license to practice law, on the ground that the order was procured by fraud and the concealment of facts establishing a bad moral character. Jurisdiction over the person of the respondent has been acquired by the publication of the citation for the period of 30 days, for the reason that it appeared by affidavit that he could not, after due diligence, be found within the state. Ample authority for this procedure is found in the inherent power of the court over its officers, coupled with section 187 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The time fixed is that established for the publication of citations in disbarment proceedings. The verified petition of the state bar discloses that respondent sought admission to the bar of California on August 29, 1925, upon the representations that he was admitted to practice before the highest court in the Philippine Islands; that he had never been charged before any court with crime amounting either to a felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; and that he had been engaged in actual practice for a period of at least 3 years within a period of 7 years immediately preceding the filing of his application. The proof establishes that the respondent appeared September 21, 1925, before John E. Biby, one of the state board of bar examiners, to whom the matter was referred by this court, and testified that he was admitted to the profession in Manila in 1915, and there engaged in practice until 1925; that he had never been charged with conduct involving moral turpitude; and that there was nothing adversely affecting his character which ought to be revealed. The testimony also developed the fact that prior to 1920 the respondent had been convicted of a number of offenses, including attempted rape, embezzlement of money, and falsification of public records, and sentenced to a term aggregating better than 20 years; and that he was finally pardoned on condition that he leave the Islands, never to return. The proof indicates, but fails to establish, that the certificate, which respondent presented, that he was an attorney in good standing before the courts of the Philippine Islands, was forged. This circumstance can make no difference to the outcome of this proceeding. Nor is it necessary to comment at any great length upon the situation. It cannot be doubted that an obligation rested upon the respondent to reveal to this court at the time of his application the several convictions of offenses against the law instead of concealing the same and averring that he had never been charged with an offense involving moral turpitude. Nor can it be questioned that such conduct constitutes a fraud upon this court which upon principle and precedent (see In re Mash, 28 Cal. App. 692, 153 P. 961, and In re Wells, 174 Cal. 467, 163 P. 657) authorizes and compels us to revoke the license granted.

The license to practice law in this state heretofore granted to Albert W. Holland by this court is revoked and canceled, and his name is ordered stricken from the roll of attorneys and counselors at law.

PEOPLE v. SNELL. (Cr. 1714.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 7, 1929.

1. Forgery ⚷44(½)—Evidence held to authorize conviction for forging note (Pen. Code, § 21).

Evidence held sufficient to warrant conviction for forgery of note secured by deed of trust, under Pen. Code, § 21.

2. Forgery ⚷48—Instruction that one signing another's name without authority is guilty of forgery held not misleading.

Instruction that any one who with intent to defraud, signs another's name, knowing that he has no authority to do so, or forges a note, or passes or attempts to pass it as true and genuine, knowing it to be false or forged, with intent to prejudice, damage, or defraud any person, is guilty of forgery, held not misleading on issue of authority.

3. Forgery ⚷48—Instruction to acquit of forgery if defendant signed note believing he acted merely as dummy to accommodate codefendant in obtaining loan held properly refused under evidence.

In prosecution for forgery of note and deed of trust securing it, defendant's requested instructions that, if jury believed from evidence defendant signed note and deed of trust with no knowledge of fraudulent motive or criminal intent on part of codefendants, and believing that he acted merely as a dummy in accommodating codefendant in obtaining a loan on property described, they should find him not guilty, held properly refused under evidence.

4. Criminal law ⚷406(4)—Trial court's examination of defendant respecting admission of guilt by his plea of guilty previously withdrawn held not error (Pen. Code, § 1018).

Where, prior to trial, defendant pleaded guilty and thereafter withdrew such plea and entered plea of not guilty, action of trial court in examining him concerning such admission of guilt when he took the stand in his own behalf held not error, under Pen. Code, § 1018.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

William G. Snell was convicted of forgery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

George E. Stoddard, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Louis G. Campbell, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CRAIG, J. The appellant was jointly charged by information with two other defendants with having committed forgery and grand larceny in the county of Los Angeles on or about July 5, 1927. One of appellant's codefendants pleaded guilty to the crime of forgery, and as to the other the charges were dismissed. Snell was tried by a jury, and on April 19, 1928, was found guilty of having forged the names of Ella E. Thurin and C. J. Thurin upon a promissory note for $3,200.

[1] The principal ground upon which a reversal is sought is the contention that the evidence is wholly insufficient to warrant or to support the verdict and judgment, although appellant admitted before the jury that he signed the name "C. J. Thurin" to the note in question, and to a deed of trust purporting to secure it. Numerous authorities are cited which hold that intent is the essence of the offense charged, whereas, it is claimed, Snell signed another's name merely while acting as a "dummy," under the instructions of his codefendant, L. M. Cunningham, who represented to him that Mrs. Thurin's husband's signature could not be obtained at the time.

It appears that Cunningham visited the home of the Thurins in Los Angeles while they were in Denver, Colo., and thus obtained the address and description, and that neither C. J. Thurin nor his wife knew either of the defendants, nor did they sign or authorize the signature of their names to the note in controversy. A deed of trust was signed "C. J. Thurin" by appellant in the presence of a notary public to whom he acknowledged the same to be his signature, and Cunningham sold the note and deed of trust to the Billingsley Mortgage Company, and one Irene Haskins testified that she visited the Thurin home with both Snell and Cunningham. Snell was thereafter apprehended in Chicago and returned to Los Angeles for trial, whereupon he wrote certain exemplars. A handwriting expert swore that the exemplars and the signatures "C. J. Thurin" on the note and deed of trust were all written by the same hand. Appellant testified that he had been acquainted with Cunningham for some time, and had had other business dealings with him, that he knew his own name was not "Thurin," but that he gave it as his own to the notary, knowing that he was not telling the truth. His only attempted justification for the forgery of Thurin's name to the instruments was that to accommodate Cunningham he "sat in" as the real owner of the property, and that for the purposes of the transaction in hand he believed himself to be Thurin, and that he owned the realty described in the trust deed.

The Penal Code, by section 21, provides that the "intent or intention is manifested by the circumstances connected with the offense, and the sound mind and discretion of the accused." The jury were thoroughly instructed at the request of both parties upon the law of intent, presumption of innocence, credibility of witnesses, and as to the crime of forgery. Under the facts and circumstances presented by the record before us, we are unable to say as a matter of law that there was not ample justification for the conclusion at which the jury arrived.

[2] Another ground urged as error in appellant's briefs is that the jury were misled by instructions which were given upon the "authority" which legally entitles a person to sign the name of another, and that certain offered instructions illustrating the application of this term were improperly refused. The instruction complained of recites that every person who, with intent to defraud, signs the name of another person, knowing that he has no authority so to do, or forges a promissory note, or passes or attempts to pass it as true and genuine, knowing it to be false, or forged, with intent to prejudice, damage, or defraud any person, is guilty of forgery. It is contended that appellant's guilt was of no greater or different degree than that of Irene Haskins, one of his former codefendants, as to whom the charges were dismissed; that the jury should have been informed that there was no evidence tending to show that at the time of signing the note and deed of trust Snell believed that he was authorized in writing by Cunningham or the subsequently discovered true owner to execute them. It is argued that Mrs. Haskins signed the trust deed "Ella E. Thurin" at or about the same time, and for the same reason, that it was appellant's theory during the trial that she was not an accomplice, and that, the trial court having so determined, the same would be true of appellant unless the jury found and had evidence from which to find that appellant knew and had reason to know that his authority for the signing of the name, as he testified, was in fact false. The evidence adduced as to Mrs. Haskins tended to show that, after a brief acquaintance with appellant and Cunningham, whom she had no reason to distrust, she was asked by the latter to write the name "Ella E. Thurin," that she did so with no knowledge of the fact that she was signing the name of another person to a conveyance of property as security, and that, upon inquiry as to why she could not have signed her own name, Cunningham said "it didn't matter what name was signed to the paper; as it didn't belong to anybody it didn't matter what name was on the paper." Hence it appears that, while appellant knowingly and with intent to defraud forged Thurin's name to the documents in question as to which he later falsely represented himself as owner, Mrs. Haskins' act was accompanied by none of these elements of forgery. We think the rulings were not in this respect improper.

[3] The defendant offered instructions stating as the law of the case that, if the jury should believe from the evidence that Snell signed the note and deed of trust with "no knowledge of a fraudulent motive or criminal intent upon the part of any of his codefendants, and that he signed the same believing that he acted merely as a dummy in accommodating the defendant Cunningham in his obtaining a loan upon the property described," they should find him not guilty. Several instructions of this general character were refused, and it is insisted that the trial court erred in giving these and in failing to give other instructions heretofore mentioned upon the question of authority. We are cited to no decision supporting this novel theory. On the other hand, the testimony was not such as to warrant it in any event. Appellant did not attempt by his evidence, nor does he indicate by his briefs, any legal or moral excuse for signing the name "C. J. Thurin," which was not his own, to an incumbrance upon real property in which he had no interest. Although he argues that he received nothing for so signing, and that the paper may have been at that time thought to be worthless, he admits in the next breath that in some manner he was trying to accommodate a confederate, which it is obvious worthless paper would not accomplish. The rejected instructions also assume that Cunningham was the owner of the property and that appellant so believed. However, he, by his own testimony, stated to the jury that, acting as a dummy, he "supposed" that he owned the premises described in the deed of trust. There is no merit in this contention.

[4] Prior to the trial, appellant pleaded guilty, but thereafter withdrew such plea and entered a plea of not guilty. He took the stand as a witness in his own behalf, and at the conclusion of his redirect examination, wherein he swore that he did not at the time of the transaction in question know that there was any such person as Ella E. Thurin or C. J. Thurin, that he did not inquire nor learn of their existence until about a week after his arrest in Chicago, the trial court propounded questions, to which he answered, as follows:

"Q. Mr. Snell, have you at any time stated that you were guilty of the crime under the count of grand larceny? A. Guilty of it?

"Q. Yes. A. Yes, sir.

"Q. You pleaded guilty, didn't you, on the 4th of April in this case to the third count charging grand larceny? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And were afterwards permitted to withdraw your plea and change it? A. Yes, sir."

It is contended by appellant that the plea of guilty having been withdrawn, it was prejudicial error to examine him concerning such admission of guilt, and that the trial court in so doing expressed bias, and created an impression in the minds of the jury which could not be cured by an instruction to disregard the evidence. Authorities cited by appellant relate to much different circumstances wherein the rule has been so applied in this state to remarks of the trial court, and those cited from other jurisdictions are not in accord with the more recent rule established by our Supreme Court. In People v. Ryan, 82 Cal. 617, 23 P. 121, it was held that the Legislature did not intend to say, by the language of section 1018 of the Penal Code, that "notwithstanding such substitution and doing away with the first plea, it may be given in evidence and sometimes serve as the only conclusive proof of a man's guilt under the plea of not guilty." In People v. Boyd, 67 Cal. App. 292, 227 P. 783, it appeared that the defendant, having been charged with several offenses, offered through his counsel to plead guilty to obtaining money under false pretenses, if the court would grant him a continuance, but, notwithstanding the fact that such continuance was granted, he thereafter pleaded not guilty. Upon the trial the record of the conversation between Boyd's counsel and the judge relating to the offer to plead guilty was read to the jury, over the defendant's objections. Upon the authority of People v. Ryan, supra, this court held upon appeal from a judgment of conviction that such offer was not admissible. The Supreme Court denied a hearing in the case, and in so doing said, in part: "The action of the defendant in that regard was an admission on his part of the truth of the charge that he obtained money under false pretenses, which, with the other evidence, was properly left to the consideration of the jury. People v. Jacobs, 165 App. Div. 721 [151 N. Y. S. 522]. Such an admission was not, of course, conclusive evidence against the defendant. It was competent evidence merely, its weight and sufficiency being proper subjects for consideration by the jury. State v. Bringgold, 40 Wash. 12, 17 [82 P. 132, 5 Ann. Cas. 716]. When the fact was established that the admission had been made by the accused, the admission was not before the jury as testimony by him establishing the truth of all or any part of the allegations of the information, but the fact that he had made it was before them, and was relevant as being inconsistent with his claim to the jury that he did not obtain any money under false pretenses from the complaining witnesses and was not guilty. State v. Carta, 90 Conn. 79 [96 A. 411, L. R. A. 1916E, 634]. The defendant's own admission, voluntarily made, was clearly competent evidence against him. That he made the admission in court can detract nothing from its relevancy or its competency. Ehrlick v. Commonwealth, 125 Ky. 742 [128 Am. St. Rep. 269, 102 S. W. 289, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 995]; People v. Gould, 70

Mich. 240 [14 Am. St. Rep. 493, 38 N. W. 232]."

The opinion further points out that, as is true of the instant case, unlike People v. Ryan, supra, the court was dealing with a case in which there could have been a conviction without the plea of guilty being considered as a "confession."

Although appellant did not at the time of the trial take exception to certain remarks of the trial court, nor assign them as grounds of appeal, he quotes them in his brief, and contends that they were prejudicial. A careful reading of the court's examination of the defendant, and of the language quoted, fails to disclose any evidence of bias or prejudice upon the part of the judge, or inclination to influence the jury in any way. The judge asked the defendant while on the stand if he knew he was lying when he represented himself as Thurin before the notary public, to which Snell answered "Yes"; and we think from the other evidence in the case that in this latter instance the witness was truthful, and that the jury must have so concluded had the question not been propounded. While the query was quite blunt, it was at least to the point, and the defendant offered no objection to frankly replying thereto.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

ANTHONY v. VAN et al. (Civ. 6559.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 31, 1929.

Rehearing Denied March 1, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 1, 1929.

1. Brokers ⟾4—Broker's bond does not cover conversion of securities by broker, in absence of violation of Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 677, § 5, par. 3, as amended by St. 1923, p. 90, § 2).

Surety on broker's bond, given pursuant to Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 677, § 5, par. 3, as amended by St. 1923, p. 90, § 2), is not liable for loss suffered by reason of conversion of securities by broker, where such conversion did not arise from violation of Securities Act.

2. Brokers ⟾4—Surety on broker's bond, by failing to cancel bond on statutory amendment changing conditions of bond, did not assume new obligations (Corporate Securities Act, § 5, par. 3, as amended by St. 1923, p. 90, § 2, prior to its amendment in St. 1925, p. 967, § 3).

That surety on broker's bond, executed pursuant to Corporate Securities Act, St. 1917, p. 677, § 5, par. 3, as amended by St. 1923, p. 90, § 2, prior to its amendment in 1925 (St. 1925, p. 967, § 3), which amendment prescribed new conditions for broker's bond, did not cancel bond after amendment was adopted, and file new bond or affix rider to meet new statutory requirement, did not result in bond being automatically enlarged to cover such new conditions and assumption by surety of new and different obligation by the amendment.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Louis H. Ward, Judge.

Action by George L. Anthony against Jac. F. Van and others, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Cary & Co., and another. From a judgment entered on sustaining of a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Dunne, Dunne & Cook, A. B. Dunne, and Clifton R. Gordon, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Hartley F. Peart, Gus L. Baraty, and Charles V. Barfield, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

GOODELL, Justice pro tem. [1] This appeal is from a judgment entered upon the sustaining of the demurrer of the respondent Indemnity Company to the complaint, without leave to amend, in an action upon a bond for $5,000, executed on January 1, 1925, by the defendants Jac. F. Van and others, as principals, and the respondent, as surety.

The bond was given pursuant to paragraph 3 of section 5 of the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 677), as amended in 1923 (Stats. 1923, p. 90), which, as a prerequisite to the issuance of a broker's certificate by the commissioner, called for the filing of a bond for $5,000, payable to the state of California, "conditioned upon the faithful compliance with the provisions of law" by the applicant, and containing the further provision "that, upon failure to so comply, the applicant shall be liable to any and all persons who may suffer loss by reason thereof."

The complaint alleges the filing of the bond, the issuance of the certificate, and a breach of the condition of the bond, in that the defendants, while acting as appellant's brokers, converted securities entrusted to them for sale, resulting in the loss to appellant of upwards of $5,000. But there is no allegation to connect the conversion with a violation of the Securities Act, and, because of the absence of such allegations, the trial court held that the complaint stated no cause of action against the surety.

Counsel for appellant contend that the legislative intent in requiring such bond was to safeguard persons dealing with licensed brokers against any and every actionable wrong or defalcation of the character sued upon, whether denounced by the "Blue Sky" law or not; and they argue that the words, "provisions of law," are broad enough to include not only written or statute law, but also general rules or principles established by judicial decision.

In the case of Blumenthal v. Larson, 79 Cal. App. 726, 248 P. 681, which was an action on a broker's bond executed under the same act, there was the same absence of allegation showing the transaction to be in any way related to, or in violation of, the Securities Act. In affirming the judgment in favor of the surety, it was held that liability upon such bonds cannot be fastened upon the surety, unless the loss arises from a violation of the Securities Act itself. The court there says: "While the phrase 'provisions of law' is a very broad and general one, we are of the opinion that it only refers to the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act" and, further, "It is clearly apparent from a reading thereof that the section is confined solely to sales of worthless securities and that it has no application to transactions between brokers and their clients generally. * * * The bond required under the act was never intended to be a contract of credit insurance."

The recent case of Mitchell v. Smith (Cal Sup.) 267 P. 540, was likewise an action against brokers and their surety for loss arising out of dealings in securities, but the securities were not alleged to have been worthless, or issued or sold under, or otherwise subject to, the Securities Act. The court, referring to the language "provisions of law," there says: "That provision has been construed in the recent case of Blumenthal v. Larson * * * to mean that a surety is liable for a failure on the part of the broker to comply with the provisions of law set out in the Corporate Securities Act of 1923, and not upon his failure to comply with all the general laws," and adds that that case is "conclusive against plaintiff's right to recover."

The bond sued on herein was in the same form as the bonds in both cited cases; all three bonds were given for the same purpose, and were drawn so as to comply with the same statute. The broker's default which gives rise to this action was no more a violation of the Securities Act than were the losses sued on in the Blumenthal and Mitchell Cases, and those authorities, therefore, would seem definitely to settle the question.

Counsel for the appellant point out, however, that in neither of those cases was attention drawn to certain features of the Securities Act which, they claim, furnish strong intrinsic evidence supporting the construction for which they contend. They show that the act has two distinct purposes, (1) the regulation of the issuance and sale of securities, and (2) the regulation of investment brokers; that in that part of the statute dealing with the issuance and sale of securities the words "contrary to the provisions of this act" were used, while, in that part having to do with the licensing and bonding of brokers, the expression, "contrary to the provisions of law," was employed. From this they argue that the use of the broader language in the latter part evinces, by contrast, a studied intention to subject the surety to liability for any and every defalcation or wrong, however unrelated it might be to the other purposes of the act. But in the Blumenthal Case the act in question was considered and analyzed with great care; a rehearing was granted, and therein the court had the additional aid of briefs filed by numerous amici curiæ. We are satisfied that in the searching examination to which the act was then subjected no part of its language was overlooked. Moreover, when it is borne in mind that in the Mitchell Case the Supreme Court reaffirmed the principle of the Blumenthal Case, the meaning of the statutory language is no longer open to any question.

[2] Finally, appellant's counsel seek to distinguish this case from the Blumenthal and Mitchell Cases, because in both of them the losses were suffered before the 1925 amendment, while here the losses were after, as well as before, the change. The amendment went into effect about July 23, 1925 (Stats. 1925, p. 967), and it changed paragraph 3 of section 5 to read: "Said bond shall be conditioned upon the strict compliance with the provisions of this act" (instead of "faithful compliance with the provisions of law") "and the honest and faithful application of all funds received and the faithful and honest performance of all obligations and undertakings in the purchase or sale of securities, by said broker. * * *"

The bond here involved was executed on January 1, 1925, some months before the amendment, and it was drafted, as is usual in such cases, in language designed to bind the surety to the obligation which the statute then prescribed. It reserved the right of cancellation on 15 days' notice. When the law was amended no new bond was filed, nor was anything in the nature of a "rider" affixed showing an intention to alter the obligation, theretofore assumed by the surety, to meet the new statutory requirement. The bond, conforming to the old statute, simply remained on file, and the broker's certificate remained outstanding. The respondent Indemnity Company was, of course, charged with knowledge of the change in the law, as was its principal, the broker. From these premises the appellant seeks to draw the conclusion that, as the respondent surety did not cancel the bond after the amendment was adopted, it elected, by its inaction, to suffer the bond to remain in full force, and that consequently, when the amendment prescribed new conditions for brokers' bonds, it automatically enlarged the obligation of this bond. Their contention, in other words, is that the amendment, by itself, and without the scratch of a pen by the surety, revitalized the instrument sued upon.

The Blumenthal Case holds (as must be obvious anyway) that such a bond "is strictly a statutory bond and liability thereon does not extend beyond the terms of the act." We adopt what was said in that case respecting the meaning of the amendatory language, i. e., that "the extent of the liability of a bond given under the law as it now stands is a question we are not called upon to consider or discuss," but it is sufficient to say that the amendment, requiring a broker's bond to be conditioned also upon "the honest and faithful application of all funds received and the faithful and honest performance of all obligations and undertakings in the purchase or sale of securities, by said broker, * * *" introduced a material change not contained in or contemplated by the 1923 act, as construed in the Blumenthal and Mitchell Cases.

The rule is a familiar one that "the law in force at the date of a public bond, fixing a certain condition for it, and saying what its obligation shall be, is a part of it as effectually as if such obligation were in words inserted in it." State v. Nutter, 44 W. Va. 385, 30 S. E. 67, quoted with approval in Milliron v. Dittman, 180 Cal. 443, 181 P. 779. The appellant cites the Milliron Case and others to the same effect in support of its argument, but this line of decisions goes no further than to hold that it is the law at the time the bond is written—when the surety's contract is made—that "enters into and becomes a part of the agreement." Hub Hardware Co. v. Ætna Acc. & Liability Co., 178 Cal. 267, 173 P. 81. "The bond should be read by the light of the law under which it was required and received." Macready v. Schenck, 41 La. Ann. 456, 6 So. 517. "Sureties engage with eyes open to that law." (State v. McGuire, 46 W. Va. 328, 33 S. E. 313, 76 Am. St. Rep. 822. To the same effect are Town of Mill Valley v. Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co., 68 Cal. App. 372, 378, 229 P. 891, and Malachowski v. Varro, 76 Cal. App. 207, 213, 244 P. 936. No case is cited which goes so far as to hold that in a bond of this character, not only the statute in force when the bond is written, but amendments not then contemplated, enter into the surety's contract.

To hold that the surety intended to assume the new and different obligation created by the 1925 amendment, by its mere passiveness in omitting to "cancel" the bond, with nothing in the bond itself, or supplied subsequently, to show that it so intended, and with no new or fresh consideration to support it, would have the undoubted effect, as said in the Milliron Case, 180 Cal. 443, 181 P. 779, of imposing "a liability necessarily and absolutely inconsistent with the unequivocal intent of the parties as disclosed by the express terms of the bond itself." To so hold would extend beyond all reasonable bounds the doctrine just discussed, and would render a bondsman liable to having obligations, unthought of at the time he signed, legislated into his contract without his consent. Brandt, in his work on Suretyship and Guaranty (3d Ed.) at section 666, sums the matter up in the language used by Baron Pollock in the case of The Mayor, etc., v. Oswald, 3 El. & Bl. 665, 118 English Reports, Reprint, 1286, 1296, as follows: "Every contract (which does not expressly provide to the contrary) must be considered as made with reference to the existing state of the law; and, if, by the intervention of the Legislature, a change is made in the law, which in any degree affects the contract, such contract, made without some clear and distinct reference to the prospect or possibility of a change, does not hold, with reference to the state of things as altered by the new law."

If, upon the adoption of the 1925 amendment, the commissioner had revoked the broker's certificate (on the ground that no new bond had been filed), it is perfectly clear, we think, that he could not have been compelled by mandate or otherwise to reinstate it upon the bond, in the form now before the court, drawn under the old law. Moreover, the appellant, as well as the brokers and their surety was chargeable with knowledge of the change in the law, and it cannot be that in his dealings with the brokers appellant could have placed any reliance upon the protection of the bond as originally drawn without any new writing showing an intention to become bound under the terms of the amendment. We see no element of estoppel in the case.

As already stated, it is not necessary for us to comment on the effect of the new language. If, however, appellant's losses were within its purview, we are of the opinion that the bond sued upon, given pursuant to the old statute, and with the old but not the new statutory language a part of it, is not broad enough, and was not intended to cover such losses. In our opinion the action of the trial court in sustaining the demurrer was correct, and its judgment should be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

GIBSON et al. v. MAILHEBUAU.★
(Civ. 6552.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 29, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 28, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 28, 1929.

1. Executors and administrators 🔑444(2)—Allegation in complaint, of plaintiff's representative capacity, must be denied positively; denial thereof, on ground of lack of information and belief, being insufficient.

Allegation in complaint, of plaintiff's representative capacity, is matter of public record, and must be denied positively in answer; denial thereof, on ground of lack of information and belief, being insufficient.

2. Executors and administrators 🔑450—Probate of will and issuance of letters testamentary raises presumption of testator's death.

Fact, that a man's will has been probated and letters testamentary have been issued, raises presumption of death, which must be indulged, in the absence of any conflicting evidence.

3. Executors and administrators 🔑451(2)—Issue of testator's death was removed from jury in action by executors under uncontradicted evidence of issuance of letters testamentary (Code Civ. Proc. § 1961).

In suit by executors no question was raised for consideration of jury as to testator's death, where witness testified to his death, and defendant admitted probate of will and issuance of letters testamentary, and failed to introduce any contradictory evidence; jury being required to find, according to uncontroverted presumption, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1961.

4. Evidence 🔑474(14)—Opinion of bank teller, as to genuineness of signature claimed to be that of deceased, held competent, where witness had quite often paid out money on deceased's signature (Code Civ. Proc. § 1943).

In action against estate to recover on note claimed to have been signed by deceased, genuineness of his signature held properly proved, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1943, by testimony of bank teller who stated he had paid out money on deceased's signature quite often, and that, in his opinion, the signature to the note was that of deceased.

5. Appeal and error 🔑179(2)—Defendant who failed to introduce evidence in suit on note could not complain on appeal that note was without consideration (Civ. Code, § 1615).

Defendant who failed to introduce evidence at trial could not complain on appeal that note sued on was not supported by consideration, since burden of want of consideration is upon person seeking to avoid the contract, under Civ. Code, § 1615.

6. Trial 🔑141—Direction of verdict for plaintiffs was justified where they made out prima facie case, and defendant failed to introduce any evidence.

Where plaintiffs, in suit on note, made out prima facie case, and defendant failed to introduce any evidence, court was justified in directing jury to return verdict for plaintiffs.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Action by Walter D. K. Gibson and others, as executors of the last will and testament of Adolph B. Spreckels, deceased, against Eugenie Bouscal Mailhebuau, as executrix of the last will and testament of Camille Mailhebuau, deceased. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. J. Dunne, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Morrison, Hohfeld, Foerster, Shuman & Clark, of San Francisco (C. Coolidge Kreis, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

NEEDHAM, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from the judgment of the superior court of the state of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco. The action was upon a rejected claim, which claim was presented to the defendant executrix, and which was based upon a promissory note alleged to have been given by Camille Mailhebuau, defendant's testator, to Adolph B. Spreckels, plaintiffs' testator.

The amended complaint alleges that the promissory note was for the principal sum of $15,000, and was executed and delivered on the 21st day of December, 1922, and that no part of said note has been paid, except the interest up to December 21, 1923. It is also alleged that Adolph B. Spreckels, the plaintiffs' testator and the payee named in said promissory note, died on the 28th day of June, 1924, leaving a last will and testament, and appointing the plaintiffs executors; that said will was admitted to probate in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco; that letters testamentary were issued to plaintiffs, and that they duly qualified as such executors. Then follow allegations of the death of Camille Mailhebuau, the appointment of the defendant as executrix, and the presentment and rejection of plaintiffs' claim.

The answer admits the presentment and rejection of the claim; also the appointment of defendant as executrix, as alleged in the amended complaint, by failure to deny the same. The defendant, basing her denial on lack of information and belief, denied all the other allegations of the amended complaint.

The case was tried before a jury. At the conclusion of plaintiffs' case the defendant made a motion for a nonsuit, which was denied. The defendant declined to offer any evidence whatsoever, and a motion by the plaintiffs for a directed verdict was granted by the court.

Appellant claims the evidence was not sufficient to support the judgment, and to justify the direction of the verdict, in many particulars, it being claimed that the proof offered in support of the plaintiffs' amended complaint failed to show, among other matters, the plaintiffs' title to the note, the death of Adolph B. Spreckels, and the genuineness of the signature of Camille Mailhebuau on the promissory note.

[1] As stated above, the amended complaint alleged the death of Adolph B. Spreckels, the probate proceedings, the issuance of letters testamentary, and the appointment of plaintiffs as executors. Defendant's denial of these allegations was based on her alleged lack of information and belief. We think it is well settled that representative capacity, being a matter of public record, must be denied positively. There are so many cases in this state holding such to be the law that it is only necessary to cite a few of such cases where this point has been determined. The law is well stated in the case of Montgomery v. Fidelity & Deposit Co., 69 Cal. App. 251, at page 254, 230 P. 993, 994, as follows: "In paragraph 6 of plaintiff's complaint the plaintiff alleged the death of Nora A. Knobloch, the commencement of probate proceedings in San Francisco, the issuance of Letters Testamentary, and the formal appointment of this plaintiff as executrix of the last will and testament of Nora A. Knobloch. The defendant alleged that it had no information or belief on the subject and therefore denied the allegations of that paragraph. The denial should have been positive."

It has also been held in numerous cases in this state that a denial based only on lack of information or belief of a matter of public record is no denial at all, and the matter is deemed admitted. We cite only a few cases. See Santa Barbara Lumber Co. v. Ross, 183 Cal. 657, at page 659, 192 P. 436; Art Metal Construction Co. v. A. F. Anderson Co., 182 Cal. 29, at page 33, 186 P. 776; Mullally v. Townsend, 119 Cal. 47, 50 P. 1066; Saylor v. Taylor, 42 Cal. App. 474, page 477, 183 P. 843.

[2, 3] The appellant claims that the death of Adolph B. Spreckels was not proved; that no presumption of the death of Spreckels is raised, and that the evidence was not insufficient to overcome the presumption of the continuance of human life. The witness Blackie testified: "I knew Spreckels. He died in June, 1924, the 28th of June." Appellant contends that this testimony should have been ignored, because it is not shown that Mr. Blackie spoke from his personal knowledge. However, it nowhere appears that the witness Blackie did not speak from personal knowledge. The answer of Blackie was a positive statement of the fact of the death of Spreckels. Counsel for the defendant could have cross-examined the witness concerning the source of his knowledge, if the witness appeared to have spoken from hearsay, but this was not done.

There was, however, other testimony than that of the witness Blackie that was amply sufficient to prove the death of Spreckels, in this, that the defendant admitted the probate of the will of Spreckels and the issuance of letters testamentary to the plaintiffs, and we think this principle was announced in the case of Garthwaite v. Bank of Tulare, 134 Cal. 237, at page 242, 66 P. 326, 328, where the court uses the following language: "The introduction of the letters testamentary to the plaintiffs was sufficient evidence of the death of Smith."

The fact that a man's will has been probated and letters testamentary have been issued raises a presumption of his death. This presumption must be indulged in the absence of any conflicting evidence. In this last-cited case the plaintiffs, as executors of one Smith, were suing on a check drawn by the defendant, payable to the order of Smith. The court held that plaintiffs had sufficiently proved their title to the check by showing the issuance of letters testamentary to them.

If the fact of issuance of letters testamentary was presumptive evidence of the death of Spreckels, since no conflicting evidence was offered, this question was removed from the consideration of the jury. Section 1961 of the Code of Civil Procedure: "A presumption (unless declared by law to be conclusive) may be controverted by other evidence, direct or indirect; but unless so controverted the jury are bound to find according to the presumption."

[4] As to the genuineness of the signature of Camille Mailhebuau, as maker of the promissory note sued on, it is proved by the testimony of the witness Stahner, an employee of the San Francisco Bank for 16 years, the paying teller of such bank for over 4 years. The witness Stahner said that he knew the signature of Camille Mailhebuau, and had known it for "a full ten years." He admitted that he had never seen Mr. Mailhebuau sign his name, but he stated that he had paid out money on Mailhebuau's signature "quite often." He said that in his opinion the signature was that of Mailhebuau.

We think this mode of proving a signature falls within the provisions of section 1943 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which reads as follows: "The handwriting of a person may be proved by anyone who believes it to be his, and who has seen him write, or has seen writings purporting to be his, upon which he has acted or been charged, and who has thus acquired a knowledge of his handwriting."

[5] The defendant set up, as an independent defense, the absence of consideration for the note. As stated, the defendant offered no evidence at the trial of the case whatever. Section 1615, Civil Code, reads: "The burden of showing a want of consideration sufficient to support an instrument lies with the party seeking to invalidate or avoid it." Therefore the appellant and defendant is in no position to complain.

[6] As the appellant offered no evidence at the trial, we are only required to ascertain from the record if a prima facie case was made by plaintiffs and respondents. The evidence was amply sufficient. Such being the case, there was no error in denying the motion for a nonsuit.

The court directed the jury to return a verdict for the plaintiffs, the defendant having failed to introduce any evidence, and we think the trial court was clearly justified in so doing. The only question left for the jury to determine would have been the amount of the attorneys' fees recoverable, and this question was by stipulation of the attorneys left to the determination of the court.

No other grounds urged for reversal require discussion, although we have carefully considered all of them.

The appeal is without merit, and, therefore, the judgment is affirmed.

LIBERTY BANK v. NONNENMANN et al.★ (Civ. 6526.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 30, 1929.

Rehearing Denied March 1, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 28, 1929.

1. Bills and notes 🔑64—Where conditions prescribed by maker of note are fraudulently disregarded by payee bank, or cashier, there is no binding delivery.

Where conditions prescribed by maker of note are fraudulently disregarded by payee bank, or by cashier, its agent, there is no binding delivery, since there is no meeting of minds.

2. Banks and banking 🔑109(3)—Cashier, in taking notes payable to bank for purpose of purchasing automobiles, was agent of bank.

Where bank cashier persuaded defendant to buy half interest in automobile business, and cashier agreed to supervise such interest, and cashier thereafter fraudulently represented that motor company was solvent, and induced defendant to sign notes, representing that proceeds would be used to purchase automobiles, cashier, in receiving notes payable by their terms to bank, was agent of bank.

3. Banks and banking 🔑109(3)—Where cashier, taking note to bank, promised maker he would not be required to pay notes, maker could not be held liable; notes being transferred after maturity.

Where bank cashier, taking notes payable to bank for purpose of purchasing automobiles for motor company, promised maker that he would not be called on to pay notes, maker could not be held liable, where notes were transferred after maturity, and no rights of innocent third parties were involved, since, in case principal seeks to recover on contract in which agent exceeds his authority, he must take contract as a whole.

4. Bills and notes 🔑502—In action on notes payable to bank, admitting evidence that cashier had taken notes to purchase automobiles for motor company in which maker was interested held not error.

In action on notes payable to bank, transferred to plaintiff after maturity, admitting evidence that notes were taken by cashier for particular purpose, viz. to purchase automobiles for motor company, in which maker had purchased interest through cashier, held not error.

5. Evidence 🔑135(1)—Where issue was whether bank cashier practiced fraud in inducing defendants to sign notes, evidence of cashier's other frauds practiced on defendants was admissible.

In action on notes payable to bank, where issue on question of fraud was whether bank cashier practiced fraud in inducing defendants to sign notes, evidence concerning fraud in inducing defendants to purchase half interest in automobile business, which occurred while cashier was assistant cashier of another bank, and before he became connected with payee bank, and that name of defendant, signed to articles of incorporation of motor company two months after making of notes sued on, was forged by cashier, held admissible on question of cashier's intent or motive.

6. Bills and notes 🔑538(3)—Evidence warranted instruction that, if prior notes were paid before notes sued on were executed, prior notes formed no consideration for notes sued on.

In action on notes, instruction that, if jury found from evidence that prior notes were fully paid and cashed before notes in controversy were executed, and that notes in controversy were not executed for purpose of paying and canceling prior notes, such prior notes formed no part of consideration for giving of notes in controversy, held warranted by evidence.

7. Banks and banking 🔑109(3)—If bank cashier received proceeds of notes to bank to purchase automobiles for motor company, he, as bank's representative, was bound to do so.

Where cashier of bank became possessed of proceeds of notes payable to bank, and as cashier received proceeds to purchase automobiles for motor company, he as representative of bank was bound to so use proceeds, and, where he did not do so, transferee of notes could not recover on notes.

8. Appeal and error 🔑1060(1)—Attorney's improper reference to jury's verdict in another case held harmless.

In action on notes, defendant's attorney's improper reference, during cross-examination of payee bank's cashier, to fact that jury in another case failed to see matter in light that witness stated the facts were, held harmless, where evidence amply supported verdict.

★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action upon promissory notes by the Liberty Bank against Elwood Nonnenmann, also known as Elwood Nonnenman, and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Ross & Ross, of Burlingame (Maurice T. Dooling, Jr., and F. A. Devlin, both of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Fletcher A. Cutler, of Burlingame, for respondents.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This is an action upon two promissory notes in the principal sum of $2,500 each, executed by the defendant Elwood Nonnenmann and by his father, Charles L. Nonnenmann, since deceased, as makers, in favor of the California Bank of San Mateo County, as payee, and transferred after maturity to the plaintiff Liberty Bank. The defendants Elwood Nonnenmann and Emma Adelaide Nonnenmann, as administratrix of the estate of Charles L. Nonnenmann, deceased, filed answers, in which they denied the execution of the notes and that there was anything due thereon; that plaintiff acquired the notes after maturity and is not a holder in due course; that the notes were executed without consideration and were not delivered to the payee, and the proceeds thereof were not deposited to the credit of the makers nor paid to them; and a special defense of fraud, which is in the main as follows: That for many years prior to September, 1, 1923, the Nonnenmanns, father and son, were intimately acquainted with and reposed confidence in one Ray Falvey; that Falvey was on that date assistant cashier of the Peninsula Bank in Burlingame, where all the parties resided; that on or about September 1, 1923, Falvey conceived a fraudulent scheme to defraud Charles L. Nonnenmann of various sums of money, including the proceeds of the notes here sued upon; that in pursuance of such scheme Falvey represented to Charles L. Nonnenmann that a certain automobile business was of the value of $6,000, free of debt, and being conducted at a profit; that, if the elder Nonnenmann would advance $3,000, Falvey would purchase a one-half interest in this business for the other Nonnenmann, and would supervise and manage such interest; that such representations were false, and known to be false; that the elder Nonnenmann, in reliance on these representations, paid the sum of $3,000, and it was deposited in the Peninsula Bank to the credit of the Mann-Nonnenmann Motor Company, under which name the business was conducted; that Falvey, as cashier of the Peninsula Bank, wrongfully and without the knowledge of the Nonnenmanns appropriated said money to his own use and that of the Peninsula Bank; that thereafter Falvey became cashier of the California Bank of San Mateo County, payee of the notes in suit, and continued to manage and superintend the affairs of the Mann-Nonnenmann Motor Company, and the accounts of the motor company were transferred to the California Bank of San Mateo County; that pursuant to such fraudulent scheme Falvey, on or about October 10, 1924, fraudulently induced Nonnenmann, Sr., to advance $2,500 to purchase new automobiles, which amount was deposited in the California Bank of San Mateo County to the credit of the motor company; that Falvey at this time was cashier and manager of such bank, manager and superintendent of the Mann-Nonnenmann Motor Company, and secretary and manager of the Peninsula Acceptance Corporation, and had control of the books of all three institutions, and so kept the accounts of the bank with the motor company as to show a fictitious indebtedness, on October 10, 1924, of $2,500 from the motor company to the bank; that such fictitious indebtedness was caused by Falvey diverting the money of the motor company to his own use and that of the Peninsula Acceptance Corporation; that Falvey appropriated the $2,500 to his own use and that of the bank; that on or about November 1, 1924, Falvey was managing the automobile business under the name of Nonnenmann Motor Company, defendant Elwood Nonnenmann having become the sole owner thereof; that Falvey, on or about November 30, 1924, fraudulently represented to Nonnenmann, Sr., that the motor company was solvent, free of indebtedness, and was being conducted at a profit, and requested Nonnenmann, Sr., to sign the two promissory notes in suit, representing the proceeds would be used to purchase automobiles for the motor company, and, relying on such representations, the notes were signed; that Falvey had so manipulated the books of the three institutions as to show a fictitious indebtedness from the motor company to the bank of $5,000, and that the proceeds of the notes were not used to buy new automobiles, but were appropriated to their own use by Falvey and the bank.

Plaintiff proved the execution of the notes by Charles L. Nonnenmann and Elwood Nonnenmann, the transfer of the notes to plaintiff, that they constituted a part of plaintiff's assets and remained unpaid, introduced the notes in evidence, proved the appointment of Emma Adelaide Nonnenmann as administratrix of the estate of Charles L. Nonnenmann, deceased, and the presentation of the claim upon the notes.

Defendants, in support of their claim of fraud, introduced testimony that in 1923 Walter J. Mann was engaged in the business of selling automobiles; that in September of that year Ray Falvey, who was an intimate friend of the Nonnenmanns, and in whom they reposed confidence, and who was at the time connected with the Peninsula Bank, suggested to the Nonnenmanns that Nonnenmann, Sr., buy a half interest in the automobile business of Mann for $3,000 for young Nonnenmann, who was then 23 years of age, which business Falvey represented to be free from debt and agreed that he would keep the books and take care of everything; that, acting upon such representations Nonnenmann, Sr., gave his check for $3,000; that at the time Mann owed the Peninsula Bank a note of $1,500, and that this note was paid out of the $3,000 check given by Nonnenmann, Sr.; that Mann was offering his business for sale for $3,000, and Falvey told him he could get $3,000 for a half interest; that Mann never got any of that money; that, when Falvey became cashier of the California Bank of San Mateo County, the account of the automobile business was transferred to that bank; that at the time of the purchase of the half interest in Mann's business Falvey was assistant cashier of the Peninsula Bank; that with respect to the notes in suit, according to the testimony of Elwood Nonnenmann, Falvey told Nonnenmann, Sr., that "he was short in the finance company, and he needed the money to buy automobiles; that, if my dad would sign the notes, the bank would give the finance company the money and he would never hear of it thereafter. * * * Q. What did your father say to Mr. Falvey? A. He asked him, he said, 'Mr. Falvey, I will never be called upon to pay this note?' and Mr. Falvey said, 'You won't; everything will be taken care of.' * * * Mr. Falvey said he would never be called upon to pay this note, that he would cancel it right out and everything would be all right."

The case was tried before a jury, which rendered its verdict for defendants, and from the judgment entered upon such verdict plaintiff has appealed.

[1-4] Appellant urges that defendants should not have been permitted to offer evidence in support of their defense that the notes were given for a particular purpose, viz. to purchase automobiles, because they did not show that Falvey was authorized to make such an agreement, and that it was not in the ordinary course of the bank's business; that, while Falvey, as cashier, had authority to do everything necessary or proper and usual in the ordinary course of business for the purpose of effecting his agency (Civ. Code, § 2319), the buying of automobiles was neither necessary nor proper, nor in the usual or ordinary course of the bank's business, nor was it for the effecting of the purpose of his agency; and that the cashier had no authority to promise Nonnenmann, Sr., that he would never be called upon to pay the notes—and cites State Bank v. Forsyth, 41 Mont. 249, 108 P. 914, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 501, as holding that officers of banks have no power to excuse or limit the legal obligations of persons to banks or to excuse or limit such obligations by agreeing that they shall not be called upon to pay obligations which they make, and Magee on Banks and Banking (2d Ed.) p. 156, announcing the rule to be "that beyond the ordinary business of the bank his [cashier's] acts must be authorized and directed by the board of directors."

In this state it is held that, if conditions prescribed by the maker of the note are fraudulently disregarded by the bank or by the cashier, its agent, there is no binding delivery, as there is no meeting of minds. National Bank of San Mateo v. Whitney, 40 Cal. App. 281, 180 P. 845, Williams v. Hasshagen, 166 Cal. 386, 137 P. 9. Here Falvey was the agent of the bank in receiving the notes payable by their terms to the bank, and comes, we think, within the rule laid down in First National Bank v. Reed, 198 Cal. 259, 244 P. 371: "In the situation presented here the sole representative of the bank was the cashier and acting manager. The bank cannot claim anything except through him, and therefore, if it claims through him, it must accept his agency with its attendant notice of his knowledge of the facts as they actually existed. The bank cannot in one breath be heard to say that the cashier was without authority to bind itself as its agent and accept the note upon condition that it was an accommodation note for which the defendant should not be liable, and in the next breath insist that it can avail itself of his act in taking the note. It cannot avail itself of only so much of the transaction as was beneficial to it and repudiate the rest. If it relies upon the note, it must take it with the terms upon which the cashier took it, namely, that the defendant should not be responsible. The bank must take the burden with the benefits and by demanding performance of the contract, the bank assumes responsibility for the instrumentalities—that is to say, the representations, promises and conditions—through which the act was induced. The law is well settled that, in case a principal seeks to recover upon a contract in which the agent exceeds his authority, he must take the contract as a whole. * * * It follows, from what we have said, that Reed having given his note with the express understanding with the cashier and manager of the bank that he would not be called upon to pay the note, he cannot now in a suit wherein the bank is plaintiff, and no rights of innocent third parties intervene, be held liable." Here, as in the case just quoted from, the notes were assigned after maturity and the question of innocent purchasers for value is not involved.

[5] Appellant contends that permitting the defendants to offer evidence concerning the fraud alleged in inducing the Nonnenmanns to purchase the half interest in Mann's automobile business, which occurred while Falvey was assistant cashier of the Peninsula Bank and before he became connected with the California Bank of San Mateo County and further permitting testimony that the name of Charles L. Nonnenmann signed to the articles of incorporation of the Nonnenmann Motor Company, executed on February 21, 1925, something over two months subsequent to the making of the notes in suit, was forged by Falvey, all of which testimony was received over appellant's objection, prejudiced its case and was error.

Appellant urges that as Falvey, at the time he induced Charles L. Nonnenmann to advance $3,000 to buy a half interest in Mann's automobile business, was not the agent of plaintiff's assignor, the California Bank of San Mateo County, but was the agent of the Peninsula Bank, his representations at that time were not binding upon the California Bank of San Mateo County, and consequently not upon plaintiff, and that the evidence offered to establish the fact that Falvey forged the name of Charles L. Nonnenmann to the articles of incorporation of the Nonnenmann Motor Company shows this act, if it occurred to have occurred subsequent to the execution of the notes in suit, citing in support of its contention the familiar rule that an agent can bind his principal only when his acts are within the scope of his authority, and that the acts of an agent beyond his authority are the acts of a stranger. 1 Cal. Jur. 827.

We do not question this principle, but here the testimony was not received to bind the California Bank of San Mateo County, but to show the motive and intent of Falvey in securing the signatures of the Nonnenmanns to the notes in controversy. "Where the fraudulent intent of a party in the performance of an act is in issue, proof of * * * similar fraudulent acts is relevant and admissible to establish his intent or motive in the performance of the act in question, when it appears that there is such a connection between such other acts and the act in question as to authorize the inference that both are parts of one scheme or plan, in which the same motive is operative, and it is immaterial whether such other fraudulent acts occurred before or after the act in question as remoteness in point of time affects only their weight." Marlatt v. Couture, 41 N. D. 127, 169 N. W. 582; Albrecht v. Rathai, 150 Minn. 256, 185 N. W. 259. Cases of fraud are exceptions to the general rule that other offenses may not be shown. Where fraud is charged, therefore, evidence of other frauds or fraudulent representations of like character, committed by the same parties at or near the same time, is admissible. Bone v. Hayes, 154 Cal. 767, 99 P. 172; Kornblum v. Arthurs, 154 Cal. 248, 97 P. 420; Thompson v. Modern School, 183 Cal. 112, 190 P. 451.

As the issue here on the question of fraud is whether Falvey practiced a fraud in inducing the Nonnenmanns to sign the notes in question, evidence of other frauds practiced upon them at the times alleged is relevant on the question of his intent or motive. "Although a party litigant cannot be concluded, or his rights affected, by the acts or statements of strangers, yet in so far as such acts or statements furnish circumstantial evidence of relevant facts, or have any legal operation material to the subject of inquiry, evidence thereof is admissible." Liberty Bank v. Ernst (Cal. App.) 269 P. 959.

[6] Appellant complains that the following instructions were not directed to any evidence in the case: "I instruct you that, if you find from the evidence that said prior promissory notes were fully paid and canceled before the promissory notes in controversy were executed, and that the notes in controversy were not executed for the purpose of paying and canceling said prior notes, then said prior notes form no part of the consideration for the giving of the notes in controversy," and, "if you find from a preponderance of the evidence that Falvey, as cashier of said bank, withdrew and took said money from said bank, and used said money for any other purpose than for the purchase of automobiles for said Nonnenmann Motor Company, then I instruct you that the said bank was liable to the said Charles L. Nonnenmann for the wrongful diversion of the money, and your verdict must be for defendants."

As to the former instruction, it may be said that the testimony of Mann and Nonnenmann is to the effect that all notes executed to the bank were accompanied by sales contracts as security; that Falvey was intrusted with the collection of the proceeds and that these proceeds, together with the income of the business collected by Falvey, were ample to extinguish all notes that had been executed to the bank; that, when Mann withdrew from the firm, there was a final settlement between the bank and the motor company; that there was no claim that Nonnenman's name remained on any unpaid note. Mrs. Nonnenmann testified that, when the notes in question were executed, nothing was said by Falvey of any unpaid notes, and the records produced do not show any credit of $5,000 to the Mann-Nonnenmann Company.

[7] As to the latter instruction, there is no evidence that the proceeds of the two notes were deposited to the credit of the motor company. There is evidence, however, that the notes were delivered to Falvey, the cashier of the bank; that the money was not used to purchase automobiles, for which testimony shows the notes were given, and the records of the bank show no transaction involving the renewal of any notes, and the jury could, if it thought such facts justified, draw the inference that Falvey appropriated such money to his own use. Falvey having become possessed of the proceeds of the notes as cashier of the bank—and if he received the proceeds, as the testimony supporting defendants' claim shows that he did—to purchase automobiles for the motor company, he as the representative of the bank was bound to so use the proceeds. National Bank of San Mateo v. Whitney, supra.

[8] Appellant assigns the conduct of counsel for defendants in referring to the verdict of the jury in Liberty Bank v. Ernst, supra, in which the judgment was reversed, as error, asserting that it was highly prejudicial to bring before the jury the reference to this other case, with the innuendo that another jury had found Falvey guilty of fraud. The conduct complained of occurred during the cross-examination of Falvey, while he was being interrogated concerning $1,500 involved in a stock sale; the witness stating that Mr. Ernst borrowed the money from the bank to give to Mr. Nonnenmann. Counsel for defendants then asked of the witness: "Didn't the jury decide that was not so?" This being assigned as misconduct, and the court stating that this could not be gone into, counsel for respondent reiterated his reference to the verdict in the other trial as follows: "He made the same contention before another jury, and the other jury failed to see it in that light." Neither in his oral argument nor in his brief has counsel offered any justification for this improper reference to the verdict of the jury in the other case, nor do we attempt to justify it. However, as the evidence so amply supports the verdict, we feel the same result would have obtained, had this reference to the verdict of the jury in the other trial not have been made, and that the error, therefore, was not prejudicial.

The judgment is affirmed.

TITLE GUARANTEE & TRUST CO. v. HENRY et al. (Civ. 3629.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 30, 1929.

Rehearing Denied March 1, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court March 28, 1929.

1. Vendor and purchaser 🔑44—Plaintiff's attempt to write something into contract for sale of land after its execution does not lessen effect of testimony or court's right to conclusion after inspecting contract.

In action to quiet title to land claimed by defendant under contract of purchase, fact that plaintiff attempted to write something into contract by way of interlineation or red ink entry after its execution does not lessen force and effect of testimony before trial court and right of court to come to conclusion after inspection of contract.

2. Vendor and purchaser 🔑22—Omission from contract for sale of land to name street on which residence was to face held immaterial.

Where contract for sale of land provided that residence to be erected shall face front line of premises, leaving blank space for name of street, omission of name of street was wholly immaterial, since street on which premises fronted would not be changed by omission.

3. Appeal and error 🔑882(17)—Plaintiff, in action for unlawful detainer, alleging ownership in fee simple of premises, could not object to finding in accordance with allegation that defendant knew of no other interest in property.

In action to quiet title to land claimed by defendant under contract of purchase, plaintiff, alleging it was owner in fee simple of premises, could not object to finding that defendants had no notice that another had any interest in property, which finding was in accordance with plaintiff's allegations, even though finding was outside issues, since finding was equivalent that defendants had no notice that allegations of complaint were untrue.

4. Appeal and error 🔑882(17)—Pleader cannot claim that finding that allegations of complaint are true is prejudicial error, regardless whether true or not.

Whether true or untrue, a pleader cannot be heard to say that finding that allegations of his complaint are true constitutes prejudicial error.

5. Vendor and purchaser 🔑6—Trust company, claiming ownership in fee when contracting to convey premises, could not elect to disaffirm contract for violation of its agreement with its vendor.

Trust company contracting to convey property, alleging it was owner in fee simple of property, could not elect to disaffirm its contract on ground that it has violated its agreement with person from whom it obtained title so as to relieve itself from its own wrong.

6. Quieting title 🔑44(2)—Trust agreement requiring another's approval to sales by plaintiff held properly excluded in action to quiet title against purchaser from plaintiff having no knowledge of agreement or of another's interest.

In action to quiet title to property claimed by defendant under contract of purchase from plaintiff, alleging in complaint that it was owner in fee simple of property, court did not err in excluding from evidence agreement of trust entered into between plaintiff and another from whom it received title to property, whereby such other was to approve sales by plaintiff, where contract further provided that contracts by plaintiff should vest in purchaser absolute and unassailable title, and court found that defendants had no knowledge of such other person's interest in property nor of trust agreement.

7. Appeal and error 🔑837(2)—Case can be determined on its own record only without considering contrary findings of different judge in different case.

Case can only be determined on pleadings and facts and findings of trial court disclosed by record in case, and contrary findings by different trial judge in another case between different parties cannot be considered.

★Superseded by opinion of Supreme Court 280 P. 959.

8. Trial 🔑396(2)—Finding is unnecessary unless issue is appropriately presented by pleading or treated as issue.

Unless an issue is appropriately presented by pleadings or treated as an issue, finding is unnecessary.

9. Appeal and error 🔑1071(5)—Finding outside issues which is not prejudicial cannot be complained of.

If finding outside issues is not prejudicial, no cause of complaint is given.

10. Vendor and purchaser 🔑44—Contract of purchase sought to be canceled held properly found to have been delivered to purchaser, under evidence showing completion of transaction for purchase.

In action to quiet title to real property and to cancel contract of purchase, testimony by plaintiff's agent that he handed contract to defendants for inspection and not as delivery thereof, and evidence that defendants had previously had duplicate copies which they signed, and that check was given by defendant to plaintiff's agent as deposit on property, and receipt taken by defendant, and that plaintiff's officers signed contract, and that few days later defendant questioned plaintiff concerning blank in contract, which plaintiff stated was immaterial, held sufficient to support finding that contract was delivered to defendant.

11. Appeal and error 🔑837(2)—Finding, if supported by record in case, must be supported on appeal, irrespective of results in another case.

If record before District Court of Appeals is sufficient to support finding of trial court in case, finding must be supported irrespective of results reached in some other case.

12. Parties 🔑84(1)—Plaintiff seeking to quiet title and cancel contract of purchase cannot for first time on appeal object for failure to make its grantor and trustor party to action (Code Civ. Proc. § 369).

Plaintiff seeking to quiet title and cancel contract of purchase, not applying for permission to bring in as party its grantor and trustor of property, cannot on appeal raise objection that its grantor was not made party, under Code Civ. Proc. § 369.

13. Vendor and purchaser 🔑11—Plaintiff, not showing defendants' knowledge that it was only trustee when executing contract of purchase, held bound by its contract (Civ. Code, § 869).

Plaintiff seeking to quiet title in property and cancel contract of purchase, standing on its title and not showing that defendants had knowledge that it was only trustee prior to execution of contract, is bound by its contract, under Civ. Code, § 869.

14. Specific performance 🔑115—Defendants in action to quiet title and cancel contract of purchase could counterclaim for specific performance (Civ. Code, § 3367, subd. 3; Code Civ. Proc. § 1060).

In action to quiet title and to cancel contract of purchase, defendants, counterclaiming for specific performance of contract, had right to decree upholding validity of contract and declaring that, if complied with, they were entitled to conveyance under Code Civ. Proc. § 1060, and Civ. Code, § 3367, subd. 3.

15. Specific performance 🔑97(1)—Vendor and purchaser 🔑93—Specific performance of contract of purchase could not be compelled without payment of balance due, nor could contract be forfeited until due.

In action to quiet title and to cancel contract of purchase, defendants could not obtain immediate specific performance or immediate conveyance, where contract had some period to run without payment of balance due, and plaintiff could not accelerate or declare forfeiture of contract until time of payment on part of defendant had arrived.

16. Vendor and purchaser 🔑6—Plaintiff, seeking to avoid result of own wrongdoing, could not quiet title and cancel contract against bona fide purchaser under rule protecting defrauded owner.

Rule that bona fide purchaser from vendor who obtained title to property by fraud from his vendor is entitled to protection only to extent of money paid before receiving notice of fraud is not applicable to case where plaintiff, seeking to cancel contract of purchase and quiet title, was not defrauded owner, but sought to avoid results of own wrongdoing and pass burden thereof to purchaser.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by the Title Guarantee & Trust Company against Francis W. Henry and another, in which defendant named filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. W. Sargent, E. J. Vaughn, G. B. Colby, and Tanner, Odell & Taft, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

I. Henry Harris, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. Plaintiff instituted this action to obtain a decree quieting its title to certain city lots hereinafter mentioned, and to have canceled and delivered up a certain contract of purchase bearing date of February 1, 1923. The defendants had judgment, and the plaintiff appeals.

The amended complaint, which sets forth two causes of action, after alleging certain preliminary facts, pleads, in its second paragraph of its first cause of action, as follows: "That plaintiff, Title Guarantee & Trust Company, is the owner in fee simple of all that real property described as follows: Lots 188 and 189 of Tract number 2189 (otherwise known as Pellissier Square), in the city of, and county of Los Angeles, State of California, as per map recorded in book 22 at page 57 of Maps, in the office of the County Recorder of Los Angeles County." The second paragraph of plaintiff's second cause of action, so far as material here, is as follows: "That on or about February 5, 1923, the defendant Emma Summers was proposing to purchase the above-described real estate and to place the same in the name of Francis W. Henry, above mentioned as a defendant, for the sum of $27,500.00, on terms and conditions to be contained in a written contract and to be approved by one Marie Julie Pellissier. That plaintiff caused to be prepared contracts for the sale of said real estate in duplicate, a copy of which is hereto annexed marked Exhibit 'A,' and had signed the same, but said contracts were not complete or ready for delivery and had not been approved by said Marie Julie Pellissier. That on or about said date the defendant Emma Summers had deposited with plaintiff checks in the sum of $2,500.00, which said checks would be accepted and applied on account of said contract as soon as said contract should be ready for delivery. * * * That said defendant Emma Summers surreptitiously and without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiff or its said employee took one of said duplicate copies of said alleged contract and departed from the office, and is now claiming that said contract was delivered to her."

The answer of the defendants denies generally the allegations of the complaint that the defendant Francis W. Henry has no right, title, or interest in or to the property, etc.; and also denies the proposal to purchase the property referred to on terms and conditions to be inserted in a contract to be approved by one Marie Julie Pellissier; also denies that the contract was not completed, and denies the nondelivery thereof; and further denies that possession of the contract was surreptitiously taken by the defendant Emma Summers. The answer also contains a cross-complaint by the defendant Henry, setting forth the execution of the contract of sale and purchase, and asks that the plaintiff take nothing by reason of this action, that the defendant Henry have specific performance, and, generally, for such other and further relief as to the court may seem proper.

The findings of the court are to the effect that on the 1st day of February, 1923, and at the time of the execution of the contract referred to, the plaintiff (which we will hereafter call the title company) was the owner in fee simple of lots 188 and 189 in tract No. 2189 referred to in plaintiff's complaint; that on or about the 1st day of February, 1923, the plaintiff and the defendant Francis W. Henry made and entered into and executed the contract referred to in plaintiff's complaint; that thereafter, and on or about said 1st day of February, 1923, said contract having been duly executed by the plaintiff, by and through its duly authorized officers, was by the plaintiff delivered to the defendant Emma Summers as agent for defendant Francis W. Henry; that, at the time of the execution of said contract and delivery thereof, the defendant Henry paid to the plaintiff the sum of $2,500, being the amount specified as the first payment of the purchase price for said lots; that thereafter, and on or about the 17th day of March, 1923, the defendant Francis W. Henry tendered to the plaintiff the further sum of $2,500 as the second payment on said contract of purchase; that the plaintiff wrongfully repudiated said contract and refused to receive the said sum of $2,500 so tendered as the second payment on said contract. The court further found that the sum of $27,000 was an adequate consideration for the purchase of the lots referred to. The court further found, in finding No. 11, that it was not true "that on or about the 5th day of February, 1923, or at any other time, the defendant Emma Summers was proposing to purchase the above-described real estate, and to place the same in the name of defendant Francis W. Henry, for the sum of $27,500, on the terms and conditions to be contained in a written contract, and to be approved by one Marie Julie Pellissier." The court further found: "That it is true that the defendant" (evidently a misprint for 'plaintiff') "caused to be prepared contracts for the sale of said real estate, in duplicate, a copy of which is annexed to the complaint and marked Exhibit 'A,' and had signed the same." The court further found "that it is not true that said contracts were not complete or ready for delivery; but that it is true that the plaintiff made and executed said contracts with the intent to deliver the same upon the terms and conditions set forth therein, and that in truth and in fact did deliver said contract and did receive payment as provided in said contract, in the sum of $2,500; that at the time of the execution of said contract the plaintiff was the record owner in fee simple and that neither the defendant nor his agent Emma Summers were informed, had or received any notice that Marie Julie Pellissier had any interest in said property or that it was necessary for her to approve the contract between the plaintiff and the defendant Henry." Other portions of the plaintiff's complaint, including the allegation that the defendant Emma Summers surreptitiously obtained possession of the contract, are found against the plaintiff.

[1, 2] Appellant's opening brief states that the only controverted issues tendered by the pleadings are as follows: (1) Character of the ownership of the title company; (2) whether Marie Julie Pellissier had to approve the contract before it was delivered; (3) whether the contract was complete and ready for delivery; (4) whether there was a delivery of said contract; (5) whether Henry or Mrs. Summers was the true purchaser. The allegations of the complaint as to the ownership of the premises in fee simple by the title company were found to be true by the trial court. There are no allegations in the complaint that approval of the contract on the part of Marie Julie Pellissier was necessary prior to its delivery. As stated herein, the allegations contained in paragraph 2 of the plaintiff's second cause of action sets forth simply that the contract had not been approved by said Marie Julie Pellissier. It is nowhere alleged in the complaint that such approval was necessary. An inspection of the contract as tendered to the trial court was sufficient, we think, to justify the trial court in coming to the conclusion that the instrument upon its face appeared to be complete. That the plaintiff attempted to write something into the contract by way of an interlineation or red ink entry after its execution, does not in any particular lessen the force and effect of the testimony produced before the trial court, and its right to come to a conclusion after an inspection of the instrument. It is true that there is one blank space left in the contract, but the testimony introduced in the transcript shows this to be wholly immaterial. It is in the fifth paragraph of the contract where, after providing that the residence to be erected shall face the front line of the premises, namely, on (here a blank space is left for the name of the street). It is readily seen that this omission is wholly immaterial, as whether the name of the street on which the premises fronted was given or not given would not change the street upon which the premises actually fronted. And the contract itself also shows that it was approved by W. H. Taggert, assistant trust officer, following the signatures to the contract of the Title Guarantee & Trust Company, by its officers, A. F. Morlan, vice president, A. R. Kilgore, secretary, and the signature of the defendant Francis W. Henry. The seal of the corporation is also attached. The testimony of the trust officer was to the effect that Mrs. Pellissier did not O. K. all of the contracts, but that she would write a letter of approval to the title company, and that the officers of the title company would execute a contract upon the approval of the witness.

[3, 4] While the amount of the first payment stipulated in the contract of purchase was made in the way of checks, it does not appear that the plaintiff at any time objected to that form of payment or raised any objections whatever to the contract, other than, after the date of its execution and delivery thereof to the defendants, as found by the court, it sought to recall said contract for the asserted reason that it had not been approved by Mrs. Pellissier, and had not been delivered. It is also argued by appellant that the finding of the court that the defendants had no notice that Marie Julie Pellissier had any interest in the property was a finding outside of the issue; that in the language of the brief "no issue was presented, as we have before pointed out, on which a finding could be based. Without such finding, no judgment for defendants could have been entered." If no issue was tendered by the plaintiff as to whether the purchasers had notice of any interest of Mrs. Pellissier in and to the property, it is certainly not injured by the finding referred to. The plaintiff itself alleged that it was the owner in fee simple of the premises, and a finding in accordance therewith is in line with plaintiff's allegations, and the further finding that the defendants had no notice that any other person claimed an interest therein would simply be equivalent to a finding that the defendants had no notice that the allegations of the plaintiff's complaint were untrue. It hardly lies in the mouth of the plaintiff to complain of the finding of the trial court, which is simply in effect that the plaintiff's allegation of ownership in fee simple is true and correct. Whether true or untrue, a pleader cannot be heard to say that a finding that the allegations of his complaint are true constitutes prejudicial error.

[5, 6] It appears from the transcript that during the course of the trial, without any request whatever to amend its pleadings, the plaintiff attempted to introduce in evidence an agreement of trust entered into between the plaintiff and Marie Julie Pellissier in the year 1913, at the time the said Marie Julie Pellissier conveyed to the plaintiff, by an instrument of conveyance absolute in terms, the premises involved in this action. This attempt appears to have been for the purpose of showing that the agreement of trust contained a clause to the effect that the title company "should issue contracts of sale and conveyance to such person or persons, at such prices and upon such terms as it shall be hereinafter instructed by the said party of the first part," etc. And further, "that the party of the second part shall impose such restrictions, covenants and conditions in all agreements and deeds executed by it as it shall be, in writing, requested to do so by the said party of the first part." An inspection of the agreement shows further that the parties executing the same agreed as follows: "Any conveyance made by the Title Guarantee & Trust Company to the purchasers of lots shall vest in such purchasers an absolute and unassailable title, and there shall be no obligation on the part of the purchasers to see to the application of the purchase money, it being expressly understood by all parties hereto that any conveyance made by the party of the second part shall be binding upon all parties hereto, and should the party of the second part violate any of the provisions hereof, then the beneficiary shall have recourse only against the party of the second part." The trial court refused to admit this agreement in testimony, and the appellant alleges error in such ruling. There is no claim made, and there is nothing in the record indicating that any persons had knowledge of this agreement prior to its production in court, other than the title company and Mrs. Pellissier. The deed referred to conveying the premises to the title company was recorded. The trust agreement was withheld from record, and knowledge thereof was possessed only by the parties executing the same, at least so far as the record discloses. Had this agreement been admitted in testimony, we do not readily perceive that it could have influenced the judgment of the trial court in view of the seventh provision contained therein which we have quoted, whereby the parties covenanted and agreed that any conveyance made by the title company should vest in the purchaser an absolute and unassailable title. By that very provision the trustor agreed to look to the title company only in the event it violated any of the terms of the agreement. After alleging that it was the owner in fee simple of the premises contracted to be conveyed to the defendant Francis W. Henry, it did not lie in the mouth of the title company to elect to disaffirm its contract on the ground that it had violated its agreement with the person from whom it obtained title. That Mrs. Pellissier might have an action against one who had obtained either a contract of purchase or a deed of conveyance from the title company with knowledge that the title company was violating the terms of an agreement under which it was acting, is an entirely different matter. Also, that Mrs. Pellissier might maintain an action against one obtaining a contract of purchase or conveyance from the title company with knowledge that she (Mrs. Pellissier) was the beneficial owner, and that the contract was being executed or the conveyance made in violation of the terms of the trust agreement, does not aid the plaintiff in any particular. That the plaintiff had rendered itself accountable to Mrs. Pellissier does not entitle it to proceed against an innocent purchaser with whom it has entered into a contract of purchase and sale, and thus recoup itself and relieve itself from its own wrong by passing the penalty on to the intending purchaser. In view of the findings of the court that the defendants had no knowledge of the interest of Mrs. Pellissier, nor of the trust agreement, what we have stated in relation to the attempt of the appellant covers the gist of the appellant's argument.

[7] The supplemental brief filed by the appellant, showing that in an action prosecuted by Mrs. Pellissier against Francis W. Henry, Emma Summers, Paul M. Reidy, and the title company, a different trial judge had arrived at different conclusions upon conflicting testimony, cannot be considered in this case. This case can only be decided upon the pleadings and facts and the findings of the trial court disclosed by the record in this case.

[8, 9] While, as stated in the case of Frascona v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., 48 Cal. App. 135, 191 P. 968, and the numerous cases there cited, it is not necessary that the findings follow the precise language of the proceedings, "it is essential that they be so drawn that the truth or falsity of every material allegation can be demonstrated therefrom." But, unless an issue is appropriately presented by the pleadings or treated as an issue, a finding is unnecessary, and, as heretofore stated, if a finding outside of the issues is not prejudicial, no cause of complaint is given.

[10, 11] There is testimony in this case, shown by the record, justifying the trial court in finding that for some time prior to the 1st day of February, 1923, Mrs. Emma Summers applied to one Donahue, the real estate broker having charge of the sale of the two lots in controversy, to make purchase thereof; that, after some negotiations had been carried on, Mrs. Summers offered for the premises the sum of $27,500; that this offer was accepted by Mr. Donahue; a preliminary contract of purchase was executed, which contract did provide that it was subject to the approval of the owner, without naming the owner; that the agent Donahue advised the title company of the contemplated sale of the two lots; that the title company had prepared, in duplicate, a contract for the sale of said lots, and delivered the contract to Donahue, who took the duplicate copies to the residence of Mrs. Summers, where it was signed by the defendant Francis W. Henry; that at the time of the execution of the preliminary contract $500 was paid by the defendants to the agent Donahue; that, a day or two after the contract of purchase had been signed in duplicate by the defendant Henry, Mrs. Summers went to the office of the title company with a letter of introduction to the title company, given her by Mr. Donahue, and at that time tendered and delivered to the title company a cashier's check for the further sum of $2,000; that at said time the trust officer Taggert stated the contract had not been executed, proceeded to get said duplicate contract from the place where it was kept, took it to the appropriate officers, and had it signed by the title company, by its vice president and secretary, and the seal of the company attached, his own approval being indorsed upon both of the duplicate copies, the contract being signed by all parties in duplicate. The testimony of Mrs. Summers is that the contract was handed to her. The testimony of Taggert is that he handed the contract to Mrs. Summers only for inspection. The fact that Mrs. Summers and the defendant Francis W. Henry had theretofore had the duplicate copies of the contract at the residence of Mrs. Summers, where it was signed, was a fact to be taken into consideration by the trial court in weighing the testimony of whether Taggert did or did not hand the contract to Mrs. Summers simply for the purpose of inspection.

The question of delivery is the main bone of contention in this case, and, even though another trial judge has held the contrary on this question, where the testimony was conflicting, we think the following is sufficient to sustain the finding of the trial court in this case. Mrs. Emma Summers testified in this particular, in substance, as follows: Mr. Taggert was on the second floor of the Title Guarantee & Trust Company Building, in the trust department. I gave him a letter from Mr. Donahue. He said, "All right, I'll get the contract," and he got the contracts; I don't know where he got them from; he left me to go and get them; he got them right away and brought them immediately back to the desk. I gave him Mr. Henry's check for $2,000. They were not signed yet when I got in. He said (referring to Taggert), "Sit down and wait and I'll go and have the proper officers sign." I don't know whether he said the president and secretary or just "proper officers" sign, execute the contract, and finish it. I sat down in a chair and waited until he came back, and presently he came back. Mr. Morlan and Mr. Kilgore had signed the contract. The witness also testified in answer to the question: "Did he give you anything" (referring to Mr. Taggert)? "Well, I just said he handed me the contract." The witness' attention was then directed to a certain receipt, and the witness testified to the execution and delivery to her of a receipt for the $2,000. The witness further testified that at that time no one said to her that the contract had to be approved by Mrs. Pellissier. This witness testified that she went back to the office two or three days after the receipt of the contract and had a conversation with Mr. Keogh as to the blank in the contract which we have heretofore referred to, where the name of the street on which the premises fronted was not written, and was informed by Mr. Keogh that that was immaterial. From the transcript it is somewhat uncertain whether the contract was handed to Mrs. Summers before or after it was signed by the officers of the company, but what we have set forth we think is amply sufficient to sustain the finding of the court that the contract was delivered. It is true that Mr. Taggert testified that he handed the contract to Mrs. Summers only for inspection. It is true that Mr. Taggert testified that there were some questions asked by Mrs. Summers about the contract at that time relative to the street on which the lot should face, and also relative to the number of houses which should be built upon the lots, but the testimony of Mr. Keogh, Mr. Donahue, and Mr. Taggert, taken together, in relation to this might very well lead the court to the conclusion that this conversation took place two or three days after the contract was executed and delivered, and that it was then that Mr. Taggert made an interlineation in the copy of the contract in possession of the title company, and sought afterwards to obtain possession of the copy of the contract from the defendants in order that he might make the same changes therein. It is not for us to say which version is correct, but, if the record before us is sufficient to support the finding of the trial court in this case, it must be supported, irrespective of the results reached in some other case.

[12, 13] In view of section 369 of the Code of Civil Procedure, we do not think that it now lies in the mouth of the appellant to raise the objection that Mrs. Pellissier was not made a party to the action. If the appellant had thought that Mrs. Pellissier was a necessary party to the action, it should have made application for permission to bring her in as a party either as plaintiff or defendant. By the section of the Code of Civil Procedure to which we have referred, the appellant could have set up all the facts relating to the transaction, but it preferred to stand upon its naked title, and not having established to the satisfaction of the trial court that the defendants had knowledge that it was only a trustee prior to the execution of the contract, it cannot complain that so far as the title company is concerned, it must be held bound by its own contract. See, also, 25 Cal. Jur., p. 351, sec. 197, as to the right of the trustee to amend an action in his own name. Again, section 869 of the Civil Code comes to the aid of the defendants in view of the findings of the trial court. That section reads: "Where an express trust is created in relation to real property, but is not contained or declared in the grant to the trustee, or in an instrument signed by him, and recorded in the same office with the grant to the trustee, such grant must be deemed absolute in favor of purchasers from such trustee without notice, and for a valuable consideration."

[14-16] Subdivision 3 of section 3367 of the Civil Code we think a complete answer to the appellant's contention that the relief granted to the defendants is wholly void. It is there provided that the relief may be by "declaring and determining the rights of parties otherwise than by an award of damages." This is in line with section 1060 of the Code of Civil Procedure on the subject of declaratory relief. The respondents, under the two sections referred to, had a right to a decree of the court in this case upholding the validity of their contract and declaring that, if complied with, they were entitled to a conveyance. As the contract had some period of time to run, immediate specific performance or immediate conveyance could not be compelled without payment of the balance due, and, under the terms of the contract executed and delivered by the plaintiff to the defendant Henry, time was given for the payment of the balance of the purchase money, and this time appellant could not accelerate or declare a forfeiture of the contract until the time of payment on the part of Henry had arrived; nor could Henry demand conveyance until he had fully paid the purchase price of $27,500. The appellant cites a number of cases relating to the rights of a bona fide purchaser where one not having a title conveys property, which cases follow the rule "that the vendee of real estate who has received a conveyance of the title and has paid a part of the purchase money, but who, before he pays all of it, receives notice of the fact that his vendor obtained the real estate by fraud from the previous owner, is not, under ordinary circumstances, entitled to protection as a bona fide purchaser, except to the extent of the money paid by him before receiving such notice, and that the defrauded party can obtain the land from such vendee, but that he can do so only upon the condition that the vendee is reimbursed what he had paid before notice." See Henry v. Phillips, 163 Cal. 135, 140, 141, 124 P. 837, 839 (Ann. Cas. 1914A, 39). These cases are not applicable because the appellant is not in the position of a defrauded owner. It is simply in the position of a party who, according to its own argument, seeks to avoid the result of its own alleged wrongdoing and pass the burden on to the parties with whom it had contracted. Under the findings of the trial court, this does not appeal to us a good cause for the interposition of a court of equity.

Being of the opinion that the record before us in this case contains sufficient testimony to support the findings of the trial court, and that the issues material to be found have been passed upon, the judgment of the trial court must be, and it is hereby, affirmed.

GORDON et al. v. PFEIFFER et al.

1. Chattel mortgages 🔑243—Lessee's assignment of lease, to which lessors consented on conditions indorsed thereon, held not equivalent to new lease discharging chattel mortgage securing it.

Lessee's assignment of lease subject to consent of lessors, on which assignment lessors indorsed their consent on condition of assignee's agreement to pay rental called for by lease as modified, to be bound by terms and conditions thereof, that term of lease should be extended for certain period, that rental should be reduced in specified sum, that assignee should carry elevator insurance, and that assignee, as purchaser of personalty in premises, should take them subject to chattel mortgage securing lease, held not in legal effect to constitute a new lease so as to extinguish old lease and discharge first chattel mortgage.

2. Appeal and error 🔑169—Contention raised for first time on appeal is too late.

Contention raised for first time on appeal will not be considered.

3. Chattel mortgages 🔑235—Burden of proving payment of chattel mortgage was on defendant in foreclosure action.

In action to foreclose chattel mortgage, burden of proving payment of mortgage was on defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Louis H. Ward, Judge.

Action by Philip Gordon and another against Elsie Pfeiffer and others. From the judgment, named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Gerald C. Halsey and Frederic T. Leo, both of San Francisco (Stanley A. Weigel, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Jacob Samuels and Oscar Samuels, both of San Francisco (A. Dal. Thomson, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

KOFORD, P. J. [1] Plaintiffs and respondents by this action foreclosed a chattel mortgage upon hotel furniture. The mortgage was executed by Reynaud and wife as security for the faithful performance of a lease under which they operated the hotel. The appellant, Elsie Pfeiffer, held a second chattel mortgage upon the same furniture, and upon this appeal claims that, by virtue of an assignment of the lease to defendant Rawlinson by the lessee and by virtue of the consent to the said assignment given by the lessors adding certain conditions, in legal effect the original lease secured by the said first chattel mortgage was entirely canceled and a new one took its place which was not secured by the first chattel mortgage. For this reason appellant claims that her mortgage should rank first instead of second as decreed by the trial court.

The term of the lease was from March 23, 1925, to October 31, 1930. Reynaud, the original lessee, assigned to Moore after executing the first chattel mortgage. Moore then executed the second mortgage to appellant, Elsie Pfeiffer. About six months later Moore assigned the lease to defendant Marie Rawlinson, and the plaintiffs and respondents, being then the owners of the hotel premises as well as the owners and holders of the first mortgage, consented to said assignment in writing with conditions.

Appellant's argument is divided into three parts, the second and third depending upon the first, which is supported by no citation of authority: First, that the assignment and consent was in reality a new lease. Second, that the effect of the new lease was necessarily to extinguish the old one. Third, that with the old one extinguished and a new one made, the first mortgage, which was given as security for the old lease, was thereby discharged. There are three things in the consent to the assignment which appellant states makes of it a new lease. First, the new tenant took until December 31, 1931, instead of October 31, 1930. Second, the monthly rental was reduced. Third, a definite amount of elevator insurance was required of the new tenant.

The assignment was in the usual form. In effect it was, I, Leo. P. Moore, do hereby assign subject to the consent of respondents herein. At the end of this document respondents indorsed their consent, reading in part as follows: "We, Philip Gordon and Sylvia Gordon, do hereby consent to the foregoing assignment subject to the following terms and conditions: That the said Marie Rawlinson shall agree to pay the rental called for by said lease, as hereinafter modified, and agree to be bound by all the terms, conditions and agreements in the said lease contained on the part of the lessee to be kept and performed with the same force and effect as if she were named therein as lessee; * * * that the term of said lease shall be extended to and including the 31st day of December, 1931, and the rental therefor shall be as follows (follows reduction of rent); * * * that she shall carry elevator insurance in the amount of five thousand ($5,000.00) dollars, etc., * * * and that said assignee, as the purchaser of the personal property in said premises, shall take the same subject to the chattel mortgage given to secure the terms of said lease with the same force and effect as if she were named therein as mortgagor." To this was attached the acceptance of the new tenant: "I, Marie Rawlinson, do hereby accept the foregoing assignment subject to all the terms and conditions contained in said assignment and the consent of the said lessors, * * * and agree to perform all the terms, conditions and agreements in said lease set forth and contained and the modifications thereof in said consent set forth, and all the other terms in said consent specified."

Appellant's statement, unsupported by the citation of any authority, that this transaction amounts to an execution of a new lease, seems to be entirely refuted by a bare statement of the evidence. There is no new lease, but only an assignment of the old one with the consent of the landlord. The additional term given the assignee is not claimed to be secured by the first mortgage. The reduction of rent, of course, cannot harm the second mortgagee nor make a new lease. The provision requiring elevator insurance which was added at the time of the assignment must be considered in the light of the fact that the lease already had this provision, except that the blank space provided in the document for the amount was left unfilled.

[2, 3] Appellant also advances the point that the evidence fails to show that the sums which respondents' mortgage secures have not been paid. This point is raised for the first time on appeal, and for that reason alone is not entitled to consideration. The burden of proving nonpayment, however, is not upon the plaintiffs, but on the defendant. This is the general rule for actions based upon debt, and it has not been confined in its application to a defendant who is the principal debtor. In Blinn Lumber Co. v. McArthur, 150 Cal. 610, 89 P. 436, the burden of proving payment of a mortgage was put on an intervener who had purchased the mortgage premises. The appellant here was defendant and cross-complainant. In Barrett-Hicks Co. v. Glas, 14 Cal. App. 289, 111 P. 760, the burden of proving payment of a subcontractor's lien claim was held to be upon the defendant who was owner of the building. The rule has also been often applied to the representative of a deceased debtor. Dyer v. Minturn, 47 Cal. App. 1, 189 P. 1046; Light v. Stevens, 159 Cal. 288, 113 P. 659. In this case there is no better reason to except appellant from the general rule of burden of proof of payment than existed in the cited cases.

WECK v. SUCHER et ux. (Civ. 6535.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 26, 1929.

1. Appeal and error 🔑957(1)—Appellate courts may disturb trial court's action in relieving defendant from default judgment only in plain cases of abuse of discretion.

Appellate courts may disturb action of trial court in relieving defendant of default judgment only in very plain cases of abuse of discretion, especially where relief is granted after having been promptly sought, and it does not appear that plaintiff sustained any prejudice thereby.

2. Judgment 🔑143(3)—Trial court has great latitude in relieving defendant having substantial defense from default inadvertently permitted (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Default inadvertently permitted in cause by defendant having substantial defense presents case in which great lattitude should be extended the trial court in setting default aside, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

3. Judgment 🔑143(12)—Where defendants having meritorious defense filed answer one day late because of mistake regarding date of service, and promptly applied for relief, court properly set default aside (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

In action to recover sum received by defendants as plaintiff's agents which they agreed to return on demand, where defendants, having meritorious defense, in that full and final settlement had been made, filed their answer one day late because of mistake as to date of service of summons, and on same day default was entered defendants moved to set default aside, and motion was speedily heard and determined, and slight delay did not affect plaintiff's opportunity to establish his case, trial court did not abuse discretion in setting aside default judgment, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

4. Judgment ⚷151, 173—Moving papers and order relating to vacating judgment rendered by court were sufficient to vacate default entered by clerk (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Moving papers and order relating to matter of vacating judgment rendered by court were sufficient to vacate default judgment entered by clerk, where terms of motion and contents of documents attached adequately apprised plaintiff that defendants were seeking to obtain complete relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action by Walter Weck against Gustave Sucher and wife. Plaintiff recovered a default judgment, and, from an order granting the defendant's motion to be relieved of default, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Carl W. Mueller, of San Francisco, for appellant.

H. M. Anthony, of San Francisco, for respondents.

KNIGHT, J. Plaintiff appeals from an order granting defendants' application to be relieved from a default in failing to answer plaintiff's complaint. One of the grounds urged for reversal is that in granting said application the trial court abused its discretion.

The facts set forth in the affidavits filed by defendants in support of their application were not controverted, and may be stated as follows: The summons in the action was served on defendants on March 11, 1927, and consequently the statutory ten-day period within which they were required to appear and answer the complaint expired on March 21, 1927. The answer was in fact filed the following morning about 10:30 o'clock by defendants' attorney, but default had already been entered. The answer had been prepared and verified, and was ready to be filed within the statutory time, but was not presented for filing until the day following because of a mistaken belief on the part of defendants that the summons had been served upon them on March 12, 1927; and said attorney did not learn of the mistake until he called at the county clerk's office on the morning of March 22, 1927, to file said answer.

In Brasher v. White, 53 Cal. App. 545, 200 P. 657, and Reidy v. Scott, 53 Cal. 69, the facts were substantially the same as those presented here, and in each case the trial court refused to vacate the default; but on appeal the order of refusal was reversed, the court holding that the defaulting party was entitled to have the default set aside.

Plaintiff in support of his position has cited a number of cases to the effect that forgetfulness and like instances of inexcusable neglect on the part of a defaulting party or his attorney are insufficient grounds upon which to base an order vacating the default, but we do not deem those cases in point for the reason that here the facts show that within three days after being served with the summons, defendants consulted their attorney and laid before him all of the facts of the controversy, and thereupon said attorney prepared an answer, had it verified, and was ready to file the same before the end of the ten-day period; but, as stated, owing to the fact that he had been mistakenly misinformed by his clients as to the date of the service, he believed that the statutory period for filing the same did not expire until March 22, 1927. Therefore, as held in the two cases hereinabove cited, the failure to answer within the period fixed by the statute cannot be said to be the result of indifference or lack of diligence on the part of the defendants or their attorney, but was due solely to the mistake on the part of the defendants as to the date of the service of the summons.

[1, 2] Aside, however, from the controlling effect of the two cases above mentioned, the law in this state is well established that only in very plain cases of abuse of discretion may the courts of appellate jurisdiction disturb the action of a trial court in a matter of this character; and especially is this so where the relief is granted after having been promptly sought, and it does not appear that the plaintiff has sustained any prejudice thereby. County of Los Angeles v. Lewis, 179 Cal. 398, 177 P. 154; Berri v. Rogero, 168 Cal. 736, 145 P. 95. The policy of the law is, say the courts, that every case should be heard on its merits, and finally decided in consonance therewith, and that therefore a broad discretion is vested in courts of original jurisdiction in removing such obstacles and impediments as tend to prevent a full and fair hearing, and that a default inadvertently permitted in a cause by a party having a substantial defense presents a case in which great latitude should be extended to the trial court in setting the default aside. Hitchcock v. McElrath, 69 Cal. 634, 11 P. 487. The case of Brasher v. White, supra, restates the rules as follows: "In Mitchell v. California, etc., S. S. Co., 156 Cal. 576, 578, 579 [105 P. 590, 592], the court, in reversing an order denying defendant's motion for relief under section 473, said: 'The tendency of this court has always been to relieve parties from their defaults and mistakes, upon proper showing, to the end that matters may be heard upon the merits. Treating of this subject and particularly of the interpretation of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the following language was used by this court in Nicoll v. Weldon, 130 Cal. 667 [63 P. 64]: "Section 473 * * * is a remedial provision, and is to be liberally construed so as to dispose of cases upon their substantial merits, and to give to the party claiming in good faith to have a substantial defense to the action, an opportunity to present it. (Buell v. Emerich, 85 Cal. 116 [24 P. 644]; Harbaugh v. Honey Lake, etc., Water Co., 109 Cal. 70 [41 P. 792]; Melde v. Reynolds, 129 Cal. 308 [61 P. 932].) It is for this reason that we more readily listen to an appeal from an order refusing to set aside a default than where the motion has been granted, since in such case the defendant may be deprived of a substantial right, whereas it may be assumed, if nothing to the contrary is shown, that the plaintiff will be able at any time to establish his cause of action. If, for any reason, he will be unable to do so, that fact should be made to appear; but if he is merely subjected to delay or inconvenience by having the default set aside, he can be compensated therefor by the terms which the court would impose as a condition to granting the motion."' In addition to the authorities above mentioned, we cite the following upon the proposition in hand: Vinson v. Los Angeles Pac. R. R. Co., 147 Cal. 479, 483 [82 P. 53]; O'Brien v. Leach, 139 Cal. 220 [72 P. 1004, 96 Am. St. Rep. 105]; Watson v. San Francisco & Humboldt Bay R. R. Co., 41 Cal. 17; Grady v. Donahoo, 108 Cal. 211 [41 P. 41]; Jergins v. Schenck, 162 Cal. 747, 748 [124 P. 426]."

[3] The record in the case before us discloses that on the very day the default was entered defendants served and filed the necessary moving papers to set the default aside, and that the motion made in that behalf was speedily heard and determined, and defendants were required to pay the costs. Moreover, there is no claim made that the slight delay caused by the proceeding in any way affected plaintiff's opportunity to establish his case on trial. The record also shows that defendants are not seeking to defeat plaintiff's action upon technical grounds, but are interposing a meritorious defense. With respect thereto, it appears that plaintiff is suing to recover $2,500; the complaint alleging in two counts that defendants, as plaintiff's agents, received from plaintiff $2,000 and household furnishings of the value of $500, which, the complaint alleges, they agreed to return on demand, but failed so to do. The answer reveals that said claim grows out of the sale of an apartment house business, and the substance of the defense pleaded therein is that a full and final settlement has been had between the parties, and that consequently there is nothing whatever due plaintiff. In the foregoing state of the record it is evident that no substantial grounds exist upon which to base a conclusion that the trial court abused its discretion in allowing the case to be tried on the merits.

[4] Further contention is made that the moving papers and the order based thereon relate exclusively to the matter of vacating the judgment rendered by the court, and consequently do not affect the default entered by the clerk. Plaintiff did not question the scope of the motion at the time it was presented and determined; the bill of exceptions reciting merely that he appeared and opposed the granting of the motion upon the grounds of an insufficient showing under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. However, even assuming that he may do so now, we find no merit in the point because the terms of said motion and the contents of the documents attached thereto adequately apprised plaintiff that defendants were seeking to obtain complete relief under section 473 from the effect of their default, and in our opinion the order subsequently made by the court pursuant to said motion is legally sufficient, in form and substance, to grant such relief.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

CHANDLER et al. v. HOLLINGSWORTH et al. (Civ. 3638.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 29, 1929.

1. Specific performance 🔑28(1), 31—Incomplete, uncertain, or indefinite contract will not be specifically enforced (Civ. Code, § 3390).

A contract that is incomplete, uncertain, or indefinite in its material terms will not be specifically enforced in equity, as recognized by Civ. Code, § 3390.

2. Specific performance 🔑13—Parties cannot be ordered to convey property to which they hold no title.

Defendants in action for specific performance cannot be ordered to convey property to which they hold no title, though liable at law in damages for breach of contract to convey free and clear of all incumbrances.

3. Specific performance 🔑28(2), 31—Contract by part owners of beneficial interest to convey entire tract to trustee to operate under trust agreement not yet drawn, with understanding that property was to be improved, held too indefinite and incomplete for specific enforcement.

Contract by part owners of beneficial interest in land to convey entire tract, "free and clear of all incumbrances," to named trustee, who was to operate under trust agreement to be drawn, with understanding that property was to be improved with streets, water system, etc., and tunnel running into it, if satisfactory arrangements could be made to purchase, or acquire right of way over another's property, out of proceeds of sale and bond issue, held too indefinite and incomplete to permit of its specific enforcement, in view of Civ. Code, § 3390.

4. Specific performance 🔑75—Court will not enter specific performance decree, necessarily so general and vague as to require superintendence and direction, with many appeals.

A court of equity will not enter a decree for specific performance, which must necessarily be so general and vague as to commit court to course of superintendence and direction, with many appeals thereto for interpretation.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Fleming, Judge.

Action by Harry Chandler and others against W. I. Hollingsworth and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Charles R. Morfoot and J. M. McCroskey, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

J. Wiseman Macdonald, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHIELDS, Justice pro tem. This is an action for specific performance of an agreement set forth in Exhibit A and attached to and made a part of plaintiffs' amended complaint.

It appears that the defendants Hollingsworth and Miles were part owners of a tract of about 1,000 acres of land in the city of Los Angeles. At the time of the execution of the writing known as Exhibit A, the legal title to this tract of land stood in the name of Title Guarantee & Trust Company, as trustee. The beneficial interest in the property stood, an undivided one-half in W. I. Hollingsworth and Hattie G. Hollingsworth as joint tenants, a one-quarter such interest in J. H. Miles and Sue A. Miles as joint tenants, and the remaining one-quarter interest in Marion O. Hooker. Later, and after the execution of this writing, the Hooker interest was acquired in equal shares by W. I. Hollingsworth and J. H. Miles. The plantiffs, designated in the writing as "the syndicate," were, as stated in appellants' brief, "well-known subdividers" who had "been successful in the marketing of various subdivisions in and around Los Angeles."

The contract or writing known as Exhibit A was executed April 12, 1923. It was entitled "Hollingsworth-Miles-Hooker Deal," and was signed by all of the plaintiffs and by defendants Hollingsworth and Miles. It outlined a plan by which Hollingsworth and Miles were to convey the 1,000-acre tract to a trustee, who was to hold it and to perform certain offices for the benefit of the parties to the agreement. The trustee was to hold the property and to execute its authority under a "trust agreement to carry out the within provisions," and such provisions should be "the instructions to the trustee to draw the trust agreement." The property was to be subdivided, improved in a substantial way, and resold by the plaintiffs. The work of such subdivision and improvement was to be done under the direction of plaintiffs Shoults and Woodruff. The improvements were to be paid for by a bond issue upon the property. General provisions were made for the payment of all sums realized from sales of the property, to the trustee, and the payment out of such sums, of expenses of the conduct of the business, by the trustee. References were made to releases of the several parcels as they might be sold and acceptance by the defendants Hollingsworth and Miles of trust deeds "on short terms" in lieu of money, for such releases. The beneficial interest in the trust to be created is stated to be 75 per cent. in the plaintiffs and 25 per cent. in the defendants Hollingsworth and Miles. Further details of this agreement need not here be recited.

Upon appropriate issues raised by the answer to the plaintiffs' complaint, the cause went to trial, and judgment was rendered for the defendants. The court found that the defendants Hollingsworth and Miles were not the sole owners of the land mentioned in Exhibit A, but that the ownership thereof was as hereinabove stated. It was further found that this writing was not intended to be a contract of purchase or sale, but a mere memorandum of a scheme to be later worked out provided the parties could agree; that plaintiffs never at any time requested defendants to carry out the provisions of the contract; that plaintiffs never kept or performed any of the terms or conditions of the contract by them to be performed; that plaintiffs abandoned the contract, and that defendants accepted such abandonment; that plaintiffs paid no consideration for the contract; that it was not just or reasonable as to defendants. Other findings need not be recited. Indeed, the above are referred to only to indicate the broad foundation upon which the judgment rests.

Among its conclusions of law the court found "that said memorandum agreement dated April 12, 1923, is so indefinite and uncertain, that the exact terms and conditions thereof cannot be ascertained."

If this conclusion was correctly reached, it would finally dispose of the case. It would support the judgment of the court denying the plaintiffs' plea for specific performance, and render unnecessary any discussion of other questions presented by this appeal. About its correctness and the propriety of the judgment herein, it would seem that there can be no question.

[1] Section 3390 of the Civil Code, in enu-

merating contracts which cannot be specifically performed, specifies as one of them "an agreement, the terms of which are not sufficiently certain to make the precise act which is to be done clearly ascertainable." The law to this effect is as well settled, as is any principle within our jurisprudence.

In Klein v. Markarian, 175 Cal. 37, 165 P. 3, the court say, quoting abundant authority: "It is an old and unquestioned rule of equity that, whatever right there may be to maintain an action at law for damages, a contract will not be specifically enforced unless it be complete and certain in its terms." "A contract that is incomplete, uncertain or indefinite in its material terms will not be specifically enforced in equity." Beal v. United Properties Co., 46 Cal. App. 287, 189 P. 346. Amplification of this rule and illustrations of its application are countless, and readily found. See Buckmaster v. Bertram, 186 Cal. 674, 200 P. 610; Stanton v. Singleton, 126 Cal. 657, 59 P. 146, 47 L. R. A. 334; Andersen v. Charles, 52 Cal. App. 290, 198 P. 641; Dillingham v. Dahlgren, 52 Cal. App. 330, 198 P. 832; Pomeroy's Specific Performance (3d Ed.) § 145.

[2, 3] Tested by this rule, the contract in question falls far short of the definiteness and detail which would permit of its specific execution. In the first place, it might be noted that under the contract Hollingsworth and Miles are to convey all of the 1,000 acres of land to the trustee named in the contract, "free and clear of all incumbrances." This part of the contract clearly cannot be enforced, as these defendants are without title to a substantial interest in the property. At law they might be held to liability under such a provision and assessed in damages for its breach. But, in an action in specific performance, they cannot be ordered to convey property to which they hold no title. Appellants contend that they should be made to convey such interest as they do hold to the trustee. The answer to this is that, if they were required to do this in performance of their contract, the appellants would be wholly unable to perform their reciprocal obligations. They could not lay out streets, subdivide acreage, or sell lots on property in which other parties owned substantial interests; they could not record maps or plats of their subdivisions, nor dedicate streets or highways.

The contract or memoranda provides that the property is to be conveyed by the defendants to a trustee who is to operate "under a trust agreement." What is this agreement to contain? This is a matter of supreme importance to the defendants, who are asked to convey a very valuable property to the trustee. The trust agreement should define their rights and specify and limit the powers of the trustee.

This agreement has not been drawn. Several drafts of proposed agreements were drawn by plaintiffs and submitted to defendants and rejected by them as not satisfactory. Under the contract, the only specification with reference to what the trust agreement should contain is that it is provided that such agreement should "carry out the within provisions" and the further statement that "the within shall be the instructions to the trustee to draw the trust agreement." If the "within" were sufficiently definite, the plaintiffs need not have submitted to defendants their several drafts of a proposed trust agreement, but could have made the agreement to express the covenants of Exhibit A and demanded its acceptance.

They submitted no form of proposed trust agreement with their pleading, and, had the court desired to order specific performance herein, it would have been impossible for it to frame such an agreement from the vague and indefinite terms of the contract.

The contract, Exhibit A, provided that "it is understood that this property is to be developed and improved with streets, water system, electricity, gas, paved boulevards, a tunnel running through the extension of Beachwood Drive into the property, provided satisfactory arrangements can be made with Mack Sennett either to purchase his property or for a right of way over the same, possibly a sewer system and schools." It must be remembered that these improvements are to be made on property alleged to be owned by defendants, and to be paid for out of the proceeds of its sale. Where were the streets to run? What was to be their number and the area covered by them? How were they to be improved, and of what material to be constructed? Where was the tunnel to be dug, and who was to make the "arrangement" with Mack Sennett, and upon what terms? "Possibly" there were to be schools and a sewer system. Who was to determine this?

The contract further provides "it being understood that the above mentioned improvements are to be put in and paid for by a 7% serial bond issue upon the property. This syndicate is to arrange for the financing and disposing of same."

[4] Omitting any question as to the issuance of bonds on such undivided interest in the land as the defendants own and could convey, what is to be the amount of the bonds, their denomination, their period of maturity? When is the interest on the bonds to be paid, and, in case of default, what are to be the conditions upon which the bondholders might foreclose upon the property? Some of these objections might be obviated by a reasonable construction, but together they constitute such an absence of agreement by the parties to the contract as a court of equity would not undertake to supply. Beal v. United Properties Co., 46 Cal. App. 287, 189 P. 346. Other omissions might be stated as the amount and cost of improvements to be made, when payments are to be made to the owners of the land, and how lots are to be sold, and upon what terms. The court should well hesitate to commit owners of a great property to the hazards of such an agreement. If any decree were to be entered herein in favor of the plaintiffs, it would have to be so general and vague as to commit the court to a course of superintendence and direction, with many appeals to the court for its interpretation; and this a court of equity will not undertake. Stanton v. Singleton, 126 Cal. 657, 59 P. 146, 47 L. R. A. 334; Crane v. Roach, 29 Cal. App. 584, 156 P. 375; Pomeroy on Specific Performance (3d Ed.) § 312; Poultry Producers of Southern California v. Barlow, 189 Cal. 289, 208 P. 93.

We see no error in the rulings rejecting evidence offered to "explain" the contract.

The judgment is affirmed.

LYNCH et al. v. GAGNON et al. (Civ. 3658.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 30, 1929.

1. Appeal and error 🔑882(5)—Defendant, filing cross-complaint raising issues sufficient to support judgment, cannot complain that complaint did not state cause of action (Code Civ. Proc. § 1060).

Defendant, filing a cross-complaint in which among other things he asked for declaratory relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 1060, and which raised issues sufficient to support judgment, cannot complain after judgment that the complaint did not state a cause of action and was therefore no support for the judgment without regard to whether the filing of an answer after a general demurrer had been sustained operated so as to revive the complaint.

2. Brokers 🔑10—Employment of member of syndicate as exclusive sales agent for sale of syndicate property held not coupled with interest and therefore irrevocable.

Employment of member of syndicate, transferring option for an interest in syndicate, as exclusive sales agent for sale of syndicate property was not an employment coupled with an interest and therefore irrevocable; it being necessary to constitute power irrevocable that terms of its grant must be so clear as not to require interpretation.

3. Master and servant 🔑8(1), 20—Employment for no specified length of time is ordinarily only at will of employer, and is not irrevocable.

An employment for no specified length of time is ordinarily only at the will of the employer, and, even where based upon a consideration, is not irrevocable; the employer in such case having the power to discharge the agent at any time, although right to revoke depends upon circumstances.

4. Brokers 🔑10—Employers applying to court of equity in aid of power to discharge sales agent must show right to discharge.

Employers, in applying to a court of equity in aid of their power to discharge exclusive sales agent, must show more than a mere power, in that they must show a right to discharge.

5. Master and servant 🔑30(1)—Employment based on consideration can be terminated only where reasonably just and proper.

An employment based upon a consideration can only be rightfully terminated under conditions which render it reasonably just and proper to do so.

6. Brokers 🔑10—Execution of bond by exclusive sales agent as member of syndicate rather than by reason of sales agency did not prevent his removal.

Where bond executed by exclusive sales agent for syndicate property to trustee and to county, saving them harmless against charges for improvement of land and other purposes, was as a member of the syndicate rather than because of sales agency, the fact that he had so executed the bond would not prevent his removal, since, in case of any promises by remaining members of syndicate in relation to execution of such bond, the promises could be enforced in any appropriate form.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Bertin A. Weyl, Judge.

Action by Thomas R. Lynch and others against Ernest E. Gagnon and others, wherein defendant named filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

Leonard S. Barnes, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Thomas R. Lynch, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, and Phillip C. Sterry, all of Los Angeles (William R. Dennis, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondents plaintiffs.

H. L. Carnahan and J. M. Stevens, both of Los Angeles, for respondents defendants.

SHIELDS, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment growing out of facts of which the following is a sufficient statement: In July, 1924, the defendant Gagnon, doing business under the name of Affiliated Enterprises, secured an option on a tract of about 13½ acres of land in the city of Los Angeles. To exercise the option and purchase the land, he proceeded to organize a "syndicate," to which he transferred his option, and which proceeded to purchase the property. The plaintiffs were members of the syndicate as was Gagnon; his interest being given to him as part of the consideration for the transfer of his option. The parties purchased the land with a view to its subdivision, improvement, and resale. The title to the property was to be conveyed to the Bank of America, as trustee, to hold for the beneficiaries, and to perform for their benefit the countless duties connected with conducting the business of the syndicate, collecting its money, paying its debts, and similar details. To effect all of these purposes and to define the rights and duties of the parties, the members of the syndicate executed among themselves a "syndicate agreement," in which among other things, it was provided that the property should be conveyed to the Bank of America, which was thereupon to execute a "trust agreement," defining the details of the trust.

The syndicate agreement contained as one of its many provisions subdivision 8, which read, "The said Trustee shall appoint Affiliated Investment Co. (operating under a declaration of trust) sole and exclusive selling agent for the said property at a commission of twenty-five (25%) per cent." Upon the conveyance of the property to the Bank of America, it proceeded, on the 12th day of March, 1924, to execute the "declaration of trust" provided for in the syndicate agreement.

Following the instruction contained in this latter agreement, the trustee included in its declaration the following: "It is understood by and between all of the parties hereto, that Ernest E. Gagnon, doing business under the name of Affiliated Enterprises, shall be and he is hereby appointed the sole and exclusive selling agents for the property, hereinbefore described."

Another provision of the declaration of trust was that "for all of the purposes of this trust a managing committee shall be chosen from among the syndicate members, consisting of three persons, of which Ernest E. Gagnon, or his successors, shall be one, and a notice in writing of the names of the persons chosen for said committee, or any change thereof, shall be deposited with the trustee by Ernest E. Gagnon, or his successor, and * * * the trustee may take the written instructions of a majority of said committee in all matters pertaining to this trust." This declaration of trust was signed by the trustee, and by the members of the syndicate, including the defendant Gagnon. Differences arose between some of the members of the syndicate and their selling agent, Gagnon, and, growing out of this condition, the two members of the managing committee above referred to, other than Gagnon, notified in writing the trustee Bank of America, that on May 4, 1925, the agency of Ernest E. Gagnon was rescinded, effective May 12, 1925. The trustee was instructed to consider the agency as "rescinded and terminated." Gagnon denied the power of the syndicate to discharge him, and, the trustee bank refusing to appoint a successor to him, this action was begun June 5, 1925.

The complaint prays for an injunction against Gagnon preventing him from exercising his previous agency rights, and for a mandatory injunction compelling the Bank of America to cancel the appointment of Gagnon, and to appoint such other broker as a majority of the managing committee should name. To this complaint defendant Gagnon filed a general and a special demurrer. These demurrers were sustained July 20, 1925. Plaintiffs did not amend their complaint, and on the 29th day of October, 1925, defendant Gagnon filed an answer to the complaint, to which his demurrer had previously been sustained, and filed as well a cross-complaint in which he asked for independent relief.

The action in due time went to trial, and the judgment appealed from was rendered. The judgment followed the prayer of the complaint, and directed the bank to appoint as selling agent the nominee of a majority of the managing committee, and to remove the defendant Gagnon from his employment as such.

Appellant's first contention is that the complaint does not state a cause of action, and that there is therefore no support for the judgment. It will be recalled that a general demurrer had been sustained to the complaint prior to the filing of defendant's answer. Did defendant's answer revive the complaint?

If defendant had filed his answer prior to the decision on his demurrer, it would have operated as a waiver of all grounds of demurrer, except that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Booth v. Chapman, 59 Cal. 149; Bancroft's Code Pleading § 721; Id., § 732. We can see no reason why answering after such decision should not have the same effect. "In order to take advantage of the ruling sustaining a demurrer or motion, the party must stand upon his pleading." Bancroft's Code Pleading, § 723. Appellant does not go so far as to contend that, because a general demurrer had once been sustained to the complaint, there was thereafter no valid existing complaint remaining in the case. He seems to concede that in the circumstances the question of its sufficiency as stating facts was before the trial court, but insists that the court erred in holding it to be sufficient, or in receiving evidence upon it, upon the assumption that it was sufficient. We think that the complaint did state facts sufficient to justify the relief asked and the particular judgment rendered. But such a determination is not necessary to the proper support of the judgment. Defendant with his answer filed a cross-complaint, in which, among other things, he asked for declaratory relief, under section 1060 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Plaintiffs answered this cross-complaint, and later the action went to trial on the issues growing out of both the complaint and the cross-complaint.

The complaint is undoubtedly confusing and uncertain as to the theory upon which it proceeds, and defendant could safely have stood upon the judgment sustaining his special demurrer. Apparently irrelevant matters were pleaded and issues raised which were not appropriate to the action.

At the trial, over the objection of the defendant, evidence was heard upon all of these matters, and findings were made thereon. But admitting such irrelevant matter, and findings to have been made upon irrelevant issues, the defendant Gagnon was not injured thereby. The complaint did state Gagnon's employment, the appointment and existence of the "managing committee," the neglect of his duties by Gagnon, and his inattention thereto, the termination of his employment by the "managing committee," and the further statement that the trustee and Gagnon failed to act upon such dismissal, and, finally, the prayer for a judgment enforcing such dismissal. There was evidence in support of these allegations, and appropriate findings thereon. As the judgment rendered was clearly the proper one upon this evidence, and these findings alone, evidence and findings upon other, even irrelevant issues which could not have affected this judgment, may be disregarded.

But defendant's vigorous objection to the complaint herein, and to its imperfections, would avail him nothing, even if sustained.

[1] Disregarding the complaint, the action still subsisted as to the issues raised by the cross-complaint and the answer thereto. Mott v. Mott, 82 Cal. 413, 22 P. 1140, 1142; Warner v. Darrow, 91 Cal. 309, 27 P. 737; Bancroft's Code Pleading, § 740. As the judgment was well within the issues, and was supported by findings directly thereon, defendant cannot complain of its lack of foundation.

He asked that his contract of exclusive employment be interpreted. The matter was heard, evidence was taken, and the court found that "the exclusive sales agency held by defendant Gagnon, is for no specified period of time," and as a matter of law that such sales agency "was and is a revocable agency."

The court further found that Gagnon had not properly discharged his duties as such sales agent and that the "managing committee" had discontinued his employment and had notified the trustee to so discontinue the same; and the court thereupon decreed that the trustee act in pursuance of the direction of the managing committee. Defendant, by his plea for declaratory relief, raised these issues, and he cannot now claim that they were not before the court, nor that the court had no jurisdiction to decide them. San Joaquin Brick Co. v. Mulcahy, 58 Cal. App. 295, 208 P. 351.

[2-4] Defendant's next contention is that his employment was coupled with an interest and was therefore irrevocable. It will be recalled that defendant obtained an option for the purchase of the tract of land involved herein, and effected the organization of a syndicate to purchase it. Upon certain payments made by the syndicate, the owner of the property conveyed it to the Bank of America to hold in trust for the members of the syndicate. In consideration for his services in purchasing the property for the syndicate, or in consideration of his option, defendant was given an interest in the syndicate and a beneficial interest in the trust, and was given employment as the exclusive sales agent for the sale of the syndicate property. Such an employment is not coupled with an interest. 1 Cal. Jur. 707; 2 Cor. Jur. 531. The writings out of which the agency grew do not purport to create an irrevocable employment. To constitute a power irrevocable, the terms of its grant must be so clear as not to require interpretation. Barr v. Schroeder, 32 Cal. 609. It might be noted in passing that defendant's whole beneficial interest as a selling agent was contingent. Section 9 of the syndicate agreement provides that the members of the syndicate might at any time sell any unsold lots belonging to the syndicate. Gagnon's employment, or, at least, any reward growing out of it was wholly contingent upon the failure of the other members of the syndicate to make sales under this section. The employment was for no specified length of time. Such an employment is ordinarily only at the will of the employer. San Joaquin, etc., Co. v. West, 94 Cal. 399, 29 P. 785; Easton v. Millington, 105 Cal. 49, 38 P. 509; 1 Cal. Jur. 702. Even where the employment is based upon a consideration, it is not irrevocable. 1 Cal. Jur. 708. In such a case the employer has the power to discharge the agent at any time, but the right to revoke depends upon circumstances. Roth v. Moeller, 185 Cal. 415, 197 P. 62; Boehm v. Spreckels, 183 Cal. 239, 191 P. 5. So, in the case before us, the managing committee and the syndicate had the power to discharge defendant as they did, and with the exercise of such a power the courts have no authority to interfere. But, where the employment is based upon a consideration, as in this case, and the plaintiffs apply to a court of equity in aid of their power to discharge, they must show more than a mere power; they must show a right to discharge.

[5, 6] An employment based upon a consideration can only be rightfully terminated under conditions which render it reasonably just and proper to do so. Boehm v. Spreckels, 183 Cal. 239, 191 P. 5. Here the court found neglect and inattention to duty on the part of the defendant. This finding justifies the judgment of the court, and the determination that the act of the managing committee and of the syndicate in terminating defendant's agency, was a rightful exercise of their power. Appellant contends further that his removal after he had given bonds to the trustee and to the county of Los Angeles, saving them harmless against charges for the improvement of the tract of land, and other purposes, would be unjust. But the giving of these bonds was a thing apart from his sales agency. He was not required to give the bond to the trustee as sales agent. He gave it as a member of the syndicate. He still remains a member of the syndicate. The provision of the declaration of trust under which it was given was that "the beneficiaries herein shall furnish to the trustee a bond," etc. If any promises were made to defendant and his fellow surety, McNamee, to induce them to assume the full burden of these bonds, instead of their being joined in by all the remaining members of the syndicate, these promises may be enforced in any appropriate form. But the giving of these bonds no more affected the status of Gagnon as a sales agent, or changed the nature of his tenure, than they served to confer such a status upon his fellow surety, McNamee. As to defendant's rights to damages asked for in his cross-complaint, he clearly was not entitled to recover, because of the execution of the bonds upon which he had become a surety, as he had not at the time been held to liability thereunder. As to the other damages asked for and denied him, the adverse finding had evidence to support it. Under such circumstances, we will not disturb it.

DYER v. McCORKLE et al.★ (Civ. 6353.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 11, 1929.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing Feb. 9, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court April 9, 1929.

1. Appeal and error 🔑755—Appeal of one in whose behalf no points and authorities nor briefs were filed will not be considered.

Appeal of one of two defendants, in whose behalf no points and authorities nor briefs were filed, will not be considered by appellate court.

2. Automobiles 🔑244(28)—Evidence held not to show any knowledge or acquiescence on part of dairy company in driver's permitting boys to ride on milk truck.

In action against dairy company for injuries sustained by 12 year old boy while assisting driver of defendant's electric milk truck, plaintiff's testimony that driver had told him that he did not want "too many kids" on truck held no evidence of knowledge or acquiescence by defendant in driver's permitting boys to ride on truck or to assist in deliveries.

3. Courts 🔑106—Opinions of appellate tribunals are intended to reflect court's opinion on case presented.

The opinions of appellate tribunals are not intended to serve as questionnaires or monographic treatises, nor to catalogue the divergent views of opposing counsel, but are intended to reflect opinion of court on case presented.

4. Automobiles 🔑193(4)—Master and servant 🔑366—Boy assisting milk truck driver in making deliveries held not employé, but mere trespasser, entitled only to protection from willful or wanton injury (Workmen's Compensation Act).

Twelve year old boy, who assisted driver of electric milk truck in making deliveries without receiving any regular wage therefor, held not an employé either of driver or of dairy company, in absence of evidence that latter had any knowledge that driver was permitting boys to ride on truck or to assist in deliveries, but he was a mere trespasser as far as dairy company was concerned, entitled only to protection from willful or wanton injury, and any injury to boy in course of such work was not compensable under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended).

5. Negligence 🔑11—To constitute "willful misconduct" there must be actual knowledge or its legal equivalent of danger from failure to act and conscious failure to avert injury.

"Willful misconduct" means something different from and more than negligence, however gross, and to constitute willful misconduct there must be actual knowledge, or that which in law is esteemed to be equivalent of actual knowledge, of danger to be apprehended from failure to act, coupled with a conscious failure to act to the end of averting injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Willful Misconduct.]

6. Negligence 🔑11—To constitute "wanton negligence" there must be intent to cause injury; "recklessness;" "wantonness;" "gross negligence."

To constitute "wanton negligence" there must be a design to cause injury, but a recklessness amounting to a disregard of consequences will supply the place of specific intent, and "gross negligence" may be equivalent of willful or wanton negligence, where defendant's conduct exhibits reckless indifference to probable consequences with knowledge of facts and circumstances likely to result in injury; "recklessness" and "wantonness" being stronger terms than ordinary negligence and meaning a disregard of security equivalent to bad faith, and a willful or malicious disposition to injure (citing Words and Phrases, Second Series, "Wanton Negligence").

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Reckless; Recklessly; Recklessness; Wantonness; Gross Negligence.]

7. Automobiles 🔑158—Starting milk truck before boy assisting in deliveries jumped on step, who, as to dairy company, was mere trespasser, held not "wanton negligence" nor "willful negligence."

Where driver of dairy company's electric truck had for some time customarily started truck before 12 year old boy assisting him in making deliveries of milk had jumped on step of truck, held, that his act in starting truck before boy stepped thereon was not "willful negligence," nor "wanton negligence," so as to make dairy company, as to whom boy was mere trespasser, liable for injuries to boy.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Willful Negligence.]

8. Trial 🔑343—Contention that general verdict for plaintiff imported finding for him on allegations of wantonness, willfulness, and recklessness could not be sustained, where there was no supporting evidence.

Plaintiff's contention that, inasmuch as complaint alleged that plaintiff was injured by reason of defendant's wantonness, willfulness, and recklessness, general verdict of jury for plaintiff imported finding for plaintiff on such issues, cannot be sustained, where there was no evidence supporting such allegations.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Denver S. Church, Judge.

Action by Dayton Dyer, also known as Dayton Dyer Sibley, an infant, by Winifred Dyer Sibley, his guardian ad litem, against B. T. McCorkle and Frank M. Helm, Incorporated, doing business under the firm name and style of Jersey Farm Dairy Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed as to defendant last named, and affirmed as to defendant first named.

Fenston, Williams & Hansen and Frank Kauke, all of Fresno, for appellants.

Gallaher & Jertberg, of Fresno, for respondent.

PARKER, Justice pro tem. [1] This is an action prosecuted by a minor, through his guardian, wherein it is sought to recover for injuries sustained as a result of the negligence of defendants. Judgment went for plaintiff, following the verdict of a jury. Defendants appeal, and the record comes before us under the alternative method of appeal. At the outset we are met with respondent's contention that the reporter's transcript is not properly before the court and that the same should not be considered for any purpose. The points urged in support of this contention have been heretofore considered and passed upon both in the District Court of Appeal and by the Supreme Court. Stoner v. Security Trust Co., 47 Cal. App. 216–220, 190 P. 500; Anstead v. Pacific Gas Electric Co., 201 Cal. 198, 256 P. 209. The contention of respondent was held to be without merit, and we have no reason to again pass upon the question other than to express assent with the conclusion reached in the cited cases. Particularly is this true in view of the fact that a rule of practice and procedure is announced and no property rights involved in the point made. Therefore, we hold the entire record properly before us. While the appeal is taken by both defendants, there are no points and authorities nor briefs of any kind filed in behalf of the defendant McCorkle. We shall not consider the appeal of this defendant, but confine our opinion to the appeal of the codefendant Frank M. Helm, Inc., a corporation, doing business under the firm name of Jersey Farm Dairy Company, who will hereinafter be referred to as Dairy Company. By way of further preliminary explanation, the term "plaintiff" will refer to the infant plaintiff alone, excluding the guardian. A narrative of the facts in the case will be necessary to an understanding of the contentions. The plaintiff Dayton Dyer at the time of the admitted injury was a boy of the age of 12 years. The defendant Dairy Company was at the same time engaged in the business of selling and delivering milk in the city of Fresno. In that business the Dairy Company used an electric truck, and the truck was driven by McCorkle, admitted to have been an employé of the Dairy Company. The method of delivery was the usual one. The customers of the Dairy Company resided throughout the various sections of the city. The Dairy Company, using its truck, delivered the milk in bottles along established routes to each house. McCorkle, the driver of the milk truck, had been a lodger at the home of plaintiff and had some acquaintance with the family. An older brother of plaintiff, at a time perhaps a few months preceding the date of the accident, had been helping McCorkle in his deliveries, and when he stopped the plaintiff began. The accident happened on April 11, 1926. It was about a month and a half prior to this date that plaintiff commenced helping McCorkle, the driver. The evidence does not disclose that they continued every day, but it is reasonable to assume such to be the case from the fact that, prior to April 11th, plaintiff had been in the truck about 50 times. The nature of plaintiff's connection with the delivery might be illustrated. It seems that the customers to whom delivery was made lived on both sides of the street, and when a stop was made the driver, McCorkle, would make a delivery on one side and the boy would make a delivery on the other. If the driver completed his deliveries first, he would return and start up the truck when the boy was about four or five feet from the truck. The boy rode on the step.

[2-4] McCorkle paid the boy no regular wage for the assistance. The testimony discloses that once he gave the boy 50 cents and on occasions smaller amounts. Occasionally McCorkle would buy candy for the boy, and in addition to all of this the boy had access to the milk and would drink as he desired. On the day in question the boy and McCorkle were engaged in making milk deliveries along the route. At the particular point where the truck was stopped there was no delivery to be made on McCorkle's side, but there was one to be made on the boy's side. Accordingly the boy got off with his bottles and completed the delivery. Upon his return and while he was running toward the truck, the driver started moving while the boy was still some four or five feet away. In attempting to board the moving truck the boy was hurt. Hence this action. The main point presented and urged by appellant goes to the liability of the Dairy Company, the admitted employer, and appellant urges its freedom from responsibility on the ground that the driver was acting wholly without the scope of his employment. Appellant contends that the boy either was an employé of the Dairy Company or he was not. That if he was an employé his recourse was to the Accident Commission. That if he was not an employé he was a mere volunteer. The theory of the trial in the lower court was that there was no employment, and the plaintiff insists such to be the case. Appellant seems content, as far as its argument proceeds, to concur in this. However, the main question to be determined is as to the acts and conduct of the servant McCorkle and the scope of his employment and authority. There is no evidence in the record that the Dairy Company ever had any knowledge of the fact that the driver was permitting boys to ride in the truck or to assist in the deliveries. True, the infant plaintiff testified that one time the driver told him that he did not want "too many kids" on the truck, but as against the Dairy Company this one item of testimony cannot be considered as even the slightest evidence of knowledge or acquiescence on the part of the employer. It is manifest that throughout the transaction the driver was acting within the scope of his employment in so far as the delivery of the milk might be regarded as the very purpose of such employment. It is further apparent from the record before us that in pursuit of the employment the servant had no authority, express or implied, to employ, invite, or permit assistants to aid him in his work. Appellant has put forth many reasons why the judgment of the trial court should be set aside; respondent, on the other hand, urges as many reasons why it should be affirmed. It would serve no useful or instructive purpose to set out in detail these various contentions and analyze each—distinguishing, approving, or rejecting in turn. The opinions of appellate tribunals are not intended to serve as questionnaires or monographic treatises. In the last analysis, they are intended to reflect the opinion of the court upon the case presented rather than catalogue the divergent views of opposing counsel. From the facts of the case as hereinafter outlined we are of the opinion that the relationship of employer and employé did not arise or result as between the infant plaintiff and either McCorkle or the Dairy Company. That is to say, no such relationship arose or was implied to the extent that the matter of compensation would properly or at all come before the Industrial Accident Commission pursuant to the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended). As between plaintiff infant and the Dairy Company there was no appointment or contract or apprenticeship, express or implied, oral or written; nor was there any authority, express, implied, or incident to the performance of his duties, that empowered the driver, McCorkle, to create, as between the infant and the Dairy Company, the relation of master and servant or employer and employé. The term of service was on no schedule, nor was any wage provided therefor. No duty of service was accepted by the plaintiff or any obligation of wage payment fastened upon defendant Dairy Company. The case of Giannini v. Campodonico, 176 Cal. 548, 169 P. 80, is illustrative of the law applicable. In that case the facts bear a striking resemblance to the case at bar. Plaintiff there was a boy of 14 years of age and resided across the street from the stable owned by defendant, who employed a colored stableman to take care of the horses and wagons and keep the stable in order. On the morning of the accident the boy saw the stableman leaving in a buggy, and at that time the stableman requested the boy to clean the stable during his absence, and promised him a nickel upon his return. A small door which was part of a large sliding door was left open for the boy. Subsequently the boy and two other boys entered the stable, and while in the premises the large sliding door fell, breaking the leg of the boy who had been engaged by the stableman, and inflicting other injuries upon him. Upon several occasions theretofore the boy had performed errands for the stableman at the latter's request and received some sort of remuneration. The door which fell down had previously been out of order and the stableman had attempted to remedy the defect. The court holds as follows: "Disregarding the testimony advanced by defendant and looking only to the case as presented by" plaintiff, "no ground for holding the defendant liable appears. It is well settled that as against a trespasser or mere licensee the owner of property owes no duty to keep the premises in safe condition. The only duty is to abstain from willful or wanton injury. In other respects one who thus enters upon the premises does so at his own risk and subject to all the ordinary risks which attach to such premises. * * * It is only in the case of one who has been expressly or impliedly invited upon the premises that the duty exists to exercise due care not to injure him or permit the premises to be in such condition that injury results. * * * The first question is whether the request of the stableman in this case is such an invitation as to render" the boy "an invitee. * * *

The facts * * * show that the duties of the stableman were of such a menial character that the position could not have carried with it the implied right to delegate the work or hire others to assist in the same. * * * In fact, the duties were such that the stableman could very easily perform them without aid. It must therefore be held that the request to do the work was unauthorized and could not impose any additional liability upon the defendant. * * * The stableman's promise to pay" the boy "to clean the stable could not make the latter an invitee. Neither can prior services raise such a relation, especially where it is not pretended that they were brought home in any way to the defendant. The fact that respondent is a minor does not give him any greater rights under the circumstances. 'That might excuse him from concurring negligence, but cannot supply the place of negligence on the part of "defendant," or confer an authority on one who has none. It may excite our sympathy, but cannot create rights or duties which have no other foundation.'" This ends quotation from Giannini v. Campodonico, 176 Cal. 548, 169 P. 80.

In the case of Curry v. Addoms, 166 App. Div. 433, 151 N. Y. S. 1017, where plaintiff had been engaged by a janitor who was without authority to engage any other person, the court says: "It is also urged that the plaintiff was a licensee. If so, she must trace her license to the defendant: but as he knew nothing of her, and was not bound to do so, and as the janitress," by her contract with plaintiff, "had no right to commit the defendant, he owed her no duty in the matter of the steps." The case of Higbee Co. v. Jackson, reported in 101 Ohio St. 75, 128 N. E. 61, is exhaustively annotated in 14 A. L. R., commencing at page 131. The action concerned the rights of a boy who had been invited to ride in a truck. The invitation was extended by the driver, without the knowledge of his employer, and accepted. The court says: "The grant of permission, so far as the company is concerned, was a mere nullity." The most that can be said is that the boy had no right upon the truck and that when he got in he was a trespasser as far as the defendant was concerned. The foregoing cases can in many respects be directly applied to the case at bar. The work of the truck driver was menial work, as the term goes. Surely it is demonstrated that it was not work that required assistance, inasmuch as it was work that a 12-year-old child could do, as far as the delivery of the milk itself was concerned, and the assistance was not rendered in the driving of the truck. Relying, also, on the Campodonico Case, we conclude that the boy was not an invitee. Therefore, being neither an employé, nor a licensee, nor invitee, there is but one other status in which he can be placed, and that is he was a trespasser as far as defendant Dairy Company was concerned. As such trespasser he was entitled to protection from willful or wanton injury. Sessions v. Southern Pacific Co., 159 Cal. 599, 114 P. 982; Higbee Co. v. Jackson, supra. If the driver of the truck had permitted the boy to be seated upon the truck and after driving some distance had suddenly become mindful of his breach of duty, he would not have been permitted to recklessly push the boy off and injure him. Likewise, seeing the boy in a dangerous position, he would not be permitted, ruthlessly and with no regard for the boy's safety, to run him down.

[5, 6] Notwithstanding the confused and indiscriminate use at times of the terms "negligence" and "willfulness" by judges and textwriters it is certain that the weight of authority supports the view that these terms have a distinct and well-defined meaning which is clearly pointed out in Holwerson v. St. Louis & S. Ry. Co., 157 Mo. 216, 57 S. W. 774, 50 L. R. A. 850, and accepted by California courts in Tognazzini v. Freeman, 18 Cal. App. 474, 123 P. 540; Taylor v. Pacific Electric R. Co., 172 Cal. 645, 158 P. 119. Willful misconduct means something different from and more than negligence, however gross. The term "serious and willful misconduct" is described by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts as being something "much more than mere negligence, or even gross or culpable negligence." To constitute "willful misconduct" there must be actual knowledge or that which in the law is esteemed to be the equivalent of actual knowledge, of the danger to be apprehended from the failure to act, coupled with a conscious failure to act to the end of averting injury. Helme v. Great Western Milling Co., 43 Cal. App. 416, 185 P. 510. Wanton negligence, likewise, means something in addition to mere actionable negligence. To constitute wantonness in the eye of the law it is not necessary to allege or show an intent to injure. Gross negligence, or what is sometimes called the "last" negligence, may be the equivalent of willful or wanton negligence; and where the conduct of defendant exhibits reckless indifference to probable consequences, with knowledge of facts and circumstances likely to result in injury, it becomes wanton negligence. Kramm v. Stockton R. Co., 3 Cal. App. 618, 86 P. 738, 903. "Recklessness" and "wantonness" are stronger terms than ordinary negligence, and mean a disregard of security equivalent to bad faith and a willful or malicious disposition to injure. To constitute wantonness there must be a design, purpose, or intent to do wrong, or cause the injury, but a recklessness amounting to an utter disregard of consequences will supply the place of a specific intent. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Lacy, 78 Kan. 622, 97 P. 1025. See, also, Words and Phrases, Second Series, vol. 4, p. 1236 et seq. Without going further into the various constructions placed upon the term "wanton," it will suffice to say that to lawyer and layman alike the word, in common usage, immediately suggests something of complete abandonment of care.

[7] We are unable to conclude that the negligence here established on the part of the driver of the milk truck can be characterized as either willful or wanton in the sense contemplated by the law applicable. To so hold would be disregarding the plain import of the terms. The boy had been doing the same thing for over a month and a half and his brother before him for some months Day after day exactly the same procedure was followed. If the driver was on the truck before the boy got back, he would start up and move to the next house or next point of delivery. The boy would jump on and ride to that point. This boy was of the age of twelve years and normal, as far as appears, for that age. The truck was stopped at a distance of four feet, which demonstrates the speed at which it was traveling. We do not mean to say that because a course of conduct, such as a boy jumping on a truck, had been pursued for some months, that fact alone would render it free from negligence. But is it obvious that knowledge and experience serves the purpose of illustrating what is safe and what is dangerous, because these factors serve to a great extent in pointing the course of the future. There is not a scrap of testimony from which it can be inferred that the driver knew the boy was getting on the truck or was attempting to get on. One witness testified that the boy shouted to the driver to go ahead, but the boy denied so doing. Taking either view of this, our conclusion would not be affected. If it could be held that the boy assured the driver it was all right to proceed, then the driver might reasonably assume the boy in a position of safety.

[8] Respondent contends that inasmuch as the complaint alleged that the driver willfully, wantonly, and recklessly drove the truck, and that the plaintiff was injured by reason of the wantonness, willfulness, and recklessness of the defendants, the verdict of the jury, being a general verdict, imports a finding for plaintiff upon these issues. To sustain this contention it is necessary that there be some evidence supporting the allegations. Surely if plaintiff had offered no evidence at all, save as to the extent of his damage, and had offered no evidence at all as to the negligence, nor had defendant, a verdict for plaintiff would find no support in the mere allegations of the complaint. In the case of Higbee Co v Jackson, supra, the entire subject is completely annotated Many authorities have been collected in the note, and from a reading of the cases it becomes evident that the allowing of the rights of even a trespasser to the person invited by the servant, without the scope of his employment, is a question of much dispute, and where granted is a concession, and extension of the doctrine of respondeat superior. The doctrine of respondeat superior had its origin in consideration of public policy. Out of the necessities of new social and economic conditions it has been developed and extended, and its growth and application have been influenced and directed by these conditions The rule itself and its development are examples of the process by which the judgment of society as to what is necessary to the public welfare has from time to time been expressed in juristic form. But in extending the doctrine we cannot destroy it and deprive the master of all rights. If an employer's business and fortune were committed wholly to a servant or employé without regard to the nature or scope of the latter's employment, modern business would practically cease. The law has been exceedingly generous as to the plaintiff in cases such as in the instant case to give him the protection it has, in so far as it renders the master liable for a situation over which he has so little control. The basis of this solicitude of the law is the principle which is sometimes characterized as the humanitarian doctrine which is only invoked to prevent willful or wanton injury.

We are of the opinion that by no specious reasoning should the doctrine be extended. By giving such loose or careless construction to the terms "willful" and "wanton" as is sought here would be to destroy entirely any distinction between the various degrees of negligence. To sustain the contention of respondent here would be to hold affirmatively that wanton and willful misconduct means lack of ordinary care and would be in direct defiance of authority and destruction of principle. The court below, under the facts, should have granted the defendant's motion for a nonsuit.

Gallaher & Jertberg, of Fresno, for respondent.

PARKER, Justice pro tem. This cause is upon the same state of facts as Dyer v. McCorkle (Cal. App.) 274 P 587 this day decided.

This action is brought by the mother of the minor plaintiff in the Dyer Case to recover expenses incurred for physicians and hospital treatment for the minor. It has been stipulated between the counsel for the respective parties that if the judgment in the Dyer Case was affirmed such should be the decision in the instant case; that if the Dyer judgment were reversed then the judgment in the present case likewise should be reversed.

Judgment is reversed as to appellant Frank M. Helm, Inc , doing business under the firm name of Jersey Farm Dairy Company, and the judgment is affirmed as to appellant McCorkle.

PEOPLE v. DEMPSTER. (Cr. 1728.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 21, 1929.

1. Indictment and information 🔑159(2)—Information in effect charging theft by charging embezzlement held properly amended during trial to charge grand theft (Pen. Code, § 484, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046, § 1, and § 952, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1043).

Where information charging crime of embezzlement under Pen. Code, § 952, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1043, in effect charged theft, such section providing that in charging an offense each count shall be sufficient if it contains, in substance, statement that accused has committed public offense therein specified, amendment of the information during trial by substituting the words "grand theft" for the word "embezzlement" was proper, in view of the Code provision, and in view of Pen. Code, § 484, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046, § 1, merging larceny, embezzlement, and obtaining money by false pretenses into one crime of theft.

2. Embezzlement 🔑2—Though offense charged as embezzlement was committed before passage of statute making it theft, defendant could be prosecuted for grand theft under amended information (Pen. Code, § 484, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046, § 1).

Though offense charged in information as embezzlement, for which defendant was being prosecuted, was committed previous to amendment of Pen. Code, § 484 (St. 1927, p. 1046, § 1), merging larceny, embezzlement, and obtaining money by false pretenses into one crime of theft, defendant could be prosecuted under an amended information for grand theft, since punishment is the same for either; change being procedural one in no way impairing substantial right of defendant.

3. Larceny 🔑65—Evidence held to sustain conviction for grand larceny, notwithstanding conflicting testimony by prosecuting witness.

Evidence in prosecution for grand theft held sufficient to sustain conviction, notwithstanding certain testimony by prosecuting witness conflicting with other testimony by her and admissions of defendant that he misapplied money coming into his hand.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles W Fricke, Judge.

Harold J Dempster was convicted of grand theft, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Buel R. Wood, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

THOMPSON, J. The appellant was charged by an information in two counts with having embezzled the sum of $1,400 and $1,600, respectively During the course of the trial the judge pointed out to counsel that the commitment of the magistrate was for theft instead of embezzlement. The district attorney thereupon moved the court for leave to amend the information by substituting the words "grand theft" for that of "embezzlement, charging the defendant with the crime of grand theft, a felony instead of embezzlement," and changing the language of the charge to read that the defendant "did unlawfully obtain—lawful money of the United States, the property of one Hazel M. Kiler"

Defendant's counsel then agreed to proceed "without having the formal amended pleading before the court" or waiting to have it typewritten, whereupon the defendant was asked to plead severally to the counts charging grand theft, and interposed the plea of not guilty to each of them. The trial proceeded, the formal amended information was filed, and the jury returned a verdict of guilty on each count. This appeal is prosecuted from the judgment pronounced upon the verdict.

[1, 2] Appellant's first contention is that he never pleaded to the amended information, and he directs our attention to the fact that, from the oral statement of the court when permission was granted to amend, the language employed was that the defendant "did unlawfully obtain" (the amount of money designated in each count) "lawful money of the United States, the property of one Hazel M. Kiler," whereas the amended information actually filed used the words "did unlawfully take away," etc. Concerning appellant's contention that he did not plead to the amended information, it is without merit. In effect he waived the reading of the information, with like effect as he did when first arraigned, and pleaded not guilty to two counts charging grand theft. The real question is: Could the information be so amended? If it could be so amended, not only is the first question conclusively settled, but also appellant's second assignment of error, to the effect that by the amendment he was twice put in jeopardy, falls to the ground.

In 1927, two sections of the Penal Code which have a direct bearing upon the instant question were amended. Section 952 was altered so that the material portions now read as follows: "In charging an offense, each count shall contain, and shall be sufficient if it contains in substance, a statement that the accused has committed some public offense therein specified. Such statement may be made in ordinary and concise language without any technical averments or any allegations of matter not essential to be proved. * * * In charging theft it shall be sufficient to allege that the defendant unlawfully took the property of another." St. 1927, p. 1043. In the cases of People v. Plum (Cal. App.) 263 P. 862, on application for rehearing (Cal. App.) 265 P. 322, and People v. Manchell (Cal. App.) 267 P. 718, in the reasoning of which we are in accord, the short form of information provided for in the amendment just noticed is sustained, at least in those cases where from a practical standpoint the defendant's rights are not prejudiced because he has been advised of the nature of the charges which he must meet at the trial.

The second amendment which directly bears upon the problems here presented is that of section 484 of the Penal Code. In so far as applicable to this case it reads: "Every person who shall feloniously steal, take, carry, lead, or drive away the personal property of another, or who shall fraudulently appropriate property which has been entrusted to him, or who shall knowingly and designedly, by any false or fraudulent representation or pretense, defraud any other person of money, labor, or real or personal property, or who causes or procures others to report falsely of his wealth or mercantile character and by thus imposing upon any person, obtains credit and thereby fraudulently gets or obtains possession of money or property or obtains the labor or service of another, is guilty of theft. * * *" (Italics ours.) St. 1927, p. 1046, § 1. The effect of this change of section 484, as is said in People v. Plum, supra, is "that the former crimes of larceny, embezzlement, and obtaining property by false pretenses are merged into the one crime of theft." Or, to put it in the language of Commonwealth v. King, 202 Mass. 379, 88 N. E. 454, where a like amendment was under scrutiny, the legislative intent was "to do away with the possibility of a criminal indicted for one of the three crimes mentioned escaping punishment by reason of its being afterwards found that his crime was technically one of the other two mentioned." It is thus made apparent that, when in the original information in this case the defendant was charged with having committed "the crime of embezzlement," in that he did "wilfully, unlawfully, knowingly and feloniously embezzle, appropriate and convert" certain sums of money which had been intrusted to him by Hazel M. Kiler, he was informed against as having committed one kind of theft as defined by section 484 as amended prior to the filing of either the complaint or information. It is equally obvious that the original information, "in substance," charges the commission of a public offense. In view of that portion of section 952 of the Penal Code which reads that the words used may be "any" which are "sufficient to give the accused notice of the offense of which he is charged," prior to the filing of the amended information the defendant stood charged with the offense of theft, although not in the language of the statute. It is true that technically the offense of embezzlement has been merged into that of theft, and therefore the information should with more propriety have used the term "grand theft," but it cannot be gainsaid that the defendant was advised of the nature of the charges preferred against him.

We are consequently brought to a position much akin to the situation presented in People v. Thal, 61 Cal. App. 48, 214 P. 296, wherein it was determined that an information in one count charging the offense of obtaining property by false pretenses which set out that the false pretense by which the property was obtained was the uttering and passing of a fictitious check, might be amended to charge two offenses, the one obtaining property by false pretenses and the other uttering and passing a fictitious check. The court said: "These two crimes are thus made to appear by said information as a part of the same transaction, out of which the charge of obtaining property under false pretenses arose. This being so we are of the opinion that such matter in the second count of the amended information was proper matter for the amendment of the original information, even though it charged the defendant with the commission of another crime not expressly stated in the charging part of the first information. Section 1008 of the Penal Code, providing for the amendment of informations after plea, permits by implication at least such amendments to be made, charging such offenses as are shown by the evidence taken at the preliminary examination to have been committed. We have not the evidence taken at the preliminary examination before us on this appeal and hence in support of this judgment we must assume that the evidence there taken was such as to show the offense to have been committed as charged in the second count of this amended information. The motion to amend" (as was the situation here) "was in fact made by the district attorney upon that express ground. The fact that another or additional offense was thus charged is not of itself sufficient to justify us in holding that the addition of this charge was not the proper subject of the amendment or that the trial court abused its discretion in permitting it to be made." As was pointed out in People v. Hinshaw, 194 Cal. 1, 8, 227 P. 156, the distinction must be drawn between those cases where it is attempted to charge a different offense and those where the offense is sought to be charged differently; it being always possible to amend to state a crime differently. To the same effect, see People v. Miller, 34 Cal. App. 641, 168 P. 574. These cases conclude the argument that the amendment was not properly allowed. Nor can it be successfully argued that, because the offense was committed prior to the amendment of section 484 of the Penal Code that appellant could not be prosecuted for grand theft instead of embezzlement as that term was used prior to the amendment. The punishment and the offense are the same. The change is a procedural one which in no way impairs a substantial right of the defendant.

[3] Appellant argues that the evidence is buy and pay for a Chrysler automobile. refers to an answer of the complaining witness on cross-examination to the following question: "During all the time that the defendant * * * you were giving the defendant money, were the different sums you advanced to the defendant, were they in the nature of loans or were they gifts?" The anser was, "They were all loans." It must be borne in mind that there were a great number of transactions, many of which were loans. The other testimony of this witness, however, together with the admissions of the defendant, abundantly establish the fact that the two different sums of money made the basis of the charge were given to him for the following particular purpose: First, to buy a home for the complaining witness; second, to buy and pay for 'a Chrysler automobile. Neither of these purposes was fulfilled, but the appellant made use of the money for his own purposes. A similar situation was involved in People v. Kirkpatrick, 77 Cal. App. 104, 246 P. 84, and the defendant was held to be guilty of embezzlement.

In view of the testimony establishing that all of the sums of money were neither gifts nor loans, we cannot give undue weight to an answer thus obtained. Further, the most that can be said of the testimony is that there is a conflict which we are not called upon to weigh.

Judgment affirmed.

COBBS v. SAME. INGRAM v. SAME.

(Civ. 3666–3669.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 6, 1929.

Negligence 🔑65—Answer to interrogatories, to effect that injured persons were not exercising due care, did not of itself establish contributory negligence.

Jury's answer to interrogatories, to effect that injured persons were not exercising due care and caution for their own safety, held of itself not to establish contributory negligence, in that failure to exercise due care, in order to constitute contributory negligence, must be such want of care as contributes directly to injury complained of.

Appeals from Superior Court, Tulare County; Frank Lamberson, Judge.

On petitions for rehearing. Rehearing denied.

For former opinions, see 273 P. 875 and 878.

E. J. Emmons, of Bakersfield, and G. L. Aynesworth, of Fresno, for appellants.

O'Melveny, Millikin & Tuller, of Los Angeles, and Power & McFadzean, of Visalia (John A. Powell and Pierce Works, both of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Respondent filed a petition for rehearing in each of the above cases. The principal ground set forth in said petitions for a rehearing is that the jury, by its answer to interrogatory No. 2, submitted by the court, at the request of respondent, established the contributory negligence of appellants, and, such negligence being so established, a judgment for respondent was the only one that could be rendered, and therefore the alleged errors of the trial court could not have been prejudicial.

Interrogatory No. 2 is as follows: "Were the persons who were riding in the automobile at the time of the accident exercising due care and caution for their own safety?"

This interrogatory was submitted to the jury in the two cases, Nos. 3666 and 3667, which were tried together, and was not answered by the jury; their answer to same being waived by respondent.

In the trial of cases Nos. 3668 and 3669, which by stipulation were tried by the same jury that tried the former cases and upon the same evidence, this interrogatory was again submitted to the jury, and its answer thereto was no.

The answer to this interrogatory, as given by the jury, does not establish that appellants were guilty of contributory negligence. For, in order that the negligence of the plaintiff may release a defendant from liability, such negligence must contribute proximately to the injury complained of. 19 Cal. Jur. 649, and authorities cited. It is not enough to constitute contributory negligence that plaintiff was not at the time of the accident exercising due care for his own safety, but it must also appear that such want of care contributed directly to the injury complained of.

Interrogatory No. 2 and its answer, as given by the jury, does not establish contributory negligence upon the part of appellants.

We are of the opinion that the petitions for rehearing should be denied, and it is so ordered.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 15, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Feb. 28, 1929.

1. Criminal law 🔑200(1)—Separate convictions of attempt to commit murder and malicious use of explosives, arising out of same series of acts, cannot stand (Pen. Code, § 601).

Separate convictions of attempt to commit murder, and of malicious use of explosives, in violation of Pen. Code, § 601, arising out of only one transaction or series of acts, cannot stand, in view of Pen. Code § 654.

2. Criminal law 🔑200(1)—One offense cannot be split into several distinct crimes.

One offense cannot be split so as to make of it several distinct crimes.

3. Criminal law 🔑199—Offense of attempt to murder includes that of malicious use of explosives, and, on improper conviction of both, latter conviction was set aside, and former affirmed.

Where defendant was improperly convicted both of attempt to commit murder and of malicious use of explosives, under evidence showing only one transaction, conviction for malicious use of explosives was reversed, and that of attempt to commit murder affirmed, since the latter included the former.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and William F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

KOFORD, P. J. [1, 2] Defendant was charged, convicted, and sentenced upon two separate counts. His points upon this appeal amount to this—that both convictions and sentences cannot stand, because the evidence proves only one crime for which he may be punished.

The felony charged in the first count was: "Attempt to commit murder, in that the said Charles A. Koehn, on or about the seventeenth day of May, nineteen hundred and twenty-eight, at and in the said county of Fresno, and state of California, did willfully, unlawfully, feloniously and with malice aforethought, attempt to kill and murder one C. E. Beaumont, a human being, in the following manner, to wit: The said defendant, at the time and place aforesaid, did place a certain explosive and certain inflammable material at and near the dwelling house occupied by the said C. E. Beaumont, * * * and the said defendant did then attach a fuse thereto and did ignite said fuse, with the intent that the lighted fuse should explode the explosive and ignite the inflammable material, with the intent and purpose that as a consequence thereof the life of the said C. E. Beaumont would thereby be destroyed."

The felony charged in the second count was: "Malicious use of explosive, in that the said Charles A. Koehn, on or about the seventeenth day of May, nineteen hundred and twenty-eight, at and in the said county of Fresno, state of California, did willfully, unlawfully and maliciously put, place, deposit and attempt to explode a certain nitro-glycerine explosive substance, at and near a certain dwelling house occupied by one C. mont, * * * with intent to injure, intimidate and terrify the said C. E. Beaumont." This crime is defined in Penal Code, § 601.

The evidence upon which the defendant was convicted upon both counts showed only one transaction or series of acts. All the evidence produced was admissible under both counts. Whatever difference or differences there might exist between these two crimes in other cases, in this case the acts were identical. The only difference between the two crimes was the difference in intent with which the same identical acts were performed; i. e., the difference between the intent to kill and the intent to injure, intimidate, and terrify. In passing, it may be said that it was the testimony of the defendant that he had only simulated the appearance of having ignited the fuse to the bomb so as to frighten Judge Beaumont and thereby attract public attention to himself and his lawsuit and perhaps obtain more favorable consideration in certain litigation then pending. Of course, the jury did not believe this story, or they would not have found him guilty of attempt to murder as charged in the first count. It is not claimed that there is any break in the continuity of the events in the transaction so that it could be said at this point the intention changed and thereupon claim that certain particular acts accompanied the intent to frighten and injure and certain other acts accompanied the intent to murder. Theoretically the defendant may have put the explosive there with such an intent as to be a violation of Penal Code, § 601, and thereafter he may have attempted to explode it with the intent to murder, but there is no claim of such proof. No doubt the defendant by his entire one act committed acts which are denounced in more than one section of the Penal Code, and perhaps it is proper to say that he committed more than one crime, but the real question is, Shall he be separately punished upon each count?

We think this question is answered in the negative by the opening clause of Penal Code, § 654, "An act or omission which is made punishable in different ways by different provisions of this code may be punished under either of such provisions, but in no case can it be punished under more than one. * * *" In some transactions, however, what appears to be one act (e. g., breaking in and stealing) is in reality two crimes (e. g., burglary and larceny) the second crime beginning and ending after the first is completed. Each of such crimes is separately punishable without regard to the other. See People v. Brain, 75 Cal. App. 109, 241 P. 913, and cases cited. Other apparent exceptions exist where one crime includes more acts or facts than the other, though both crimes may share some of the acts in common. People v. Day, 199 Cal. 78, 248 P. 250.

The authorities relied upon by the respondent to sustain both sentences and convictions are not in point, for the reason that one of the two crimes treated of in each case was made up of acts and facts not all included in the other crime, and this without treating the special criminal intent as one of such acts or facts. Here the crime charged in the first count as proven by the evidence included every act included in the second and no more. It also included every fact and part of the second count, including, also, the intent to injure and terrify, for the intent to injure and terrify is included necessarily in the intent to murder and is proven necessarily by the same conduct or evidence which proves intent to murder. To hold otherwise would be to say that the intent to murder would be a defense for a defendant charged solely with the second count.

This case is ruled by the principle that one offense cannot be split so as to make of it several distinct crimes. This rule is illustrated in People v. Defoor, 100 Cal. 150, 34 P. 642, which holds that a conviction of assault under an information charging an assault with intent to murder is a bar to a prosecution for mayhem committed during the same assault or transaction. Attempt to murder does not always include the charge of violating Penal Code, § 601; yet under the evidence and pleading in the instant case it substantially does so. The same rules should be applied.

[3] It was proper to plead both charges in the information so that, if the evidence failed to prove intent to murder, the defendant could be convicted on the second count. But the conviction upon the first count included all of the elements of the second count. The court should have instructed the jury not to find defendant guilty upon more than one count instead of instructing them that they might find him guilty upon each count. The jury having found the defendant guilty of both charges, there is no difficulty in determining which conviction should yield to the other, because the first includes the second.

[4] The demurrer to the indictment was properly overruled. The two crimes charged were properly united in one information under Penal Code, § 954. They were of the same class of crimes within the meaning of that section. They were, of course, also connected together in their commission within the meaning of that section. It is claimed that it should, but does not appear upon the face of the complaint that such connection exists. The identity of acts, time, place, and circumstance as charged in the two counts is enough to show that connection between the two crimes which Penal Code, § 954, requires without a direct averment that the crimes were so connected together in their commission. It has been so held. People v. Jailles, 146 Cal. 301, 79 P. 965; People v. Day, supra; People v. Kelly, 75 Cal. Dec. 123. People v. Degnen, 70 Cal. App. 567, 234 P. 129, relied upon by appellant, is also authority in support of the information. Appellant quotes language from page 572 of that report (234 P. 131), but the doctrine of the case on this point is on page 575 (234 P. 132).

The judgment of conviction upon the charge of attempt to murder as charged in the first count of the information is affirmed, and the judgment of conviction upon the second count, charging malicious use of explosives, is reversed.

FORNASERI et al. v. COSMOSART REALTY & BLDG. CORPORATION et al.

1. Corporations 🔑211(6)—Complaint to establish trust on alleged fraudulent assignment of option from corporation to defendant held defective in failing to allege fiduciary relation of defendant.

Complaint in action by stockholders and creditors to establish trust alleged to have arisen by reason of fraudulent procurement from corporation by defendant of assignment to him of option to purchase certain property held fatally defective, in failing to sufficiently state facts showing existence of relation of trust and confidence between defendant and corporation.

2. Corporations 🔑211(6)—Complaint seeking to establish trust arising from alleged fraudulent assignment of option from corporation to defendant held to insufficiently allege corporation's title to option.

Complaint, in action by stockholders and creditors to establish trust alleged to have arisen by reason of fraudulent procurement from corporation by defendant of assignment to him of option to purchase certain property, held fatally defective, in that it did not sufficiently allege facts showing that corporation held title to option.

3. Corporations 🔑548(3)—Creditor's suit in equity will not lie against corporation until claim has been reduced to judgment and legal remedies exhausted.

A creditor's suit in equity will not lie against corporation until his claim has first been reduced to judgment and his legal remedies have been exhausted.

4. Corporations 🔑189(9)—Delinquent officers are necessary parties to suit against corporation for fraud or mismanagement.

An equitable action against corporation for fraud or malversation of funds will not lie without making delinquent officers parties to the suit, since officers of corporation in their fiduciary capacity hold property and assets of corporation in trust, and, as such trustees, are alone accountable for fraud and mismanagement.

5. Corporations 🔑207—Minority stockholders may sue for redress on fraud or mismanagement by officers or third person on refusal of officers on request to institute proceedings.

When corporation has been divested of property through fraud or mismanagement of officers or directors or through fraud or coercion of third person, and officers upon request fail and refuse to institute proceedings to remedy injury, minority stockholders may maintain suit in equity for redress.

6. Trusts 🔑95—Trust may be impressed on corporate property wrongfully disposed of and accounting required of one wrongfully acquiring it.

A trust may be impressed upon property of corporation wrongfully disposed of and an accounting required of successor in interest who has wrongfully acquired the same.

7. Corporations 🔑189(7)—Stockholder, before suing corporation in equity for fraud of directors or third person, must make demand on officers to institute appropriate proceedings, followed by their failure or refusal to act.

Before stockholder may sue in equity against corporation for fraud by directors or third person, demand must be made on officers to institute appropriate proceedings, unless such demand would be futile, and officers must refuse or fail to act.

8. Corporations 🔑205—Stockholder must exhaust legal remedies before suing in equity for redress for wrongful disposal of corporate property (Civ. Code, § 305).

Under Civ. Code, § 305, before stockholder may sue in equity for redress for wrongful disposal of corporate property, he must show that he has exhausted his legal remedy, such as appealing for redress to stockholders at large, unless it appears that board of directors who decline to act own a majority of the stock and control corporation.

9. Corporations 🔑310(1)—Discretionary acts of directors are not subject to attack by minority stockholders in suit of equity, absent fraud or breach of trust.

In absence of fraud, breach of trust, or ultra vires transactions, conduct of directors in management of corporation is not subject to attack by minority stockholders in suit of equity, where such acts are discretionary and are performed in good faith.

10. Evidence 🔑73—Good faith of directors in managing corporate affairs is presumed, and their discretion will not be interfered with in doubtful cases.

Every presumption is in favor of good faith of directors of corporation in managing its affairs, and interference with transactions of discretionary nature by court in favor of minority stockholders is not warranted in doubtful cases.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harry A. Hollzer, Judge.

Action by Joe Fornaseri and others against the Cosmosart Realty & Building Corporation and another. From the judgment against them, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

James Westervelt, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Minor Moore, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. This appeal was taken from a judgment which was rendered against the plaintiffs for failure to amend their pleading after a demurrer to the second amended complaint had been sustained.

The complaint is voluminous, comprising more than a hundred printed pages, but an epitome of its contents will suffice for the purpose of determining this appeal. The complaint alleges that the plaintiffs are stockholders and creditors of the Cosmosart Realty & Building Corporation of Los Angeles; that Clark & Sherman Land Company was the owner of 18 acres of land in the city of Los Angeles, which was leased for a term of years to one James E. Bowen; that this lease contained an option authorizing the lessee or his assigns to purchase this property upon terms specifically mentioned; that this land was worth treble the amount of the purchase price named in the option. The complaint also attempts to allege that this lease was assigned to the Cosmosart Realty & Building Corporation; that this defendant corporation was indebted to the extent of $160,000, but that it was nevertheless able to exercise its option to purchase this land, but failed and neglected to do so; that, upon the contrary, pursuant to a resolution of the directors of the corporation, this option was assigned to the respondent Grant, and an agreement with him, together with one Charles Ray and Albert A. Kidder, Jr., was executed, by the terms of which the interests of the respective parties were pooled, and the land was authorized to be subdivided and sold, from the proceeds of which sales Clark & Sherman Land Company, which had contracted to sell the property to Grant, was to receive the first $150,000, the Cosmosart Realty & Building Corporation was to receive the following $160,000, and the remaining $600,000 was to be divided equally among the respective parties to the agreement. It is alleged that this assignment of option and agreement were procured by fraud, and resulted in a substantial loss to the defendant corporation and its stockholders, that the directors held a controlling amount of stock in the corporation, and that they refused and neglected to institute proceedings to recover the said trust funds, or to protect the interest of the stockholders.

In support of appellants' contention that the option and agreement to purchase real property were procured by fraud, it is alleged that Ray and Kidder negotiated with the directors of the corporation and "undertook to raise the necessary funds to finance the debts of said corporation," and for this purpose employed respondent Grant to examine its books and accounts to ascertain the financial condition of the corporation; that, in the exercise of his employment, the respondent Grant, as the agent of Ray and Kidder, occupied a position of trust and confidence with the corporation, resulting in the directors and officers thereof conveying to him valuable information regarding its financial status, and that this fiduciary relation led to their "consulting with Grant and informing him fully as to its business affairs, assets and liabilities"; that "the said Grant was, during most of the said period, also an employee and agent of the defendant corporation." It is further alleged that, in procuring the execution of said contract, Will Hayes, an attorney formerly employed by, and whom the directors believed was appearing in their behalf, represented the respondent Grant, and advised the directors that respondent's option to purchase the Los Angeles lots was valid, binding and enforceable; that the respondent then threatened to purchase existing claims against the corporation, institute suits for their collection, and thus force the corporation into bankruptcy unless the contract was executed forthwith; that, with confidence in the advice of said attorney, and intimidated by respondent's threats, the directors executed the contract, but that said advice and threats were false and untrue, as the respondent well knew. It is further alleged that, pursuant to said agreement, the title to said property was subsequently conveyed in trust to the Title Guarantee & Trust Company of Los Angeles; that the tract was subdivided and many lots were sold, from the proceeds of which sales the Clark & Sherman Land Company was paid the sum of $150,800, the corporation defendant was paid $160,000, and that further funds were available for payment to the respondent Grant. The complaint prays that the proceeds of the sales of said property be declared to be a trust fund held for the benefit of the Cosmosart Realty & Building Corporation, its stockholders and creditors, and that the respondent be enjoined from otherwise disposing of said proceeds.

[1] The demurrer was both general and special. The appellants contend that the complaint sufficiently states facts showing the existence of a relation of trust and confidence between the respondent Grant and the defendant corporation. It is claimed that Ray and Kidder were employed by the corporation to finance its indebtedness so as to enable it to exercise its option to purchase the property for the purpose of subdivision and sale; that Grant was hired by Ray and Kidder to ascertain the financial condition of the corporation, and, while so engaged as their agent in examination of its books and accounts, obtained private information which enabled him to secure the option for his own benefit. The complaint, however, fails to allege that Ray or Kidder were actually employed by the corporation for any purpose whatever. All that the complaint does allege in this regard is "that Charles Ray and Albert A. Kidder, Jr., offered to defendant Cosmosart Realty & Building Corporation, and undertook on its behalf to raise the necessary funds. * * *" Nowhere in the complaint is it stated that this offer was accepted, or that the corporation employed them to perform this service. Whatever service they did perform appears to have been voluntarily rendered. No agency or employment is actually alleged. It does appear that "Ray and Kidder employed the defendant Grant to examine the books and accounts of the defendant corporation," and that Grant "accepted their said employment and forthwith entered thereon." Since the allegations of the employment of Ray and Kidder by the corporation are insufficient to create an agency, it follows that Grant's employment by Ray and Kidder creates no fiduciary relation with the corporation. These allegations are therefore fatally defective. This defect of pleading was directly assailed by means of a special demurrer, in which it is charged that "it cannot be ascertained (from the complaint) whether the said Ray or Kidder entered into a contract of agency with the corporation, or not." It is further alleged in the complaint that "the defendant Grant was * * * also an employee and agent of the defendant corporation." It is, however, not alleged what the nature of this employment was. In view of the specific challenge of the special demurrer that "it cannot be ascertained (from the complaint) what was the nature of the defendant Grant's employment by the said corporation," this allegation is also fatally defective. The failure to allege the fiduciary relation of the defendant Grant was the very ground upon which the demurrer was sustained.

[2] The complaint is likewise defective in its attempt to allege the corporation's title to the option in question. This option was incorporated in a lease which was executed from Clark & Sherman Land Company to J. E. Bowen. The right to the option depended upon the title to the lease. There is no definite allegation that the lease was assigned or transferred to the Cosmosart Realty & Building Corporation by Bowen. The language of the complaint is a mere recital or description of the means by which the defendant corporation gained possession of the land described in said lease. The complaint states that "defendant (corporation) was then and there lawfully in possession of said land and premises as lessee by assignment from a certain J. E. Bowen under a lease made by Clark and Sherman Land Company." This is not a definite recital of facts showing an actual transfer of the lease, but is merely a recital of possession of the property, based upon an assumption that the lease was duly assigned. It follows that the title to the option is insufficiently alleged, and, unless it appeared that the defendant corporation held title to the option, the stockholders would have no ground upon which to complain of its transfer to Grant.

[3, 4] The plaintiffs have sued in the capacity of stockholders and creditors. There is, however, no allegation that, as creditors, they first reduced their claims to judgments and exhausted their legal remedies. This is necessary before a creditor may maintain an equitable action involving the assets of a corporation. A creditor's suit in equity will not lie against a corporation until the claim has first been reduced to judgment and his legal remedies have been exhausted. Roberts v. Buckingham, 172 Cal. 458, 156 P. 1018; 7 Cal. Jur. 793, § 6; 8 R. C. L. 19, §§ 23, 24; 4 Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. (4th Ed.) 3355, § 1415, page 3602, § 1533. The theory upon which the creditors of a corporation seek to reclaim property alleged to have been wrongfully conveyed, is that they possess an equitable lien upon such property for the payment of their claims. This theory of an equitable lien upon the assets of a corporation for the payment of creditors' claims, however, has been repudiated as the law in America. In the case of Fogg v. Blair, 133 U. S. 534, 10 S. Ct. 338, 33 L. Ed. 721, Mr. Justice Field says: "Such a doctrine has no existence." Even where a corporation has wrongfully conveyed property to an individual without consideration, an equitable action on the part of the creditor will not lie against the grantee to declare a trust in such property for the benefit of stockholders or creditors. This doctrine is fully discussed in the case of Delaney Producing & Refining Co. v. Crystal Petroleum Products Corporation et al. (Cal. App.) 264 P. 521. In that case, without having first reduced his claim to judgment, a creditor brought an equitable action against the corporation grantor and the individual grantee, alleging that the corporation was bankrupt and that it had wrongfully and fraudulently conveyed a valuable lease and option to the grantee. The complaint prayed that this property be declared to be held in trust by the grantee for the benefit of the stockholders and creditors. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained. From a judgment entered against the plaintiff for failure to amend, an appeal was perfected. Upon appeal, this judgment was affirmed. So far as the status of the plaintiffs is concerned in the present case, as creditors, that case is conclusive. Moreover, an equitable action against a corporation for fraud or malversation of funds will not lie without making the delinquent officers parties to the suit. A corporation is a distinct entity, separate and apart from its officers, who in their fiduciary capacity hold the property and assets of the corporation in trust, and who, as such trustees, are alone accountable for fraud and mismanagement. Delaney Producing & Refining Co. v. Crystal Petr. Prod. Corp., supra.

[5-8] Minority stockholders may maintain a suit in equity for redress for wrongful disposal of property, or for an accounting in behalf of themselves and other stockholders for the benefit of the corporation, when through the fraud or malversation of officers or directors, or through the fraud or coercion of a third person, the corporation has been divested of property, and when upon request the officers fail and refuse to institute proceedings to remedy the injury. 6 Fletcher's Enc. of Corp. 6916, § 4064, page 6931, § 4066; Burbank v. Dennis, 101 Cal. 90, 35 P. 444. A trust may be impressed upon the property of a corporation, and an accounting required of a successor in interest who has wrongfully acquired the same. 6 Fletcher, supra, 6933, § 4066; Meredith v. Art Metal Cons. Co., 97 Misc. Rep. 69, 161 N. Y. S. 1. Before a stockholder's suit for redress will lie in equity, against a corporation for fraud on the part of the directors, or on the part of a third person, demand must first be made upon the officers to institute appropriate proceedings, unless such demand would be futile. Their refusal or failure to act must also follow. 14 Corp. Jur. 943, § 1466; 6 Fletcher, supra, 6934, §§ 4067, 4068. In the present action the complaint alleges a sufficient demand upon the directors, and refusal to act. Before a stockholder's suit in equity of this nature will lie, he must show that he has exhausted his legal remedies, such as appealing for redress to the stockholders at large (Civ. Code, § 305; 14 Corp. Jur. 944, § 1466; Hawes v. Oakland, 104 U. S. 450, 26 L. Ed. 827; Rathbone v. Parkersburg Gas Co., 31 W. Va. 798, 8 S. E. 570; Dunphy v. Traveller Newspaper Ass'n, 146 Mass. 495, 16 N. E. 426), unless it appears that the board of directors who decline to act own a majority of the stock and control the corporation (6 Fletcher, supra, 6916, § 4064). In the present case it is alleged that the board of directors control a majority of the stock and refuse to act.

[9] In the absence of fraud, breach of trust, or transactions which are ultra vires, the conduct of directors in the management of the affairs of a corporation is not subject to attack by minority stockholders in a suit at equity, where such acts are discretionary and are performed in good faith, reasonably believing them to be for the best interest of the corporation. 14 Corp. Jur. 927, § 1444; 6 Fletcher, supra, 6924, § 4065, page 6797, § 3992, page 6931, § 4066; Rogers v. Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. (C. C.) 91 F. 299.

[10] It is extremely doubtful whether the acts of the directors which are complained of in the present suit amount to a violation of discretion on their part. So far as the complaint enlightens us, the corporation defendant had no property other than the lease of the Los Angeles lots. It was indebted to the extent of $160,000. It cost $150,000 additional to purchase the fee in this land from Clark & Sherman Land Company. In its stringent financial condition, the corporation would have had difficulty in negotiating funds with which to pay its debts, satisfy the claims of Clark & Sherman Land Company, and market the property. Such a plan would have required a considerable outlay of time and money. The success of the enterprise was at least doubtful. The procedure which was followed by the directors possessed no such element of chance. In pooling its interest pursuant to the terms of the contract, the corporation debts were to be first paid. The cost of purchasing the fee in the property was to be next paid. The balance of the proceeds was to be divided into three parts, one of which was to be paid to the corporation. Good business judgment would seem to recommend the safe and sure plan which was adopted by the directors, especially since the corporation was deeply in debt and unprepared to market the property to good advantage. At least the transaction appears to be a discretionary matter, and, if so, affords a stockholder no authority to challenge it in this equitable action. Every presumption is in favor of the good faith of the directors. Interference with such discretion is not warranted in doubtful cases. In Gamble v. Queens County Water Co., 123 N. Y. 91, 25 N. E. 201, 9 L. R. A. 527, it is said: "To warrant" interference by a court in favor of minority stockholders "a case must be made out which plainly shows that such action is so far opposed to the true interests of the corporation itself as to lead to the clear inference that no one thus acting could have been influenced by any honest desire to secure such interest, but that he must have acted with an intent to subserve some outside purpose, regardless of the consequences to the company."

While it is true that primarily the fraud and coercion complained of is charged to the defendant Grant, yet the clear inference exists that the directors of the corporation were guilty of malfeasance in refusing to institute an action for redress. Indeed, except for the existence of such fraud or breach of trust on the part of the directors, this action would not lie.

The demurrer was therefore properly sustained, and the judgment is affirmed.

96 Cal. App. 632

PEOPLE v. STRIDER et al. (Cr. 1721.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 6, 1929.

1. Criminal law 🔑563—Corpus delicti may be established without showing crime charged was committed by defendant.

It is not essential, in order to establish the corpus delicti, to show that the crime charged was committed by defendant.

2. Robbery 🔑24(3)—Evidence as to identification held sufficient to sustain conviction for robbery.

In prosecution for robbery, evidence relating to identification held sufficient to sustain conviction.

3. Robbery 🔑24(1)—Evidence relative to defendant's complicity held sufficient to sustain conviction for robbery.

Evidence, in prosecution for robbery, relative to defendant's complicity in crime, held sufficient to sustain conviction.

4. Criminal law 🔑1044—Objection to question on cross-examination really to answer, without motion to strike answer, was not available on appeal.

Where objection to question on cross-examination was not really to the question but to the answer, and there was no motion to strike answer so as to give trial court opportunity to pass on real question, the objection against question was not available to defendant on appeal, in that he had duty under such circumstances of moving to strike the answer.

5. Criminal law 🔑763, 764(6)—Refusal of instruction that jury might properly consider that defendants, when apprehended, were unarmed, held not erroneous.

In prosecution for robbery, refusal of instruction that, in considering the question of innocence or guilt, the jury might properly consider that defendants when apprehended were unarmed, held not erroneous, since instruction should not bear upon weight to be attached to particular piece of evidence.

6. Criminal law 🔑798(1)—Instruction relative to juror's duty, if entertaining reasonable doubt of guilt, held properly modified to state duty in case of definite conclusion as to guilt or innocence.

Requested instruction, relative to juror entertaining reasonable doubt of guilt of defendant having duty not to vote for verdict of guilty, held properly modified so as to state that juror had duty not to vote for contrary verdict in case he should reach a definite conclusion as to guilt or innocence of defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leon R. Yankwich, Judge.

Walter Strider and George Crawford were convicted of robbery, and Crawford alone appeals. Affirmed.

C. L. Belt and E. S. Green, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and John D. Richer, of Los Angeles, for the People.

WORKS, P. J. The defendants were convicted of the crime of robbery. Defendant Crawford appeals from the judgment.

Evidence was adduced at the trial which tended to prove the following facts: Appellant and his codefendant, Strider, hailed a taxicab, of which one Bates was the driver. Both entered the vehicle and one of them—the evidence does not show which—directed Bates to drive them to a certain street intersection. When the cab neared the place, Bates asked at which corner the defendants desired to alight, and "they" told him to turn down a certain street and stop at the third house on the left. When Bates reached the place indicated, an automobile, with a man and woman seated in it, was found parked there, and "they"—his passengers—told him to drive further on. When he had gone 100 or 150 feet beyond the parked car, "they" told him to stop. He did so, read his taximeter, and remarked to Strider and appellant that the fare was a certain amount. Strider then said, the passengers apparently still being in the cab: "To hell with the fare. We want what you have got." Strider then pointed what looked like a pistol at Bates, and following this action placed it against his back. Strider then said to the driver, "Keep your back to us," and rifled his pockets, taking money and papers from them. Strider and Crawford then left the taxicab and walked away in the view of the man and woman in the parked car. These latter saw defendants at the trial and testified that in size—one of them being much taller than the other—and in the appearance of their apparel they resembled the two men seen walking from the taxicab. Appellant testified that at the trial he wore the same suit of clothes in which he was dressed the night the robbery was committed. Bates, when on the witness stand, identified defendants as the two passengers, one of whom despoiled him of his money and papers. Immediately after the robbery, Bates drove away and soon met a police officer. The two then went to the scene of the crime and proceeded on a search for the culprits. At about four blocks from the spot they saw a moving automobile, stopped it, and found defendants in it.

[1] It is contended by appellant that the corpus delicti was not proven, but the proof was so clearly made that the point is hardly worthy of mention. From something that is said in one of the briefs we infer that appellant entertains the view that a complete proof of the corpus delicti contemplates a showing that he committed the crime. If this is appellant's view, he is in error in holding it. "To establish the corpus delicti it is not essential to show that the crime charged was committed by the defendant." People v. Rodway, 77 Cal. App. 738, 247 P. 532.

[2, 3] The point is also made that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the verdict against appellant. Two grounds are taken in support of this contention. It is first said that there was no sufficient identification of appellant as the person who was present with Strider in the taxicab when the robbery was perpetrated. Without reciting the specific evidence bearing upon the point, we are amply satisfied that the identification was sufficiently complete. It is also contended that there was no evidence showing appellant's complicity in the crime, and authorities are cited to the effect that one who merely stands by and sees a crime committed may not be charged with a participation in it. But, within the meaning of those authorities, this was not a case of standing by. The two defendants hailed the taxicab together, entered it together, and left it together. If it was Strider who ordered Bates to drive beyond the car parked before the house at which the driver had previously been told to stop, appellant, if he were innocent, must have regarded the circumstances as suspicious, and yet he made no comment upon it. Moreover, when Strider said to Bates that "we" want what you have got and ordered him to keep his back to "us," appellant heard what was said without demur, thus impressing upon the mind of Bates the fact that he was in the hands of two criminals instead of only one. If appellant had merely denied the right of Strider to use the plural pronouns, Bates might have called upon him, as an innocent and well-disposed citizen, for aid. After Bates had been despoiled of his property and Strider and Crawford had alighted from the cab, the latter made no attempt to separate himself from the active perpetrator of the robbery. On the contrary, he, together with Strider, entered another automobile; appellant thus joining his companion in an attempt to flee from the scene of the crime. Appellant's conduct was not that of an innocent man. The evidence was sufficient to show his complicity in the robbery.

[4] When appellant's mother was on the witness stand, it was developed that her son had been working for one McClellan. This testimony came at the close of the direct examination. The cross-examination began thus:

"Q. Where was he working? A. For McClellan, the contractor, because this Mr Corval [who had not been mentioned during the direct examination] gave him a job, because he goes to him and gets him a job. * * *

"Q. * * * He works for Mr. Corval, is that correct? A. Mr. Corval gets him a job.

"Q. Who is Mr. Corval?"

An objection was interposed to this latter question, it was overruled, and appellant now claims that the ruling was error. We think it was not. The question was harmless. There was nothing in it to indicate to the court what harmful answer, if any, it might bring forth. The witness replied, however: "He is a parole officer of some kind." Appellant objects strenuously that the question forced the witness to make an answer which indicated that appellant had once been in the toils of the law, thus degrading and prejudicing him in the minds of the members of the jury, but it is evident that the objection is not really to the question but to the answer. Yet there was no motion to strike the answer. The trial court was given no opportunity to pass upon the real question which is presented here. It was the duty of appellant, under these circumstances, to move to strike the answer (People v. Smith, 151 Cal. 619, 91 P. 511), and, as he did not do so, the objection which he now urges against the question is not available to him. In the case cited the Supreme Court said: "There was nothing on the face of the question to indicate that an answer to it might not be relevant, material, and competent evidence, and hence it was not improper to overrule the objection urged against the inquiry upon the only ground urged—namely, that it was irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent. The question only appeared to be vulnerable to all these objections when the answer to it was given, and as that was the first and only time it appeared to be so, it was the duty of the defendant to move to strike the answer out, and having failed to do so no error can be predicated on the overruling of the objection."

[5] Appellant requested an instruction which contained a statement that in considering the question of innocence or guilt the jury might "properly consider that the defendants when apprehended were unarmed," and it was refused. We think the refusal was proper. Instructions should not "bear upon the weight to be attached to a particular piece of evidence, as their effect may be either to convey to the jury the impression that the judge is suspicious of the testimony against which the instruction is particularly directed, or give added weight to the testimony, depending upon the nature of the comment." 8 Cal. Jur. 294.

[6] Appellant asked for an instruction containing this sentence: "If, after consideration of the whole case, any juror should entertain a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendant, it is the duty of such juror, not to vote for a verdict of guilty, nor to be influenced in so voting for the single reason that a majority of the jury should be in favor of a verdict of guilty" The trial judge gave the instruction, but changed the quoted sentence to read thus: "If after consideration of the whole case any juror should reach a definite conclusion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendants or either of them, it is the duty of such juror not to vote for a contrary verdict, nor to be influenced in so voting for the single reason that a majority of the jury or all of the jurors should be in favor of such a verdict." We think the alteration was proper.

Judgment affirmed.

NISSEN v. COULT et al. (Civ. 3663.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 5, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⚷1011(1)—Findings based on conflicting evidence may not be disturbed.

Findings based on substantially conflicting evidence may not be disturbed by an appellate court.

2. Waters and water courses ⚷263—Evidence held to sustain finding that damage to rice crop was not caused by negligence or misconduct on part of directors of irrigation district.

Evidence, in action for damages against directors of irrigation district for alleged negligence and misconduct in failing, refusing, and neglecting to supply plaintiff with necessary water, held to sustain finding that damage accruing to plaintiff's rice crop was not caused by any willful violation of duty by said directors, nor through any negligence or misconduct on their part.

3. Waters and water courses ⚷254—Water user cannot complain of unauthorized sale of water by irrigation district directors unless deprived of water thereby.

Sale of water by directors of irrigation district for use on lands lying outside of district, without legal authority so to do, furnishes no ground for complaint on part of water user, unless he was deprived of water to which he was entitled by such unauthorized action.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; Eugene P. McDaniel, Judge.

Action by G A. Nissen against J H. Coult and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frank A. Duryea, of Marysville, for appellant.

Warren Steel and Homer Lingenfelter, both of Marysville, and Jackson & Peterson, of San Francisco, for respondents.

JAMISON, Justice pro tem. This is an action for damages brought by appellant against respondents Coult, Steel, and Eichler, directors of the Cordua irrigation district, for their alleged negligence and misconduct and willful violation of their duties as such directors, in failing, refusing, and neglecting to supply appellant with the water necessary to irrigate and mature his rice crop growing on land situated in said district; the National Surety Company being joined as party defendant because of the fact that it had executed bonds on behalf of said directors for the faithful performance of their duties.

The case was tried by the court sitting without a jury, and judgment was rendered in favor of respondents. The facts substantially are as follows: In the fore part of 1925, W. F. Cordes, being then the owner of 632 acres of land situated in said irrigation district, entered into an agreement with F. W. Johnson for the sale of said land to him, and under said agreement Johnson took possession of the land. On February 10, 1925, Johnson leased all of the westerly portion of said land, being the part that had theretofore been cropped to rice, to appellant, who agreed to plant same to rice during the 1925 season; the amount of land so leased to appellant being 260 acres. Appellant claims to have planted some 212 acres of said land to rice, but claims that by the negligence and misconduct of said directors in failing to furnish him with the water to which he was entitled, he was able to mature a crop upon 90 acres only. In his opening brief appellant sets forth six specifications of error, the first of which is that the evidence was insufficient to support the findings; the second, that the decision is against the law; and, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth, that the trial court erred in finding that the lessor had not assigned to the lessee his water rights, that the trial court erred in not finding that the appellant was entitled to 220 inches of water, that it erred in finding that respondent directors were not guilty of negligence in the performance of their official duties, or otherwise, and in finding that the failure to pay the assessments on the Cordes ranch justified the said directors in refusing and failing to deliver sufficient irrigation waters to the appellant.

We will first consider the question as to whether or not there is substantial evidence to support the finding of the court that the said directors were not guilty of negligence in the performance of their official duties, or otherwise, as claimed by appellant.

The trial court found that whatever damage was suffered by appellant to his rice crop during the irrigating season of 1925 was caused by the negligence, carelessness, and conduct of appellant and his employés; that while they attempted to prepare some 220 acres for rice, no proper work was done toward cleaning out the irrigation ditches on said land and placing same in condition to receive the water that came to said land, and apply and distribute same in a proper manner for rice growing; that it is not true that appellant suffered any damage that was caused, proximately or at all, by any negligence or misconduct, or willful or other violation of the official duty of said directors, or of any of them, in failing, refusing, or neglecting to deliver irrigation water to appellant in any manner, or at all. There is substantial support for these findings in the testimony of Warren Steel, one of the respondent directors. He testified that in the beginning of the irrigation season in 1925 he saw and knew the condition of the Cordes land upon which appellant was preparing to grow the rice crop, and that the service ditch and checker ditches leading to and upon said land were foul with water grass, wire grass, tules, and different kinds of weeds, and that in the fore part of June, 1925, he told S. G. Meng, who was the employé of appellant having charge of the planting of said rice crop, that unless the ditches were cleaned out he would have difficulty all during the irrigating season in irrigating the crop of rice, but that the ditches were not cleaned and remained in that condition during the whole season. This witness further testified that appellant, during the whole of the irrigating season of 1925, received for the irrigation of his crop of rice from 225 to 275 inches of water, and that if appellant had cleaned his ditches and handled the water properly, he would have covered his rice field with it. Defendants also produced evidence showing that at the beginning of the irrigating season, upon request of appellant, they caused a full head of water to be turned into the ditch leading to the land leased by him, but that by the failure of appellant to have a flume in said ditch in proper condition, the water escaped and did not reach his land. There was also evidence that water that should have gone to the rice crop of appellant was surreptitiously turned off and lost to appellant's land by users above him, and that when this was brought to the attention of the directors they adopted measures that prevented its recurrence.

[1-3] The rule is well settled that findings based upon substantially conflicting evidence may not be disturbed by an appellate court. Hunt v. L. M. Field, Inc., 202 Cal. 701, 262 P. 730; Waer v. Waer, 189 Cal. 178, 207 P. 891; Levi v. Chesley, 178 Cal. 145, 172 P. 607; Webster v. Lowe, 177 Cal. 385, 170 P. 850. The trial court having found upon substantially conflicting evidence that the damage accruing to appellant's rice crop during the season of 1925 was not caused by any willful violation of their duties by said directors, nor through any negligence or misconduct upon their part, we are of the opinion that we cannot do otherwise than affirm the judgment. There was evidence that during the irrigating season of 1925 the said directors sold 480 inches of the water belonging to said district for use upon lands lying outside of the district. Admitting that the directors were without legal authority so to do, yet, before such action upon their part can furnish ground for complaint upon the part of appellant in this action, it must appear that by such unauthorized act he has been deprived of water to which he was entitled.

By the findings of the court and by the testimony of Steel it appears that such action upon the part of the directors did not prevent appellant from receiving all water to which he was entitled.

As our views as hereinbefore expressed are determinative of this appeal, we deem it unnecessary to pass upon the other alleged errors of the trial court.

The judgment is affirmed.

NATIONAL AUTOMOBILE INS. CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY. (Civ. 6296.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 24, 1929.

Bail ⟹74(1)—Original bail held unexonerated; accused failing to appear on arraignment date, and bond to cover bail as reduced not being furnished.

Where bond for bail as reduced on motion of defendant charged with violation of Wright Act (St. 1921, p. 79) was not furnished and accused did not appear and answer charge nor hold himself amenable to orders and process of the court, original bond furnished for bail was not exonerated, and hence was forfeitable as bond provided when defendant failed to appear on date of arraignment.

Application by the National Automobile Insurance Company for writ of certiorari to review an order of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County of forfeiture of bail furnished by petitioner for Domenick Romeo. Order affirmed.

Frank S. Adams and Milton H. Silverberg, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Everett W. Mattoon, Co. Counsel, S. V. O. Prichard, Deputy Co. Counsel, and William B. McKesson, Deputy Co. Counsel, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. On June 4, 1928, one Domenick Romeo was arrested and taken before a judge of the municipal court of the city of Los Angeles upon a charge of having violated the Wright Act (St. 1921, p. 79), a felony, at which time he gave bail in the sum of $2,500, as then fixed, and was released. On June 6th, at the close of his preliminary examination, the defendant moved for a reduction of bail to $1,500, whereupon an order was made and entered directing that he furnish bail in the amount last mentioned or be committed to the custody of the sheriff until such bail be given. He was not taken into custody, nor did he furnish new bail, but left the courtroom and was at all times at large thereafter. Upon the date set for arraignment in the superior court, Romeo failed to appear, whereupon the latter court declared his bail forfeited, and ordered the issuance of a bench warrant. The original bail in the sum of $2,500 having been furnished by the petitioner herein, it seeks by certiorari to review the proceedings below, and prays exoneration therefrom.

The numerous authorities relied upon by the petitioner are uniform in adhering to the well-established rule that if a defendant be convicted, or be surrendered by his sureties and actually taken into custody, his bail given for appearance at the time of trial will be exonerated, and the bond rendered functus officio. But there is no contention in the instant case that the defendant was at any time surrendered, nor that he was present at the time set for arraignment, or that he was tried.

We are cited to no authority directly in point, nor are we aware of any. In People v. Newman, 100 App. Div. 436, 91 N. Y. S. 811, it appeared that Newman and another entered into a recognizance in the sum of $1,000, wherein it was provided that the principal would "personally appear during the said [preliminary] examination and on each and every day to which the said examination may be adjourned until the same is fully completed." The defendant in the criminal case was present at the commencement of the preliminary examination, and after hearing testimony on the part of the people the magistrate continued the proceedings, and directed that the defendant furnish a new undertaking in the sum of $1,500, which he failed to do, but departed, and was not present when the examination was resumed. In affirming a judgment against the surety it was said, in part: "The undertaking was dated January 21st. An examination was then undoubtedly begun and testimony was taken on the part of the people, but it does not appear that the examination was then completed, for Newman in his affidavit says that the accused was required to furnish surety in the sum of $1,500 for a further examination, which indicates that the examination was incomplete. Until that further bond was furnished the one upon which Newman was surety continued in force. The mere increase of the amount of bail did not exonerate the appellant Newman until the new bond was furnished and Schaeffer was still in the custody of his surety. He was not taken into the custody of the law at all. It was the duty of the surety to produce his principal during the examination or until the further bail was given."

The undertaking here involved provided, not alone for the appearance of the accused at the preliminary examination, but required that he "appear and answer the charge above mentioned in whatever court it may be prosecuted, and will at all times hold himself amenable to the orders and process of the court, and if convicted, will appear for judgment and render himself in execution thereof; or, if the said defendant fails to perform either of these conditions, that he will pay to the people of the State of California the sum of twenty-five hundred dollars." The accused for whose appearance the petitioner herein became surety did not perform the condition that he appear and answer the charge "in whatever court it may be prosecuted," nor did he "hold himself amenable to the orders and process of the court." It was the duty of the surety to produce his principal so that if convicted the latter could "appear for judgment and render himself in execution thereof," and for a failure to do so the surety promised to "pay to the people of the State of California the sum of twenty-five hundred dollars." Upon the second order of the municipal court having been made, it was the right of the surety to surrender the principal. The order of June 6th did not purport to exonerate the bond previously given. As a result of it such exoneration could have been secured through the execution of a new bond in the sum of $1,500. Until such bond be given, however, we think the one first provided was in full force and effect. This conclusion having been reached, no other argument presented requires consideration.

The order is affirmed.

MARTIN v. STERLING GROCERY CO. et al.
(Civ. 6428.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 6, 1929.

1. Appeal and error 🔑629—Motion to set aside appellant's default and extend time to file transcript is addressed to appellate court's sound discretion (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Motion, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, to set aside appellant's default in not filing transcript of record, points and authorities, within time prescribed by law and court rules, and extend time for filing transcript, is addressed to sound discretion of appellate court.

2. Appeal and error 🔑629—Affidavit of appellant's attorney held not to show that long delay in filing transcript was caused solely by "inadvertence or excusable neglect" (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Affidavit of appellant's attorney that he instructed his docket clerk to have reporter prepare transcript when he called to give requested estimate of costs, but that regular clerk was on vacation and substitute neglected to make entry in office docket as to when transcript was due, and that affiant was busily engaged in legal work and first knew that transcript was not being prepared when notified of motion to dismiss appeal after lapse of over 130 days, held not to show that delay was caused solely by inadvertence or excusable neglect within Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Inadvertence, Surprise, and Excusable Neglect.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. D. McConnell, Judge.

Action by Mrs. Alice Martin against the Sterling Grocery Company, a copartnership, and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. On defendants' motion to dismiss the appeal. Motion granted.

Elbert E. Hensley, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Lucius K. Chase, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIL, Justice pro tem. [1, 2] The motion to dismiss is made upon the ground that appellant has failed to file a transcript of the record and her points and authorities within the time prescribed by law and the rules of this court, and the motion is based upon the certificate of the county clerk and various affidavits showing such default. Appellant admits her default but seeks relief under the provisions of section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, on the grounds of inadvertence and excusable neglect. Goldberg v. Davis, 76 Cal. App. 489, 244 P. 952; City Properties Co. v. Bond & Finance Corp., 195 Cal. 566, 234 P. 1112.

The affidavit of appellant's attorney shows that the action is for damages for personal injuries; that the trial resulted in a judgment for defendants, and that in due time appellant gave notice of appeal and the next day, or August 30, 1928, notified the clerk to prepare a transcript on appeal, and on the same day he notified one of the stenographic reporters of said trial that he had given the notices above indicated and requested said reporter to consult with another reporter of said trial, and ascertain the approximate cost of a transcript and to notify affiant's office, whereupon satisfactory arrangements would be made for payment for same; that one or two days later the reporter telephoned affiant and advised that while he had looked up his own notebook and could tell approximately the amount of his charges, he had not as yet been able to consult with the second reporter to learn the amount of his charges for the portion of the testimony taken down by him; he agreed, however, that as soon as he received notice from the county clerk to prepare the transcript on appeal he would notify affiant of the total approximate charges for the same, at which time affiant was to notify the reporter to proceed with the preparation on the transcript on appeal; also, that on his part he instructed his docket clerk that, when the reporter called to give his said estimate and to get his final instructions as to the preparation of the transcript, she should have him prepare the same. Then follows a long recital of facts in the affidavit to the effect that the docket clerk upon whom he ordinarily relied was on a two weeks' vacation at the time, and that her substitute, upon whom he also relied, through ignorance or lack of experience in the position, failed him and neglected to make an entry in the office docket as to when the matter was due, and that he was not aware that the final arrangements for the transcript had not been made, and relied upon the fact that if any further arrangements were to be made the same would be called to his attention; that affiant himself was busily engaged in the trial of cases and other legal work during this period of time, and that the first he knew that the transcript was not in process of preparation by the reporter was when he received the notice of the motion to dismiss the appeal, January 15, 1929; that the delay was caused by the facts as by him stated. We have set out the above in order to show the gist of the claim of inadvertence and excusable neglect upon which appellant relies for permission to file the transcript. There was also a showing on the part of affiant of good faith and a belief by him that there are reasonable grounds to expect a reversal if the appeal were considered on its merits. No arrangements have yet been made for the preparation of the transcript.

The motion to set aside appellant's default and to extend the time in which the transcript may be filed is addressed to the sound discretion of this court. Affiant's affidavit is not convincing. If he had intended to proceed diligently he would have taken some care during the period of more than one hundred thirty days which elapsed before the notice of motion to dismiss the appeal was served upon him. We are of the opinion that the default was not caused solely by inadvertence or excusable neglect; and the implied motion to set it aside is denied.

Respondents' motion to dismiss the appeal is granted.

PEOPLE v. LANNAGAN et al. (Cr. 1761.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 7, 1929.

Indictment and information 🔑71—Information for burglary, alleging entry was made with intent to commit crime of larceny, held sufficiently specific (Pen. Code, § 952).

Information for burglary, alleging entry was made with intent to commit the crime of larceny, held sufficiently specific, in that the word "larceny" has been so long employed in law for purpose of designating particular offense that its use in information could not have failed to advise accused of nature of offense, as required by Pen. Code, § 952.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; B. Rey Schauer, Judge.

James Lannagan and James Monroe were convicted of burglary and robbery, and defendant Monroe appeals. Affirmed.

Stanley Visel, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John D. Richer, of Los Angeles, for the People.

THOMPSON, J. Two informations were filed by the district attorney of Los Angeles county, charging the defendants in three counts with burglary and in five other counts with robbery. They were tried by a jury and found guilty. The appellant prosecutes this appeal from the judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial.

But one ground is advanced as a reason for reversal. The counts which charge the defendants with burglary allege in each instance that the entry was made "with the intent then and there to commit the crime of larceny." The appellant says that, "since the crime of burglary may be committed in five distinct ways, it cannot be ascertained from the burglary counts which one of these distinct ways was meant." He also relies upon the case of People v. Myers (Cal. App.) 269 P. 963, as an authority for his position. It is to be noted, however, that in the Myers Case the language employed was "with the intent then and therein to commit the crime of theft." The ruling in that case was based upon the fact that theft may be committed in five different ways, and had nothing to do with the definition of larceny other than to point out that larceny had been renamed by statute, and made one of the kinds of theft. When such general language is employed that the information fails to state the nature of the offense charged, it is obvious that it fails to meet the requirements of good pleading or of the provisions of section 952 of the Penal Code, which section necessitates that, while the information may be in the words of the enactment or any other words, it should be "sufficient to give the accused notice of the offense of which he is charged." We think that the word larceny has been so long employed in the law for the purpose of designating a particular offense, and has come to have such a well-understood meaning, that its use in these informations could not have failed to advise the accused of the nature of the offense with which he was charged. In this respect we are fully in accord with the case of People v. Giron (Cal. App.) 270 P. 462, and find therein nothing inconsistent with People v. Myers, supra.

Judgment and order affirmed.

CURTIS v. WASEM et al. (Civ. 6200.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 4, 1929.

1. Bills and notes 🔑188—Indorsement in blank on back of note is sufficient assignment in writing of note (Civ. Code, § 3112).

Indorsement in blank on back of note, which is a sufficient indorsement under Civ. Code, § 3112, is also a sufficient assignment in writing of the note.

2. Bills and notes 🔑110, 534—Attorney's fees, allowed pursuant to per cent. designated in note, cannot be said to be illegal or excessive.

Where note provided that designated per cent. of amount found to be due should be added for attorney's fees, if suit were brought to recover on the note, a fee allowed by court on such basis cannot be said to be illegal or excessive.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ira F. Thompson, Judge.

Action by Amelia R. Curtis against Al Wasem and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

L. Kearney, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Edward T. Sherer and Welburn Mayock, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIL, Justice pro tem. This is an action on a promissory note. No question is raised as to the execution and delivery of the note to the payee, David Robbins. The plaintiff is his sister, and alleges that she is his assignee. As a defense the defendants set up in their answer that the note was without consideration, and was delivered to David Robbins conditionally; that the note was a part of a transaction whereby he conditionally sold his confectionery store at Clifton, Ariz., to defendants; that the sale was not to be completed, and the note was not to become a promissory note, unless Robbins should die in the military service of the United States, and in that event only should the defendants become liable for payment of said note; that he was discharged alive from military service, but failed to return the note or take back his confectionery.

It was set up in the complaint that the note, before maturity, for a valuable consideration, was sold and delivered to the plaintiff; but this position was abandoned by the plaintiff, and nothing further need be said on this issue. The parties went to trial on the affirmative defenses set forth in the answer. The court found for the plaintiff as to all the facts set forth in said defenses and entered judgment accordingly.

[1] It is the first contention of appellants that the plaintiff and her brother both testified that there was a written assignment of the note, and that this evidence was stricken out as a conclusion and not the best evidence, yet the plaintiff did not show any effort to get the written assignment nor lay any foundation for the introduction of oral evidence as to the contents of the written assignment, and that this constituted a complete failure of proof as to the assignment. There is other evidence, however, including an indorsement in blank on the back of the note and an identification of the signature of David Robbins thereon. Such a signature of the indorser without additional words is a sufficient indorsement (Civ. Code, § 3112), and such an indorsement is an assignment in writing.

[2] It is next contended that the attorney fee allowed by the trial court was excessive and illegal. The note provided that a designated per cent. of the amount found to be due on the note should be added for attorney's fees, if suit were brought to recover on the note. A fee was allowed by the court on this basis. The basis was not illegal, and under the circumstances not excessive. It is next contended that the interest allowed by the court was excessive. However, respondent has voluntarily remitted all in excess of the amount which appellants claim as the correct sum. And, by computing the attorney's fees on this sum, the judgment, not remitted, stands at $3,604.63, including interest and attorney's fees, on the date of its entry.

It is next contended that plaintiff should have been compelled to answer the question, what became of the $11,000 she held along with the note sued on herein. We have read the transcript. The question was irrelevant. Furthermore it was waived.

It is next contended that the trial court erred in striking out an answer of one of the witnesses, on the ground that the answer was the conclusion of the witness. A reading of the transcript makes it clear that the answer was a mere conclusion and that the ruling was correct. Other assignments of error are mere repetitions of the points already covered, raised in different form or at different stages of the trial. There is no merit in the appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

SECURITY REALTY CO. v. KOST et al.

(Civ. 6197.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 6, 1929.

1. Landlord and tenant 🔑184(1)—Tenancy held not terminated and chattel mortgage securing rent satisfied by notice to quit.

Notice to quit, if rent for certain month were not paid within three days, did not terminate tenancy and cancel lease, thereby satisfying chattel mortgage securing payments thereunder, though tenants immediately quit premises and tendered payment of rent to such time, in view of stipulation in lease, that lessor, obtaining possession on default in payment of any monthly installments, might lease or rent premises and collect deficiencies from tenant.

2. Landlord and tenant 🔑184(1)—Findings, as to when or whether lease was terminated, and amount of unpaid rent, for which mortgaged personalty was security, held unnecessary in action for possession of such personalty.

In action, not to foreclose mortgage, but merely to recover possession of chattels, mortgaged to secure payments of rent under lease authorizing lessor, obtaining possession on default in payment of any installment, to lease premises and recover deficiencies from tenant, it was not necessary for trial court to find when or whether lease was terminated and amount due, for which mortgaged personalty was security; only issue being whether lessor was entitled to possession of personalty.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; F. C. Valentine, Judge.

Action by the Security Realty Company, a corporation, against Mary Kost, Leonard Egley, Viola Egley, and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants Egley appeal. Affirmed.

Geo. M. Harker and H. J. Brady, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Hill, Morgan & Bledsoe and A. S. Montague, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

YORK, J. The plaintiff leased certain real property to defendant Mary Kost, who thereafter assigned her lease to defendants Egley. Together with the assignment of the lease, Mary Kost sold and transferred to the Egleys certain personal property, constituting the furniture, furnishings, etc., in the leased premises. This personal property was subject to a chattel mortgage, which had been executed by Kost to the plaintiff to secure the payment of each and every of the installments of rent provided for in the lease. A default having occurred in payment of rent due, the lessor gave notice to defendants Egley to pay the unpaid balance of rent then due within three days from the date of the notice or deliver up possession of the premises. Said defendants thereupon vacated the premises without paying the rent demanded, but they first removed from said premises the mortgaged property. This action was brought by lessor, who was also the mortgagee, to recover possession of the mortgaged property. By claim and delivery proceedings the personal property was delivered to the plaintiff and was in possession of the plaintiff when judgment was entered herein. Judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff that plaintiff retain possession of the mortgaged property, and also recover the amount of expenses incurred in obtaining such possession. From this judgment, defendants Egley appeal.

Appellants' first and second points are that the three-day notice to quit, by reason of the fact that the appellants immediately quit the premises and tendered payment of rent computed to that time, constituted a termination of the tenancy and cancellation of the lease, and, therefore, a satisfaction of the chattel mortgage given to secure the payments under the lease.

Their third point is that the tender of a check, made by the tenant to the landlord, for rent up to the date when the premises were surrendered, was full payment of any rent due or to become due.

The fourth point is that it was material and necessary for the trial court to find when or whether the lease was terminated, and how much, if anything, was due the plaintiff on the lease for which the mortgaged personal property was security, which personal property was sued for in this action, which is an action for the possession of the personal property only.

The trial court found that the plaintiff was entitled to the possession of the personal property sued for by reason of the fact that the mortgagor had failed to make payment of the monthly installments of the rent, required by the lease, and by reason of the fact that the rent due on the first of June, 1925, was not paid, and the tender, if it was a tender, was only for a part of said sum, and that, therefore, the plaintiff, as mortgagor, was entitled to possession of all of the property mortgaged in accordance with the terms of the lease and the mortgage. There was sufficient evidence for the trial court to make this finding.

[1] The notice given in the instant case expressly provided that the whole amount of rent for the month of June was demanded, and did not demand any forfeiture of the lease, but possession of the real property was demanded only if the rent was not paid. The owner of the property had a right under the lease and under the mortgage to repossess the property in case of nonpayment of rent, so as to enable the owner to rent the property for the best price obtainable, and, if this price was not equal to the amount agreed to be paid under the lease, the mortgage would then be security for the payment to the owner of rent for the property leased to the full amount of the deficiency. The lease contained the following stipulation: "If the tenant shall abandon or vacate said premises before the expiration of this lease, or if, on account of default in the payment of any monthly installment of rent after the tenth of the month, suit shall be brought, and possession of said premises shall be obtained from the tenant by the lessor, the lessor, if it so elect, shall have the option to lease or rent said premises for such rent and upon such terms as it may see fit, and if a sufficient sum shall not be realized to satisfy the rent herein reserved, the tenant agrees to satisfy and pay all such deficiency at the end of each month, and the option and privilege is hereby given the lessor to sue for and collect such deficiency, if any, from the tenant at the end of each month during said time."

In Burke v. Norton, 42 Cal. App. 705, 184 P. 45, the lease contained a stipulation in different words, but similar to that above quoted, in that the lessor was given the right, upon nonpayment of rent, to enter into possession of the premises and, at his option, terminate the lease. The action was in unlawful detainer after a three-day notice to pay rent or surrender possession. The court, in its judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and contrary to the desire of the plaintiff, declared the lease forfeited. The plaintiff appealed and obtained a modification of the judgment by striking out the forfeiture clause. The court declared the rule to be that the retaking of premises by the lessor releases the lessee from subsequently accruing rents, unless the lease expressly provides otherwise. Authorities to this effect are cited and quoted.

[2] By reason of the foregoing conclusions reached in this opinion, and by reason of the fact that this is not an action to foreclose a mortgage, but is merely an action brought solely and only for the possession of chattels mortgaged, it was not necessary for the trial court to make the findings, which were requested by appellants, as specified in their fourth point as hereinbefore set out. The only issue in this claim and delivery action was whether or not the owner of the real property, who was also the owner of the chattel mortgage, was entitled to the possession of the personal property described in the complaint.

Sufficient facts were found by the trial court to justify the judgment that the plaintiff was entitled to possession of such personal property.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

BAXTER v. KING et al. (Civ. 6521.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 25, 1929.

Trusts ⚷371(1)—Complaint seeking accounting and to declare trust, alleging fraud without explaining delay, held not to state cause of action.

Complaint, in action to have trust declared in certain real property and for an accounting, alleging fraud, held not to state cause of action, where it did not state time or circumstances, and agreement relied on was alleged to have been entered into nearly 40 years before action, and where it contained no allegation that in any manner attempted to explain plaintiff's laches in prosecuting alleged claim, and no allegation that plaintiff had exercised due diligence to discover fraud or anything to explain delay in filing action for 7 years after death of party with whom plaintiff's decedent had contracted concerning trust.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John J. Allen, Judge.

Action by Jennie M. Baxter, as administratrix of the estate of Sadie E. Pritchard, deceased, substituted, against Hazel H. King and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. Franklin Baxter, of Los Angeles, and Hamilton A. Bauer, of San Francisco, for appellant.

George Clark Sargent, of San Francisco, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. Action to have a trust declared in certain real property and for an accounting. By a third amended complaint plaintiff alleges: That on January 1, 1892, she and one Fred G. King, now deceased, entered into a verbal agreement of partnership in the city of Denver, state of Colorado, for the purpose of purchasing, developing, and selling oil properties. That the said partnership continued in existence from the date of its inception to December 11, 1920. That on said last-named date King died in Oakland, Cal., and said partnership was thereby dissolved. During its existence, King, so it is alleged, held in his possession and exclusive control all the moneys and property of the partnership amounting to the sum of $300,000. That out of such assets King paid to plaintiff the sum of $25,000 and a like amount to himself. That thereafter King without the knowledge of plaintiff took from the remaining assets the further sum of $25,000, which he invested in nonmineral and nonoil properties. That subsequent to the purchase thereof and without the knowledge and consent of plaintiff, King, without consideration, transferred the same to his wife, Hazel Hubbard King, and his mother-in-law, Mary Blanche Hubbard, defendants herein. It is then charged, on information and belief, that such transfers were made to defraud plaintiff. The description of the different parcels of land, which are situated in Alameda county, is then set forth. Promise on the part of King to make an accounting in the early part of the year 1921 is then alleged, which accounting was prevented through his death. The complaint then recites that plaintiff had no knowledge of the acts of King, in the purchase of the real property and the conveyance of the same to his relatives, until one year before the commencement of this action. The prayer is that defendants be compelled to account for all rents and income derived from the described real property and that defendants be adjudged to hold the same as trustees for the benefit of the partnership of which plaintiff is the sole survivor. General relief is also asked for. To this third amended complaint defendants interposed a demurrer upon the ground that it did not state a cause of action and also that the action was barred under various provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. Uncertainty in many particulars was also alleged. The demurrer was sustained without leave to amend, and judgment followed that plaintiff take nothing by her action. This is an appeal from the judgment.

It will be noticed that the agreement relied on by plaintiff is alleged to have been entered into nearly forty years ago. The complaint contains no allegation that in any manner attempts to explain plaintiff's laches in prosecuting her alleged claim, nor does it contain the existence of any facts which might show impediments to an earlier prosecution thereof. The mere recital that she had no knowledge of King's acts is insufficient to take the case out of the statute. Kleinclaus v. Dutard, 147 Cal. 245, 81 P. 516. Time and circumstances of the acts of fraud should have been set forth which would show that plaintiff was not presumed to have had knowledge of them, so that the court might determine therefrom whether the discovery of the acts was within the time alleged. Musick Cons. Oil Co. v. Chandler, 158 Cal. 7, 13, 109 P. 613; Denike v. Santa Clara, etc., Co., 9 Cal. App. 228, 231, 98 P. 687.

There is an entire lack of allegation to show that plaintiff had exercised due diligence to discover the facts constituting the fraud or any facts excusing failure to make an earlier discovery. 12 Cal. Jur. p. 806.

Then again there is no allegation which in any manner explains the delay in the filing of the action for a period of over seven years after the death of King, although the allegations show that plaintiff was acquainted with this fact; nor is there allegation that a claim was ever presented against his estate. A further analysis of the pleading is unnecessary. The demurrer was rightfully sustained.

Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. MAGGIO.★ (Cr. 1694.)

Rehearing Denied Feb. 8, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 21, 1929.

1. Criminal law ⚷1024(1)—People held entitled to appeal from trial court's order modifying judgment of conviction after affirmance and remittitur (Pen. Code, § 1238, subd. 5; Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Order of trial court, modifying original judgment of conviction after affirmance and remitting of certificate to trial court, by which order sentence was changed from imprisonment to fine, held appealable on part of the people, under Pen. Code, § 1238, subd. 5, permitting appeals from orders made after judgment affecting people's substantial rights, notwithstanding Const. art. 6, § 4½, in view of maxim that the interest of the state requires that there shall be an end to litigation.

2. Criminal law ⚷1192—Jurisdiction of trial court after appeal and remittitur is limited to orders necessary to carry judgment into effect, there being no power to alter or suspend judgment (Pen. Code, §§ 1263, 1265).

Jurisdiction of trial court, which is suspended during appeal, reattaches after remitting of certificate of judgment only for limited purpose of making orders necessary to carry the judgment into effect, under Pen. Code, §§ 1263, 1265, and does not extend to altering or suspending judgment.

3. Criminal law ⚷1192—Trial court's order modifying judgment of conviction, after affirmance thereof, so as to impose fine, instead of imprisonment, held void (Pen. Code, §§ 1263, 1265).

Order of trial court, modifying judgment of conviction, after affirmance thereof on appeal, and remission of certificate of judgment, so as to impose fine, instead of imprisonment, held unauthorized, since power to alter or suspend conviction ceases after affirmance thereof by appellate tribunal, under Pen. Code, §§ 1263, 1265.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; A. C. Finney, Judge.

Salvadore Maggio was convicted of an offense, and from an order amending and modifying the judgment of conviction of violation of section 367c, Penal Code, after affirmance on appeal, the People appeal. On the merits, and on defendant's motion to dismiss appeal. Motion to dismiss denied, and order reversed.

U. S. Webb, Atty Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Elmer W. Heald, Dist. Atty., and Edward B. Patterson, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of El Centro, for the People.

Ernest R. Utley and R. B. Whitelaw, both of El Centro, for respondent.

THOMPSON, J. This cause was heretofore before us on an appeal from the judgment and an order denying a motion for a new trial. The judgment and order were affirmed on April 6, 1982. See People v. Maggio (Cal. App.) 266 P. 813. After the remittitur had gone down, and on June 1, 1928, upon motion of the defendant, the trial judge modified the judgment theretofore rendered, and affirmed by this court, by which the defendant was sentenced to imprisonment at San Quentin for the terms provided by law, to one in which the defendant was fined in the sum of $500. The people prosecute this appeal from the order made, amending and modifying the judgment. The respondent has made a motion to dismiss the appeal, on the ground that the people have no right to appeal from such an order.

[1] Section 1238 of the Penal Code provides that "an appeal may be taken by the people: * * * 5. From an order made after judgment, affecting the substantial rights of the people." If this appeal is properly prosecuted, it must be by virtue of this language. Respondent seriously argues that, from all of the testimony which was before this court on the former hearing, it appears that the punishment sought to be imposed by the order of June 1st is amply sufficient, and all that the court ought to impose, and, therefore, the rights of the people are not substantially affected. He further argues that we ought to invoke the aid of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution in the determination of the question.

We cannot concede the validity of respondent's argument. A familiar maxim of jurisprudence is, "Interest reipublicæ ut sit finis litium." While it is apparent that the people would not have had a right of appeal, if the judgment now sought to be enforced against the defendant had been pronounced in the first instance, yet that is not the situation with which we are confronted. The people have a right to rely upon the finality of judgments, and to know, when a judgment has become final, that there has been an end to that particular litigation. To say that the rights of plaintiff have not been substantially affected would be to deny the force and value of the quoted maxim, and deal a vital blow to the sanctity of judgments. This is not an instance of where final judgment was not rendered because of invalidity of the first attempt, nor is it a case wherein the judgment still reposed within the breast of the judge. It had been entered and affirmed, and appellant is interested in maintaining its integrity.

[2, 3] We are therefore brought to the question whether the trial court had the authority to amend and modify its judgment, arising on the merits of the appeal. What has already been said applies in principle to this problem, but we also find statutory limitations upon the power of the court in this particular. Section 1263 of the Penal Code reads: "If a judgment against the defendant is affirmed, the original judgment must be enforced." And section 1265 of the same Code says: "After the certificate of the judgment has been remitted to the court below, the appellate court has no further jurisdiction of the appeal or of the proceedings thereon, and all orders necessary to carry the judgment into effect must be made by the court to which the certificate is remitted." The respondent here is undoubtedly correct in arguing that jurisdiction of the trial court, which has been suspended during the appeal, reattached, but only for limited purposes, to wit, to make "orders necessary to carry the judgment into effect." Beggs v. Superior Court, 179 Cal. 130, 175 P. 642, is very much in point. In that case, after affirmance of the judgment upon appeal, the defendant made application for a suspension of the execution of the sentence, claiming that the superior court had jurisdiction to pass upon that question at any time before his surrender to the warden of the penitentiary. Our Supreme Court, after quoting from sections 1263 and 1265 of the Penal Code, says: "It is clear, from the reading of these provisions, that, after a judgment of conviction in a criminal case has been affirmed by an appellate tribunal, judicial power to alter or suspend it has ceased." This language is apt and conclusive. We are also impressed with the conviction that any other interpretation would result in endless confusion and uncertainty.

Motion to dismiss appeal denied, and order reversed.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. In denying the petition for a rehearing herein we deem it proper to say that Beggs v. Superior Court, 179 Cal. 130, 175 P. 642, is cited for the purpose of indicating the construction which should be given sections 1263 and 1265 of the Penal Code, and not for the purpose of construing section 1203 of the Penal Code as now amended, respecting the power of the trial court to entertain an application for probation after judgment is pronounced. The latter question is not here involved. The judgment from which this appeal is presented purports to be one in lieu of a judgment formerly pronounced, and not an order designating the fine as a condition annexed to the granting of probation.

Petition for rehearing denied.

In re SHAW'S ESTATE.

McREAVY v. SHAW.

(Civ. 6348.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 6, 1929.

1. Appeal and error 🔑1099(3)—Decision of court on former appeal that office of executrix and trustee were separate cannot be disturbed on subsequent appeal.

Decision of appellate court on former appeal, involving compensation of executrix, that the office of executrix and trustee were separate offices, and ordering settlement of executrix's account on such premise, cannot be disturbed on subsequent appeal from order sustaining objection to annual account of trusteeship.

2. Trusts 🔑315(1)—Executrix, renouncing right to designated compensation, was nevertheless entitled to compensation fixed by will after entering on trusteeship (Code Civ. Proc. § 1618).

Executrix, renouncing right to designated compensation as executrix, in accordance with provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1618, and electing to take the compensation allowed her by law in lieu thereof, was, nevertheless, entitled to compensation fixed by will for trusteeship, after having completed her duties as executrix.

3. Trusts 🔑315(1)—Renunciation of payment of executor's fees should not be allowed, unless carrying renunciation of payment for both services of executor and trustee.

Where will fixes one payment for both services of executor and trustee, the renunciation of the payment for executor's fees should not be allowed, unless it carry with it the renunciation of the whole payment, with all the consequences thereof.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; L. D. Jennings, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of William Shaw, deceased. Annual accounting by Marie Shaw McReavy of trusteeship, wherein Marion Shaw filed objections. Order sustaining the objection, and the trustee appeals. Reversed.

F. L. Richardson, of San Diego, for appellant.

Crouch & Sanders, of San Diego, for respondent.

STEPHENS, Justice pro tem. William Shaw died, leaving a will wherein he appointed the appellant herein, Marie Shaw McReavy, executrix and trustee. The twelfth paragraph of the will reads as follows: "I hereby affix the compensation of my executor and trustee at the sum of $10 per month, for the first twelve months after qualifying as such, and $5.00 per month for each month thereafter." Decedent left a codicil to his will, the second paragraph of which reads: "It is my further will and desire that the compensation of my executor and trustee fixed in the twelfth paragraph of my said will be thirty dollars ($30) per month instead of ten dollars ($10) and five dollars ($5) per month respectively, as therein provided, and that said paragraph twelfth of my said will is hereby revoked and changed accordingly."

The named executrix entered upon her duties as such, but under the provisions of section 1618 of the Code of Civil Procedure she renounced her right to the designated compensation as executrix, by signing and filing with the court a document which reads as follows: "Renunciation of Compensation Given Executrix by Will. Comes now Marie Shaw McReavy, the duly appointed, qualified and acting executrix of the above-named estate, and hereby renounces all compensation given her under the last will and testament of William Shaw, deceased, and hereby elects to take the compensation allowed her by law, under the provisions of section 1618 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California."

Upon distribution of the estate she asked for and was allowed, after coming to this court (260 P. 351), statutory executor's fees, together with some extraordinary fees. In her first annual account of her trusteeship, she gave herself credit for the sum of $345 as her compensation, at the rate of $30 per month from the 14th day of January, 1927. Respondent objected thereto, and successfully contended in the superior court that "the executrix has obtained a large sum of money over the amount provided in the will as extra compensation, solely by waiving the compensation provided in the will, part of which was the appointment and compensation as trustee."

[1, 2] The objection should have been denied. This court decided, in the opinion in the former appeal, that the office of executrix and trustee are separate offices—especially that such is the case in this estate—and in effect ordered the settlement of the executrix's account upon this premise. That being the law of the case, we cannot here disturb it, even if we were of a mind so to do. While appellant was executrix of the estate she performed no duties as trustee, and she received the executor's statutory fee, plus an extraordinary fee allowed for extraordinary services as executrix. By her renunciation she had elected to so take in lieu of the sum fixed in the will. This has nothing whatever to do with the matter of the trusteeship. She entered upon her trusteeship upon stepping out of her office as executrix, and is entitled to the compensation fixed by the will therefor.

In re Estate of Whitney, 78 Cal. App. 638, 248 P. 754, presents a state of facts not found in the instant case. There the compensation for services as executors and trustees was inextricably mixed, through an agreement recited in the will whereby such services were to be performed for a certain legacy, with a sum of money added thereto by the testator. The executors, as such, renounced their right to take compensation as provided by the will and elected to take under the statute, and when their report as trustees came on they claimed compensation as such, without regard to the fact that the will had so mixed the two that separation was impossible. The Court of Appeal held that this could not be done, that they were limited to the compensation provided by will, and that the executors' fees collected would be credited thereon. The whole difference between the points to be decided in the two cases can be simply stated as follows: In the Whitney Case the will provided for one compensation to cover both classes of service, and in the instant case, under the construction given the will when before this court on the first appeal, the will provided for a distinct compensation for each service.

[3] It should be noted that the trial court in the Whitney Case permitted the renunciation of executors' fees as provided in the will and ordered the statutory fee paid to them. When the petition for allowance of trustees' fees reached the Court of Appeal, the whole matter of payment of executors' fees had passed beyond the time of appeal. We do not take it that the appellate court approved the trial court's action therein. We are inclined to the opinion that, where the will fixes one payment for both services of executor and trustee, the renunciation of the payment for executor's fees should not be allowed, unless it carry with it the renunciation of the whole payment, with all the consequences thereof.

The order is reversed.

BERNSTEIN v. MINNEY et al. (Civ. 6547.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Feb. 4, 1929.

1. Appeal and error 🔑719(6)—Without specifications, stating wherein evidence was insufficient to sustain findings, findings will be deemed correct.

No specifications having been filed, stating wherein evidence was insufficient to sustain lower court's findings of fact, or wherein those findings were contrary to evidence, such findings will be deemed correct on appeal.

2. Covenants 🔑103(3)—Defendants, by conveying other lots free of restrictions, held to have waived right to enforce restrictions in prior deeds to plaintiff.

Where defendants conveyed lots to plaintiff out of a large tract by deeds prohibiting structures other than residences on breach of which it was stipulated title should revert to grantors, and thereafter defendants sold other parcels from same tract and from another adjacent tract without restrictions, and permitted property owned by them to be used for business purposes, held that they thereby waived restrictions and could not insist that restrictions be rigidly enforced as to lands of plaintiff, and mere fact, that forfeiture of whole fee was stipulated in deeds for breach of restrictions, was immaterial on plaintiff's right to equitable relief.

3. Evidence 🔑359(3)—Pictures of adjacent property, showing business structures, held admissible in action involving waiver of restrictions in deeds.

In action to quiet title to realty against conditions subsequently contained in deeds from defendants to plaintiff, prohibiting erection of other than residences, pictures of adjacent property, showing business structures, held admissible.

4. Quieting title 🔑1—Action to quiet title held proper proceeding to determine whether conditions subsequent in deeds, restricting property to residence purposes, had been waived by grantors (Code Civ. Proc. § 738).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 738, action to quiet title to realty against conditions subsequent contained in deeds from defendants to plaintiff, either directly or by mesne conveyances, held proper proceeding to determine whether defendants, by selling other lots free of restrictions, waived right to enforce restrictions as against plaintiff, since waiver may be made by written instrument or by conduct.

5. Covenants 🔑103(2)—Conducting business in house designed solely for residence purposes held no less violation of restrictions limiting use to residence purposes.

That business was conducted in house originally designed solely for residence purposes held not to constitute any the less a violation of restrictions in deed, prohibiting erection of any structures other than residences on premises.

6. Evidence 🔑18—It is common knowledge that business and residential property respectively have peculiar values, and that a combination has depreciating effect on values of either.

It is common knowledge that business property has a value peculiar to itself, that residential property has a value peculiar to itself, and that a combination of the two has a depreciating effect on the values of either of the other kinds.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. D. Murphey, Judge.

Action by Isabel Bernstein against Ernest T. Minney and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Breed, Burpee & Robinson, of Oakland, (William M. Thornton, of Oakland, of counsel), for appellants.

Eugene K. Sturgis and Cyril W. McClean, both of Oakland, for respondent.

WARD, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by defendants from a judgment quieting plaintiff's title to certain real property against conditions subsequent contained in the deeds from defendants to her, either directly or by mesne conveyances (except as to race restrictions).

Defendants were the owners of a large tract of land which they subdivided into over 500 lots, but these lots were not mapped and recorded, nor were the streets accepted at the time that plaintiff obtained ownership; neither was there a general restriction agreement giving rights to cograntees for breach of any restrictions. Any restrictions noted in the deeds inured solely to the benefit of defendants upon breach. Plaintiff acquired three parcels in 1923. The deeds contained conditions prohibiting, until the year 1940, the erection of any structures other than residences which were required to cost not less than $2,500; also, restrictions as to setbacks from the front property line on Foothill boulevard in the city of Oakland, county of Alameda. Upon a breach of these conditions it was stipulated that title should revert to the grantors who were at the time of the trial the sole owners thereof.

[1, 2] No specifications having been filed as to wherein the evidence was insufficient to sustain the findings of fact of the lower court, or wherein those findings were contrary to the evidence, it is to be deemed that the findings are correct. To enable us to ascertain what equity requires to be done, we must peruse those findings, and take therefrom those salient points which may be considered as decisive of the case, i. e., first, defendants, both before and subsequent to the acquisition of this property by plaintiff, sold other parcels from the same tract to other buyers, many instances being specifically set forth, the deeds to which in some cases contained restrictions, in other cases not, and in some instances express permission was granted to erect buildings in which business was to be conducted; thereafter, in some instances restrictions were waived, and in several transactions defendants themselves rented part of such restricted lots for business purposes; second, there was no general scheme for restrictions, so that there would be interlocking rights as between the grantees themselves to enforce the restrictions against one of their number or to claim damage by breach; third, that defendants owned other property in the immediate vicinity facing on Foothill boulevard, and permitted parcels thereof to be used for business purposes; fourth, that, through the conduct of defendants, the district facing Foothill boulevard, embracing the lands of plaintiff, has lost the character of residential property, and has assumed that of business property; fifth that parcels of land to the east, to the west, adjacent, contiguous to, and across the street from the plaintiff, have places of business thereupon; sixth, that commercial signs are maintained thereon by the defendants under lease of land, the deed to which contains a nonuser clause for business purposes.

In the light of these facts found by the trial court, the question before this court is simply this: Can the defendant arbitrarily insist that the restrictions be rigidly enforced as to the lands of plaintiff, thus compelling these parcels either to remain vacant until 1940, or to be improved only with residences, to the detriment of the adjacent business property, and with loss (by reason of the undesirability of the location for residential purposes), in all probability, to the plaintiff, when by defendants' own conduct and connivance, directly and indirectly, they themselves have destroyed the residential character of that neighborhood, and themselves are responsible for depriving the plaintiff of that character of property which courts must recognize requires surroundings of a vastly different nature than that of business property? If the breach of condition had already been made and defendants had not expressly stipulated a forfeiture, but, on the other hand, had come to this court asking for damages, it is quite apparent from the findings of fact that no damage was done to them, and they would be awarded no compensation. Does the mere fact that a forfeiture of the whole fee is stipulated in the deeds alter the power of this court, under these circumstances, to render equitable justice? We think not. It is for just such conditions as these that equity is designed as a remedial agency.

[3] Appellants make but three points needing determination: First, that the acts of defendants did not create an additional title in favor of plaintiff; second, that the court erred in admitting into evidence pictures of adjacent tracts showing business structures; and, third, that a quiet title action is not a proper proceeding for the determination of the issues herein.

In the case of Downs et al. v. Kroeger, 200 Cal. 743, 254 P. 1101, such pictures of adjacent property, not a part of the particular block in question, were admitted and were deemed competent evidence. We accept that form of proof as being likewise competent in this case.

[4] Appellants' point, that the acts of defendant did not create an additional title in favor of plaintiff, is not well taken, as, also, is their point that a quiet title action is not a proper proceeding for the determination of the issues here. Appellants labor under the idea that no jurisdiction would rest to determine the effectiveness of these restrictions, unless and until the restrictions were first breached by plaintiff and an action brought by defendants to declare the title forfeited to them. Such is not the theory of this case at all. The theory to which we subscribe is this: Plaintiff has brought this action, not as a moot case to determine in advance what the court would do if she committed a breach, but to determine the question whether or not there is now an existing waiver of those subsequent conditions, effective as of to-day. It must be conceded that a waiver may be made by a written instrument, or it may be made by conduct. "A condition may be waived by acts as well as by express release" —citing cases including Brown v. Wrightman, 5 Cal. App. 391, 90 P. 467. "Any acts on the part of the grantor which are inconsistent with a claim of forfeiture are evidence of his waiver of the condition." Thompson on Real Property, 1924, vol. 3, § 2053. Defendants could not be heard to contend that a quiet title action would not be the proper vehicle for plaintiff to try out the question as to whether or not an express waiver were in point of law or in fact broad enough to accomplish the result of removing the restrictions. If plaintiff could ask for such determination of a written waiver, without first committing a breach, there is no good reason why she could not and should not be permitted to have a determination now, after the acts of defendant have been committed, as to whether the present effect of the acts are to constitute a waiver of restrictions. Section 738, Code of Civil Procedure, is broad enough to permit the bringing of an action thereunder in which this claim of waiver may be adjudicated.

This waiver claimed by plaintiff is an existing waiver, if the conduct of the defendants constitutes a waiver at all, and, therefore, the inquiry narrows down as to whether the acts and conduct of defendants, as found by the lower court, may be construed as such conduct which in itself waives the restrictions in plaintiff's deeds and estops the defendants from their enforcement. Save as to the character of the business involved, the case of Brown v. Wrightman, supra, is on all fours.

In that case as here, the appellant contended that his conduct with reference to other lands can have nothing to do with his right to the lands conveyed upon condition, and the court then said:

"The description of the two tracts * * * show them to consist of contiguous portions of the Rancho San Bernardino, and parcels of the same lands. But conceding them to have been held by different title, we are not aware of any rule which considers the place of the act constituting the waiver or estoppel if the act be such as to cause the result upon which the waiver or estoppel depends. No authority has been called to our attention which would permit the plaintiff to render it impossible to fulfill the purpose for which the condition subsequent was placed in the deed, if the act by which this was accomplished were done on one side of the street, while he would not be permitted to do so if the act were done on the other side of the street. This attempted distinction 'sticks in the bark.'

"The authorities cited by appellant declare the rule that forfeitures are not favored by the courts, and that conditions providing therefor are to be construed liberally in favor of the holder of the estate, and strictly against the enforcement of the forfeiture."

See, also, Duncan v. Central Pass. Ry. Co., 85 Ky. 525, 4 S. W. 231, wherein the court held that subsequent sales of lots in the tract without such restrictions constituted a waiver or abandonment. In Jenks v. Pawlowski, 98 Mich. 110, 56 N. W. 1105, 22 L. R. A. 863, 39 Am. St. Rep. 522, it was said: "Restrictions of this class are sustained upon the theory that a party has the right, in disposing of his property, to prevent such a use by the grantee as might diminish the value of remaining land, or impair its eligibility for other uses. * * * But is there no mutuality in such agreements? It certainly cannot be said that a grantor has the right afterwards to sell an adjoining lot without restrictions, and thereby diminish the value of his former grantee's property, and impair its eligibility for other uses, converting the locality, * * * and still be allowed to insist upon the restriction." See, also, Chippewa v. Tremper, 75 Mich. 36, 42 N. W. 532, 4 L. R. A. 373, 13 Am. St. Rep. 420. In the case at bar, not only did the defendants themselves lease property, the deed to which contained a restrictive clause for their own business uses, but they were customers of a business conducted on a lot facing Foothill boulevard; they also put upon the market an adjacent tract for sale, and permitted business to be conducted upon parcels likewise fronting upon that boulevard.

[5, 6] Appellants make the point that some of the business being conducted as specified by plaintiff was conducted in residences. The court cannot consider that this hybrid proposition of grafting a business on a house, designed originally solely for residence purposes, is any the less a violation of the spirit of the restrictions. It is common knowledge that business property has a value peculiar to itself, that residential property has a value peculiar to itself, and that a combination of the two has a depreciating effect on the values of either of the other kinds. In the old case of the Duke of Bedford v. Trustees of the British Museum, 2 Mylne and Keen, 552, plaintiff was denied the relief of a forfeiture, because, after selling property with restrictions as against the erection of a certain class of house, he himself erected upon his own adjoining land that class of house, and it was held that by his own acts he had waived the right to take advantage of the covenant which he had engrafted upon the property sold.

The case of Strong v. Shatto, 45 Cal. App. 29, 187 P. 159, cited by appellants, involves a change in the condition of the property, a change of circumstances brought about by conditions independent of the acts of the grantor, and does not rest upon or involve the question, as in this case, whether there is a waiver or estoppel created by the grantor. The case of Currie v. Title Ins. Co., 60 Cal. App. 192, 212 P. 409, involved a change of title, and it was held in that case that Strong v. Shatto did not apply. The case of Strong v. Hancock, 201 Cal. 530, 258 P. 60, was an action to quiet title against restrictions subsequent. The legal sufficiency of the complaint was upheld, although the relief was not granted. The Supreme Court stated that it was bound by the findings of the trial court that the changes in the neighborhood were not sufficient to make the tract undesirable for residential purposes. In the case at bar the trial court found that the parcels of land involved had been made undesirable for residential purposes. Strong v. Hancock did not involve the question of waiver or estoppel by acts and conduct of the grantors—which is the basic question here. We do not deem it necessary, from our viewpoint, to traverse the case of Downs v. Kroeger, supra, or similar cases, further than to approve the doctrine enunciated therein.

Plaintiff has a right to have her title quieted. The acts and conduct of the defendants in the present case were inconsistent with an intention to enforce the restrictions now before this court, and such acts and conduct are sufficient in themselves to constitute a waiver of those restrictions (save as to race restrictions).

Judgment affirmed.

SANTA CRUZ PORTLAND CEMENT CO. v. SNOW MOUNTAIN WATER & POWER CO. et al., and consolidated cases. (Civ. 6578.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2. California. Feb. 5, 1929.

Rehearing Denied March 5, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 1, 1929.

1. Mechanics' liens ⚷281(1)—Evidence held to sustain finding that owner had no funds to pay lien claimants at time contractor abandoned work (Code Civ. Proc. § 1183).

Trial court's finding, in action to foreclose mechanics' liens, that at time contractor, who executed bond pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, abandoned work under contract, there was no fund in hands of owner available for payment of lien claimants, held sustained by the evidence.

2. Mechanics' liens ⚷315—Laborers or materialmen may sue on contractor's bond without perfecting their claims by filing verified liens (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1183, 1187).

Bond given by contractor, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, to secure payment of claims for labor and material, may be sued on by laborers or materialmen, without perfecting their claims by filing of verified liens, as required by section 1187.

3. Mechanics' liens ⚷315—Materialman may waive right to lien without impairing right to proceed against sureties on contractor's bond (Code Civ. Proc. § 1183).

A materialman may waive his right to lien without in any way impairing his right to proceed against sureties on bond given by contractor in compliance with Code Civ. Proc. § 1183.

4. Indemnity ⚷14—Indemnitors of surety, made parties to suit against surety after permitting case to go by default after notice of pendency of action by cross-complaint, cannot have judgment set aside on plea cross-complaint was defective (Code Civ. Proc. § 1183).

Where partners with contractor entered into agreement with surety company on bond given by contractor, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, whereby they became indemnitors of surety company, and agreed to become parties to any action against surety company, and that any judgment against latter might also be entered against them, held, in view of Civ. Code, § 2778, that, where they were made parties to action against surety company by order of court, notified of pendency of action by service of cross-complaint, and suffered case to go by default, they cannot thereafter have judgment set aside on ground that cross-complaint by surety company was defective.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lake County; M. S. Sayre, Judge.

Consolidated actions by the Santa Cruz Portland Cement Company and others against the Snow Mountain Water & Power Company and others. From the judgment, the Santa Cruz Portland Cement Company, the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland, James A. Talbot, W. F. Howard, and others appeal. Affirmed.

James A. Talbot and W. F. Howard, in pro. per.

R. P. Henshall, of San Francisco, for certain appellants.

Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, for appellant Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland.

Morrison, Hohfeld, Foerster, Shuman & Clark, of San Francisco, for other appellants.

Max Thelen, of San Francisco, and Benjamin C. Jones, of Lakeport (Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro and Thelen & Marrin, all of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent Snow Mountain Water & Power Co.

C. J. Goodell, of San Francisco, for respondent Betchel.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem. These are consolidated mechanics' lien cases, all arising out of the construction of the respondent Snow Mountain Water & Power Company's Scott dam, in Lake county, California. Said Snow Mountain Water & Power Company will be hereinafter referred to as the Power Company.

A contract for the construction of said dam was entered into on December 15, 1919, between the Power Company, as owner, and the defendant W. A. Kraner, as contractor. In accordance with the provisions of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a bond was entered into between said Kraner, as principal, and the appellant Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland, as surety. The contract, plans, and specifications, and the surety bond, were all filed and recorded in the office of the county recorder, as required by said section 1183, supra, before any work under the contract was performed. Kraner started work under the contract, established camp, built roads, hired and bought machinery and necessary supplies, and continued the work of building said dam until the morning of July 1, 1921, when all work on the dam ceased. Certain controversies had theretofore arisen between the Power Company and Kraner, and one of the questions here presented is whether Kraner abandoned the contract.

In Snow Mountain Water & Power Co. v. Kraner, 191 Cal. 312, 216 P. 589, wherein the said defendant Kraner was appellant, the very question here presented was before the Supreme Court of this state for hearing and determination. The evidence passed upon in that appeal is substantially the same as presented here. After a careful analysis of the law and the facts bearing upon the point presented, the Supreme Court held that Kraner abandoned said contract, and that the Power Company was justified under the terms thereof in taking over the work of completing the dam. To set forth in this opinion the evidence would be a repetition of that contained in Snow Mountain Water & Power Co. v. Kraner, supra, and from which we would logically reach the same conclusion. We therefore adopt that opinion upon the question of abandonment as the opinion of this court, and hold that Kraner abandoned his contract.

[1] The trial court found that, at the time Kraner abandoned the work under the contract, there was no fund in the hands of the Power Company available for the payment of any of the lien claimants. Appellants attack this finding as not sustained by the evidence. The contract price for all work, material, and supplies for the erection of said dam is a lump sum of $1,122,350, with additional provisions in said contract for alterations or changes which might be ordered by the Power Company in accordance therewith. H. D. Pillsbury, vice president of the Power Company, testified that at the time Kraner abandoned the contract he had been paid the sum of $884,938.75 for work, materials, and supplies furnished under the lump sum contract price; that he was paid for labor and materials which were furnished outside the lump sum price the additional sum of $182,020.91. Kraner admitted having received these sums from the Power Company. Witness J. B. Reddick, who was the resident engineer of the Power Company during the entire period of the construction of the dam, testified that when Kraner quit work on the dam he left unfinished, within the lump sum contract price, 15,461 yards of concrete unpoured, 2,700 cubic yards of excavation at the north end of the dam, and between 1,500 and 2,000 yards at the south end; excavation for a cut-off wall under section 14, and filling of same with concrete; excavation for southern diversion wall; placing of sluice gateway and needle and butterfly valves on outlet pipe; construction of trash racks in front of gate; placing of doors and drainage tunnel; placing of impervious hydraulic fill, to prevent the seepage of water under dam; placing of fill on downstream foundation of dam, to protect foundation; removal of forms along crest of dam; filling of openings in dam; filling of recesses in upstream face of dam; removal of trestle and concrete bunkers, and clearing the camp; removal of railroad track and construction equipment. Comparing the amount of work done by Kraner with the work left unperformed, the net result of the testimony of this witness was to the effect that the dam, at the time Kraner abandoned work, was 75 per cent. completed, with possibly 1 or 2 per cent. one way or the other.

S. L. Shuffleton, an engineer of wide experience in the construction of hydroelectric and steam power plants, and also in the construction of concrete dams, testified in detail concerning the amount of work which Kraner had completed and the amount left unfinished, and by comparison he placed the dam as 78.2 per cent. completed. It also appears from the evidence that, had Kraner completed the portion of the dam yet to be completed, and within the line of the lump sum contract price, it would have cost him $245,961.41. As against this evidence Kraner testified that he was never paid more than 85 per cent. of the amount earned by him monthly. He also testified that the total yardage of cement to be poured was 86,172 yards. That the contract price was $1,122,350, which would give a figure of $13 plus per cubic yard for concrete poured by him. Figuring on the basis of the testimony of this last witness, it is claimed by appellants that, as Kraner poured, according to his own figures, 73,279 cubic yards of cement at the price of $13.025 per yard, he had earned $954,458.98, and, having been paid only $884,938.75, there is still a balance due him in the hands of the Power Company of $69,520.23, which last-named sum is available for the satisfaction of the liens of appellants.

The fallacy of this position becomes apparent upon reading the contract and the testimony of Reddick and Shuffleton. If the contract of Kraner with the Power Company was merely to pour the concrete, no doubt these figures would be a proper basis for the computation of the amount earned by Kraner; but the argument of the appellants fails to take into consideration there were some 52,000 cubic yards of excavation to be removed within the contract, and, as heretofore stated in the testimony of witness Reddick, many other things to be performed beside the cement work itself. Under these circumstances the trial court was justified in accepting a figure of 78 per cent. as the basis for its computation of the amount of work done by Kraner. Section 1183, Code Civ. Proc.; McDonald v. Hayes, 132 Cal. 490, 64 P. 850; Hoffman-Marks Co. v. Spires, 154 Cal. 111, 97 P. 152; Pacific Portland Cement Co. v. Hopkins, 174 Cal. 251, 162 P. 1016. Based upon this calculation, the finding of the court that there was no fund in the hands of the Power Company available for the payment of appellants' claims is fully sustained by the evidence.

Appellants further claim that the Power Company was indebted to Kraner, the contractor, for work done and materials and supplies furnished during the months of May and June, 1921. This contention is based on the theory that the Power Company, prior to said time, had breached the contract, and therefore all labor performed and all materials and supplies furnished by the contractor were not a part of the contract. Having heretofore held that the contract was in full force and effect until abandoned by the contractor, the work, supplies, and materials furnished during said months were properly included in the lump sum contract price (Snow Mountain W. & P. Co. v. Kraner, supra), and had been paid for by the Power Company in accordance with the terms of the contract.

It is further contended by certain appellants that the finding of the trial court that their claims against Kraner had been paid, compromised, settled, and discharged is without support in the evidence. This controversy arises out of the fact that the said appellants assigned their claims, with all rights thereunder, to the appellants Howard and Talbot, who were partners with Kraner in the construction of the Power Company's dam, and also indemnitors on the bond of their codefendant, Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland. As we have already held that there was no fund in the hands of the Power Company available for the payment of these liens, this finding becomes immaterial. The only other party to the controversy who could be affected by the finding complained of would be the appellant Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland; but as Howard and Talbot were not only partners with Kraner in the contract, but were also indemnitors on the bond given by the surety company, no claim could be, nor do we understand is, made by said Howard and Talbot against the surety company. We therefore hold that it is unnecessary to decide the question here presented.

The court further found that certain of the claims now owned by Howard and Talbot were not of the class that entitle the holders to the benefit of the law relating to liens. In view of our previous holding that there is no fund in the hands of the Power Company for the payment of liens, and, further, as no judgment is sought by appellants against the surety company, the finding becomes immaterial.

[2, 3] The appellant Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland was the surety on the bond given by the contractor in accordance with the provisions of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The court gave judgment against the contractor and said surety company in favor of the plaintiff W. A. Betchel in the sum of $7,973.26, with interest thereon from the date of the judgment. The court also gave judgment against the contractor and said surety company in favor of the plaintiff Santa Cruz Portland Cement Company in the sum of $63,837.96, with interest thereon from the date of said judgment, and the said surety company appeals therefrom. It is urged in support of the appeal that the court, having found that there was no lien existing in favor of Betchel and the Santa Cruz Portland Cement Company against the property of the Power Company, it was error to give judgment in their favor and against this appellant.

In General Electric Co. v. American Bonding Co., 180 Cal. 675, 182 P. 444, it was held that a bond given by a contractor pursuant to section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure to secure payment of claims for labor and material to be furnished in the construction of a building and which is expressly made to inure to the benefit of any and all persons who perform labor upon or furnish materials to be used on the work described in the building contract, and which also provides that any and all such persons shall have and are given a right of action to recover upon the bond against the principal and surety, or either of them, in any suit brought to foreclose mechanics' liens which may be filed by such persons or any of them, upon the property mentioned in the contract, or in a separate suit brought upon the bond, may be sued upon by laborers or materialmen without perfecting their claims by the filing of verified liens as required by section 1187 of said Code. In Fraters G. & P. Co. v. Southwestern C. Co., 200 Cal. 688, 254 P. 1097, in affirming the doctrine enunciated in General Electric Co. v. American Bonding Co., supra, the Supreme Court further held that a materialman may waive by agreement or otherwise his right to a lien without in any way impairing his right to proceed against the sureties upon the undertaking given in compliance with section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure. These cases, so far as we are advised, have never been reversed or modified, and, in our opinion, are a complete answer to appellant's contention. Indeed, we understand that counsel for appellant concedes the force of these decisions, but earnestly contends that in deciding them the Supreme Court overlooked considerations which would preclude the construction of the statute placed upon it by the court. However, under well-recognized principles, this court is bound by the decisions of the Supreme Court, and, therefore, without discussing the merits of counsel's contention, we hold that the point is not well taken.

[4] The court entered judgment against the cross-defendants James A. Talbot and W. F. Howard, and in favor of the plaintiffs W. A. Betchel and the Santa Cruz Portland Cement Company, said judgments being in the same amount as given by the trial court in favor of said last-named parties and against the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland. Talbot and Howard have appealed therefrom. The relation of these appellants to this case may be summarized from the evidence as follows:

They were partners with Kraner, the contractor, in the execution of the contract in building the Power Company's dam. They were indemnitors of the surety company on the bond given by the contractor, Kraner, under the provisions of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure. After the commencement of 23 of the separate actions to enforce liens against the property of the Power Company, all of said actions being consolidated in this action, said appellants purchased the claims of said 23 lien claimants and have continued the actions in the name of the original parties, and through the aid of counsel have vigorously prosecuted said claims, both in the trial court and upon appeal herein. On their appeal from the judgment entered against them in favor of plaintiffs Betchel and the Santa Cruz Portland Cement Company they have appealed in propria persona. In support of this appeal they now urge that the cross-complaint upon which they were brought into court does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The cross-complaint was filed by the said surety company, and, after alleging the corporate capacity of this company, proceeds as follows:

"(2) That at the time said Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland executed the bond or undertaking referred to in the complaint in the above-entitled action, and as a part of the same transaction, and as a part consideration for the execution of said bond, said Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland made and entered into a contract in words and figures as follows:

" 'This agreement made the 20th day of December, A. D. 1919, between W. A. Kraner, W. F. Howard, and James A. Talbot, parties of the first part, and Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland, party of the second part, witnesseth:

" 'Whereas, the second party has executed, or is about to execute, as surety, a bond in approximately the sum of five hundred fifty-two thousand seven hundred fifty-seven and 50/100 (552,757.50) dollars, running to the Snow Mountain Water & Power Company, guaranteeing the performance of a certain contract entered into by W. A. Kraner with the Snow Mountain Water & Power Company, for the construction of a concrete dam across the South Eel river at Gravelly Valley, Lake county, California; and

" 'Whereas, the parties of the first part are copartners in the performance of the said contract, which has been made and will be performed in the name of the said W. A. Kraner, but for the joint account of the parties of the first part; and

" 'Whereas, the party of the second part has executed, or is about to execute, said bond upon the application of the said indemnity of the said W. F. Howard and said James A. Talbot, and in reliance upon this agreement:

" 'Now therefore, it is agreed by and between the parties hereto—

" 'First. That in the event of any suit or legal proceedings being brought against the second party, as surety on said bond, the second party shall have the right to apply to the court in which such action is brought for an order making the first parties, parties defendant, both individually and as copartners, and said parties of the first part do hereby consent to the granting of such order by the court, and do agree to become such parties defendant; and in the event of any judgment being rendered against the parties of the second part in such action or actions, same judgment shall also be rendered against each of the parties of the first part, both individually and as copartners.

" 'Second. The party of the second part agrees that in the event of any suit or proceeding being brought against it, or in the event of any claims being made against it, arising out of the execution of said bond, it will cooperate with, and will assist the parties of the first part in settling said claims or in defending such suit or suits.

" 'In witness whereof, the parties hereto have caused these presents to be executed the day and year above stated. W. A. Kraner. W. F. Howard. James A. Talbot. Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland [Seal], by Guy Le Roy Stevick, Attorney in Fact. Attest: Paul M. Nippert, Agent.'

"(3) That said agreement is still in full force and effect.

"Wherefore, Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland prays that plaintiff take nothing and further prays that in the event judgment shall be rendered against said Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland in this action such judgment shall also be rendered against the said W. A. Kraner, W. F. Howard, and James A. Talbot, both individually and as copartners, and further prays that it be adjudged and decreed that said W. A. Kraner, W. F. Howard and James A. Talbot exonerate the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland and hold it harmless from all obligation and liability in respect to the matters referred to in the complaint in the above-entitled action."

Upon the filing of this cross-complaint the court made its order making these appellants parties to this action and they were served with a copy of the cross-complaint. They did not appear in the action so far as their relation thereto as indemnitors was in issue, but permitted their default to be entered. Conceding that, standing alone and unaided, the foregoing document is defective as a pleading, the agreement set forth therein was received in evidence on the trial of the action, and by its terms these appellants consented that the court should make them parties to any action on the contract of suretyship, and they also expressly agreed that any judgment entered against the surety company should be also entered against them both individually and as copartners. While neither party to this controversy has offered any authorities for or against the claim of appellants, it would seem logical that appellants should be bound by their own agreement. The document, whether it be held sufficient as a cross-complaint or not, gave notice to appellants that a suit was pending against the surety company. The complaint against the latter stated a cause of action on the contract of suretyship, and, after a trial, judgment was entered against the surety. No just reason appears why these appellants should not be bound in accordance with the terms of their contract of indemnity.

There is no dispute that the agreement between Howard and Talbot on the one hand, and the surety company on the other, is a contract of indemnity. There can be no question that under the facts of this case a judgment rendered against the surety company could be used as the basis of an action by the latter against Howard and Talbot. Civ. Code § 2778; 13 Cal. Jur. § 15, p. 996. Such being the case, we can conceive of no reason why the indemnitors may not by their contract agree, as they did agree in this case, to become parties to any action against their indemnitees, and that any judgment entered against the latter might also be entered against them. Under their agreement of indemnity they were made parties to the action by the order of the court. They were notified of the pendency of the action by service of the cross-complaint, and they suffered the case, so far as they were concerned, to go by default. They should not now be permitted to have the judgment set aside upon the plea that the cross-complaint was defective.

No good reason has been shown why the judgment should be disturbed, and it is therefore affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, Acting P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

PEOPLE v. McCANN. (Cr. 1730.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2. California. Feb. 7, 1929.

1. Indictment and information 🔑130—Each misapplication of money, by cashier intrusted therewith, constituted "theft," and was properly charged separately (Pen. Code, § 484, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046).

Each separate misapplication of his employer's money by defendant, who was bookkeeper and cashier for savings and loan association, constituted "theft," within Pen. Code, § 484, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046, and was properly charged as a separate and distinct offense.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Theft.]

2. Criminal law 🔑535(2)—Evidence, apart from defendant's statements to officers, held sufficient to establish corpus delicti, in prosecution for grand theft by misapplication of employer's funds (Pen. Code, § 484, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046).

In prosecution for grand theft, under Pen. Code, § 484, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046, against bookkeeper and cashier, for misapplication of money of savings and loan association, evidence, independent of defendant's statements to officers after his arrest not amounting to a confession, held sufficient to establish corpus delicti.

3. Embezzlement 🔑44(2)—Evidence held sufficient to establish defendant cashier's intent to commit public offense of grand theft by misapplying employer's money (Pen. Code, § 21 and § 484, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046).

In prosecution for grand theft, under Pen. Code, § 484, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046, against cashier of savings and loan association, by misapplying employer's money intrusted to him, evidence held sufficient to establish defendant's intent to commit public offense within Pen. Code, § 21.

4. Criminal law 🔑406(3)—Expert accountant's testimony, regarding defendant's explanation of items entered in books, held at least evidence of defendant's voluntary statements regarding defalcations (Pen. Code, § 484, as amended by St. 1927, p, 1046).

In prosecution for grand theft, under Pen. Code, § 484, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046, against cashier of savings and loan association, by misapplying funds intrusted to him, testimony of expert accountant respecting defendant's statements to him, explaining entries in association's books when accountant was examining books, held at least evidence of defendant's voluntary statements regarding his defalcations.

5. Criminal law 🔑1169(1)—Admitting in evidence account books containing entries by defendant, charged with misapplying funds, and expert accountant's statement, held not prejudicial, where jury did not see them (Pen. Code, § 484, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046.)

In prosecution, under Pen. Code, § 484, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046, for grand theft against cashier of savings and loan association, admission in evidence of books containing entries made by defendant, and expert accountant's statement of entries extracted from books in accused's presence and under his direction, showing shortages respecting which auditor testified, held not prejudicial, where jurors did not see either of exhibits mentioned.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Emmet H. Wilson, Judge.

George J. McCann was convicted of grand theft, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Arthur Brigham Rose, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CRAIG, J. The appellant was charged by information consisting of five counts with having committed grand theft, in that on the following dates he did unlawfully take from the Pacific States Savings & Loan Company, a corporation, the respective sums of money specified, that is to say: August 15, 1927, $300; August 27, 1927, $500; April 11, 1928, $500; October 10, 1927, $250, and October 17, 1927, $306.48. He was convicted upon each count, whereupon he moved for a new trial, which was denied, and he appeals from the judgments and from the ruling of the trial court upon said motion.

It appears that McCann was bookkeeper and cashier of the company mentioned, and that it was his duty in that capacity to make entries in the books of his employer of moneys received and disbursed, and to write checks which he presented to the vice president for signature. It was customary for the company to carry daily about $350 in petty cash, and at the end of the day the cashier prepared a check for an amount necessary to balance the petty cash account, presented it to the proper officer for signature, and charged portions thereof to various accounts. Each count of the information is founded upon an alleged shortage of funds, and, the method which the people contended appellant pursued in stealing moneys of his employer being similar upon all five occasions, it is sufficient for the purposes of this appeal to detail the facts presented to the trial court and jury as to one of the counts.

On August 27, 1927, appellant made a check to balance petty cash, numbered 3828, for the sum of $650.86, which he entered in the cash book, and charged to the following accounts: Installments 6 per cent. account, $520; exchange, $101.86; F. P. coupons, $29. This check was posted to the account of Brent M. Martin, whose certificate was No. 114, in the record of individual accounts, whereas the only charge entered against that account consisted of $20, which appeared to have been withdrawn on August 16, 1927. None of the balance of said check was charged against any other individual account, and the rest of the $500 was not accounted for. The vice president, and the assistant secretary, each testified to the method of business, system of bookkeeping, duties of appellant, and shortages; a certified public accountant, who audited the books also verified the entries and deficiencies. It was stipulated that McCann indorsed check No. 3815, and a handwriting expert swore that in his opinion all of the entries were made by the same person who wrote the indorsement. The assistant secretary and the vice president both identified the handwriting, and the latter testified to having signed the checks at the instance of the defendant, who represented them to be for balancing petty cash account. When arrested, he admitted to one officer that his accounts were short $8,000. One of the officers testified upon cross-examination by the defendant's attorney that McCann stated that he did not know why he had taken the money, that it was "just wild ideas," and that he "wished he could get a chance to work for the Pacific States Savings & Loan Company for one year without pay; if he could do that he could square himself up."

[1] It is strenuously insisted by appellant that, since he was admittedly bookkeeper and cashier, and the moneys represented by the various checks lawfully came into his possession, he was not guilty of theft, if he used or misapplied them, and that, in any event, since there was an alleged shortage of $5,000 or $8,000, it constituted but one offense, which was improperly split into five separate causes of action, or counts.

Section 484 of the Penal Code, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046, expressly provides that: "Every person * * * who shall fraudulently appropriate property which has been intrusted to him, * * * is guilty of theft." The trial court instructed the jury in the foregoing language, and also that if one who assumes to act in the capacity of agent or servant of another "is intrusted with and receives into his care and custody property, for the use of another person, and fraudulently appropriates such property to his own use or to any use or purpose not in the due and lawful execution of his trust, is guilty of theft." Appellant was convicted upon an abundance of evidence, a portion of which we have pointed out, including his own admissions, which tended to show that, assuming to be the agent of the Pacific States Savings & Loan Company, he was intrusted with, and received into his care and custody, certain of its personal property, for the use of the latter, upon five different occasions, which he applied to none of his employer's accounts, and did not have on hand at the time of the audit. We think this clearly constituted theft, as defined by the Penal Code, and that the argument, that one amount taken in April, two upon different dates in August, and two on the 10th and 17th of October, 1927, should have been charged as one offense, does not require extended discussion nor citation of authority. The thefts were obviously separate and distinct offenses.

[2] It is next contended that the corpus delicti was not established, and that the evidence tending to connect appellant with the commission of the crimes was wholly insufficient to warrant or sustain a conviction. The defendant did not testify, nor did he in any manner attempt to trace into the hands of any other person the moneys which, according to his own entries, were intrusted to him, and which were withdrawn by means of checks which he does not deny having indorsed. Authorities cited by appellant fail to support his contentions. In many instances they exhibit an absence of proof of the corpus delicti, or of the guilt of the defendant without his confession. However, in People v. Roganovich, 77 Cal. App. 158, 246 P. 132, it was said: "But it does not follow that where there has been received evidence of substantial weight tending to prove the corpus delicti, a confession made by the defendant may not be used by the jury as cumulative evidence further tending to establish the fact of the corpus delicti, as well as to prove the fact that the defendant committed the crime."

Appellant's statements to the officers did not legally amount to a "confession." They consisted of admissions which the jury may or may not have deemed of major importance in arriving at their verdicts. There was much substantial evidence both of the corpus delicti, and of the guilty connection of appellant with the offense charged, independent of such statements.

[3] It is unnecessary to discuss at length appellant's contention that intent to commit a public offense was not proved. The intent or intention is manifested by the circumstances connected with the offense, and the sound mind and discretion of the accused. Pen. Code, § 21. These elements of proof are embraced in the record.

[4, 5] Objections were interposed to the introduction of certain exhibits numbered 6 and 7 on behalf of the people. The first was a book containing entries made by the defendant, and the latter consisted of the expert accountant's statement of entries extracted from the books in the presence of the accused, under his direction, showing shortages about which the auditor testified, and which he marked "doubtful," at the defendant's suggestion. The witness testified as to McCann's explanation of the items embraced therein, and it was at least evidence of the defendant's voluntary statements regarding his defalcations. In any event, his counsel removes the possibility of its prejudicial effect upon the jury, as it is said that the jurors did not see either of the exhibits mentioned.

Many other rulings of the trial court and admonitions of counsel have been carefully reviewed. We do not think they manifested bias on the part of the judge, or that they were such as to impress the jurors unfavorably to appellant in the impartial consideration of the defendant's cause. This conclusion equally applies to the complaint that no instructions were given on behalf of the defendant. No instructions were offered by the defendant, but we think those given were sufficiently comprehensive to inform the jury as to the law of the case.

The remaining assignments consist of asserted prejudicial remarks of the district attorney. However, no attempt is made to indicate why the parts of the argument to which reference is made are objectionable, or in what respect they could have injured the defendant's cause. In our examination of the record we have found no statements of the prosecutor which appear to us as having been capable of prejudicing his rights.

Our perusal of the whole record has not disclosed evidence of a miscarriage of justice, although, in considering the points raised in appellant's briefs, we have carefully scrutinized the record in its entirety.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

96 Cal. App. 640

In re OFFILL'S ESTATE. (Civ. 6347.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 6, 1929.

Rehearing Denied March 6, 1929.

1. Wills 🔑302(1)—Facts held to sustain conclusion that witnesses were properly requested to witness will (Civ. Code, § 1276).

That witnesses were present near foot of bed wherein testator was confined, and that attorney drawing will mentioned that such two persons would sign as witnesses, held sufficient to sustain conclusion that they were requested to sign according to legal requirement, as provided in Civ. Code, § 1276.

2. Wills 🔑302(1)—Evidence held sufficient to sustain conclusion that testator declared instrument to be his will (Civ. Code, § 1276).

Evidence held sufficient to sustain conclusion that decedent did declare to all present at time of signing, that instrument signed was his will, as required by Civ. Code, § 1276.

3. Wills 🔑302(1)—That witness signing will was present when it was drawn held to support conclusion that she was requested to sign (Civ. Code, § 1276).

That party signing will as witness was present in room with testator just prior to his death when pencil will was drawn, which she signed by request, and was also present when immediate subsequent will, drawn by attorney, was signed by testator, which such witness also signed, held to sufficiently support conclusion that she was requested to sign subsequent will propounded for probate, as provided by Civ. Code, § 1276.

4. Wills 🔑302(1)—Evidence held insufficient to show that witness signing will did not sign in testator's presence (Civ. Code, § 1276).

Evidence held insufficient, in application for probate of will, to show that certain witness did not sign in presence of decedent, as required by Civ. Code, § 1276, the testimony being that he stood, while signing, by foot of bed in which testator lay, there being no testimony from which it could be found whether witness and decedent were not in plain sight of each other.

5. Wills 🔑123(5)—Testator need not actually view witnesses signing will, but circumstances must allow view; such being meaning of word "presence" in statutory requirement (Civ. Code, § 1276).

Testator of will need not actually view the act of signing by attesting witnesses, but the circumstances must be such that the testator could have seen the signing; such being the meaning of the word "presence" in Civ. Code, § 1276, requiring that witnesses be present.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Presence.]

6. Wills 🔑289—Testator found to be of sound mind held presumed to have been conscious of execution of will.

Where court specifically found testator to be of sound mind, presumption that testator remained of sound mind throughout execution of will justifies conclusion testator was not unconscious or asleep, whether propped up or lying back on bed in which he was confined during drawing of will, but was awake, conscious, and aware of what was going on.

7. Wills ⚷302(1)—Witness' testimony that he did not notice whether others were between him and testator when he witnessed will was insufficient to support finding that he did not sign in testator's presence (Civ. Code, § 1276).

In application for the probate of will, evidence held insufficient to support defendant's finding that certain witness signing will was not in presence of testator at time he signed will, as required by Civ. Code, § 1276, where he testified that he did not notice whether others in room at time were directly between him and testator at time such witness signed will, and that he did not notice line of vision.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Reuben S. Schmidt, Judge.

Application by E. Louise Bell for the probate of the will of Mathias Walter Offill, deceased. Decree in favor of the contestant Addie O. Freeman denying the probate, and the proponent appeals. Reversed.

Nelson D. Miller, of Santa Monica (Anderson & Anderson, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Frankley & Spray, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

STEPHENS, Justice pro tem. A purported will of Mathias Walter Offill, deceased, was offered for probate under petition of E. Louise Bell, for letters with the will annexed. Addie O. Freeman, a daughter of deceased, contested the probate thereof on a number of separate grounds. Only three of the grounds of contest need be noticed herein, and they put in issue the points covered by the following references and quotations from the court's findings.

After hearing without a jury, the court found: That neither of the alleged witnesses "signed said purported will as attesting witnesses or witnesses in the presence of said decedent." That "said decedent did not at the time of or prior or subsequent to the subscribing of said purported will, declare to Ann Gambs, B. R. Darling and R. J. Darling, or any or either or all of them, that the instrument was his will." That "* * * * the decedent did not, by word or action, or in any manner whatever, request the said [witnesses] or either or any of them, to sign said purported will as attesting witnesses."

Based upon these points the court denied the probate of the will, and proponent appeals.

Decedent had been married twice. The contestant was the only surviving child of the first union. The second marriage was between decedent and a widow, the mother of several children. The determination of this contest will decide whether the surviving child shall take as an heir or share the estate with the decedent's stepchildren, as provided by the terms of the purported will.

The second wife, after many years of life with decedent, predeceased him by a month or so. The property affected by the will was held in joint tenancy. Shortly after her death he caused the stepchildren (his own daughter not then being in the home) to come into his room where he lay sick abed, and indicated to one of them that he desired to make a will; that he wanted a Mr. R. J. Darling or Mr. Pierce or anybody called in for witnesses. Mr. Darling and his son, B. R. Darling, responded. Decedent said he wished to leave his estate share and share alike to all. One of the stepdaughters, at decedent's request, wrote out these wishes by lead pencil, and decedent signed, and the paper was passed to the Darlings, who were standing at the foot of the bed, and they signed as witnesses. The nurse, Ann Gambs, also signed as a witness. The signing and witnessing of this will seemed to have been according to all of the legal requirements, but some one suggested that a lawyer should be called. Thereafter, an hour or more having elapsed, the same people (six, eight, or ten) again assembled in the sick man's room, and there was in addition a Dr. O'Flaherty, who was practicing medicine, but was also an attorney, although not in the active practice of the law. The doctor, who was not attending the sick man, had been induced to help out because a practicing lawyer could not be secured. He had partly prepared a will on the typewriter before leaving his office and before seeing the sick man, and copied by long hand in ink the devising part of the pencil will into a blank of his typewritten form and entered the sick room. Dr. O'Flaherty approached the bed, exhibited the document to the sick man, who was propped up by pillows and who was from time to time giving evidences of pain by groaning and moaning, and then read it aloud.

The testimony of Dr. O'Flaherty as to the signing, which is not varied from materially by other witnesses, is as follows:

"Q. Was the will read to him? A. After I took it away from him I read it to him specifically, just as it is written here, and asked him if that was his will. * * * And the old gentleman said 'Yes,' * * * So I told him that it would be necessary to sign the will in the presence of two witnesses who were standing at the foot of the bed, Mr. Darling and his son.

"The Court: Did you mention those names to Mr. Offill? A. I don't believe I did, your Honor, because I presumed that he knew who they were. He seemed to be all right. So he * * * took the pen and signed it after I read it to him, and I told Mr. Darling it would be necessary for him and his son to sign it in the presence of Mr. Offill."

The doctor then (and the younger Darling's testimony differs in some respects therefrom) stated that the Darlings were standing right up against the foot of the bed; that Mr. Offill was still sitting up in bed. Both of the Darlings signed above the foot of the bed, using a magazine to write upon. The will was again in the doctor's hands and he told Ann Gambs, the nurse, who had signed the pencil will, that two witnesses were sufficient, but she could sign too, and she did.

B. R. Darling testified:

"Q. Examine the signature, M. W. Offill. Was that signature signed in your presence? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. When and at what time? Where and at what time? Where was that signed? A. Why, in the bedroom. I don't remember the time of day.

"Q. Of what house? A. Mr. Offill's house.

"Q. In Santa Monica? A. Yes.

"Q. Examine the date and see if that is the date it was signed. (Showing paper to witness.) A. I think it is.

"Q. Did he sign in your presence? A. Yes.

"Q. Did you sign in his presence? A. Yes.

"Q. Did R. J. Darling sign in your presence? A. Yes.

"Q. And Ann Gambs? A. Yes.

"Q. And did R. J. Darling sign in the presence of the testator, Mr. Offill? A. Yes.

"Q. Mrs. Gambs signed in the presence of Mr. Offill? A. Yes."

The witness further testified that, when he signed the will presented by Dr. O'Flaherty, he took the will from his father, R. J. Darling, and, when he signed, two or three persons were between him and the foot of the bed; that he was standing some few feet back of the foot of the bed. He did not notice at the moment of signing whether the line of vision was clear between himself and Mr. Offill or not. He also testified in answer to the court's question:

"We signed at the foot of the bed."

"Q. By the Court: Where was Mr. Offill at that particular time—sitting up in bed or lying down? A. In bed. He laid back down. * * *

"Q. By the Court: Did you observe him at all after he actually appended his signature to that document? A. No."

The court then asked if he is to understand that Mr. Offill was placed flat in bed after signing, and the witness answered in the affirmative, and that he did not observe Offill at all after that. He further testified that he thinks the vision between himself and the testator was obstructed by the foot of the bed when he signed as a witness; that he was standing at the time, and some one held a magazine in his hand to rest the will upon as the witness signed. He estimated the bed as being 3 or 3½ feet high and the point at which the will was held on the magazine to be about 4 feet high; that Mr. Offill said nothing from the time he said "Yes" to the doctor's question until after the signing was completed.

Dr. O'Flaherty and the nurse testify that Mr. Offill sat propped up by pillows all of the time until after the signing by the witnesses, after which the pillows were taken away and he was laid back. Dr. O'Flaherty says that no one was between B. R. Darling and Offill at the moment of Darling's signing.

The nurse also testified: "Q. What did you actually see? A. He (B. R. Darling) went to hand it (the will) back, I presume, to Dr. O'Flaherty, he made this motion, and Mr. Offill he looked up, and he motioned to me; and I said, 'Might I sign this also?' And Dr. O'Flaherty said, 'Perhaps you better; you are the nurse; watched the case; perhaps you better sign too.' "

There was testimony by other witnesses. No other witness indicates that B. R. Darling was anywhere but at the foot of the bed beside his father when he signed. There is no other testimony (if B. R. Darling's testimony goes that far) to the effect that Mr. Offill was laid down off the pillows as soon as he signed. There is other testimony that he sat propped up and observed everything going on until after the three witnesses had signed. The evidence is uncontradicted that the bed was a steel Simmons bed, presumably of ordinary height.

Section 1276 of the Civil Code is as follows: "Written Will, How to be Executed. Every will, other than a nuncupative will, must be in writing; and every will, other than a holographic will, and a nuncupative will, must be executed and attested as follows:

"1. It must be subscribed at the end thereof by the testator himself, or some person in his presence and by his direction must subscribe his name thereto;

"2. The subscription must be made in the presence of the attesting witnesses, or be acknowledged by the testator to them to have been made by him or by his authority;

"3. The testator must, at the time of subscribing or acknowledging the same, declare to the attesting witnesses that the instrument is his will; and,

"4. There must be two attesting witnesses, each of whom must sign the same as a witness, at the end of the will, at the testator's request and in his presence."

This state of facts presents the question: Is there any considerable testimony to support conclusions (A) that at least two witnesses did not sign in the presence of the decedent; (B) that the decedent did not declare to at least two of the alleged witnesses that the instrument was his will; (C) that decedent did not in any manner request at least two of the alleged witnesses to attest his will as witnesses? There is ample evidence to support the proponent's claim that the required number of witnesses were requested to witness this instrument as decedent's will, and that they did so in the testator's presence. Is there evidence worthy of consideration in conflict with this view? If so, the judgment must be affirmed. If not, the judgment must be reversed. We shall approach the question, taking up the last-named phase first.

[1] C. We think that the fact that the two Darlings were present and signed the pencil will, and that they were also present near the foot of the bed when the propounded will was signed, and that the doctor mentioned the fact that these two persons present would sign as witnesses, is sufficient to sustain the conclusion that they were requested to sign according to the legal requirement, and we find no evidence to the contrary.

[2] B. We think the evidence briefly referred to herein, together with the answer "Yes" by decedent to the doctor's question as to whether or not the instrument was his will, is sufficient to sustain the conclusion that decedent did declare to all present at the time of signing that the instrument signed was his will, and we find no testimony to the contrary. "It is not necessary that the testator should have spoken words declaring the document to be his will, or that he should expressly request the witnesses to sign it as such. It is sufficient if this declaration and request are unmistakably indicated to the persons signing as witnesses by the testator's conduct and actions, although there is no declaration in words to that effect." Estate of Silva, 169 Cal. 116, at page 120, 145 P. 1015, 1016. See Estate of Dow, 181 Cal. 106, 183 P. 794, and cases therein cited.

[3] A. There is no evidence contradicting and no circumstance inconsistent with the nurse Ann Gambs' account of how she came to sign. She signed the first or pencil will in the immediate presence of the testator. She and Dr. O'Flaherty were close to the testator when the conversation took place as to her signing the second will. It is natural that the nurse should watch her patient carefully under the trying circumstances. There is every reason to believe, and apparently no reason to disbelieve, her testimony as to the sick man's "motion." But, disregarding the motion entirely, the circumstances surrounding the drawing of the will supports the conclusion that she was requested to sign.

[4] We think there is no evidence from which the conclusion could be drawn that R. J. Darling did not sign in the presence of decedent. The testimony is that he stood, while signing, by the foot of the bed, and there is no testimony from which it could be found, whether the decedent had been lain back upon the bed or still was propped up, that the two were not in plain sight of each other.

[5] The meaning of the word "presence" in the statutory requirement that "there must be two attesting witnesses, each of whom must sign the same as a witness, at the end of the will, at the testator's request and in his presence has been treated fully in the leading case of Estate of Dow, 181 Cal. 106, 183 P. 794, and supports the theory that the testator need not actually view the act of signing, but the circumstances must be such that the testator could have seen the signing. The English cases follow the same theory in the construction of a statute of similar nature." Shires v. Glasscock, 2 Salkeld, 688, 91 Eng. Rep. 584; Davy v. Smith, 3 Salkeld, 395, 91 Eng. Rep. 892.

[6] Mr. Justice Wilbur, in the Dow Case, supra, calls attention to the fact that a testator is presumed to be of sound mind throughout the execution of the will, and that this presumption justifies the conclusion that the maker of the will was not unconscious or asleep meanwhile. It may be recalled that the court in the instant case specifically found the testator to be of sound mind. Therefore the presumption comes to the aid of the testimony that the testator, whether propped up or lying back on the bed, was awake, conscious, and aware of what was going on.

[7] The only point remaining undisposed of is: Does the testimony support a finding that B. R. Darling was not in the presence of decedent when he signed as a witness to decedent's will?

In approaching the question, we know of no more apt words than those of Mr. Justice McFarland so often quoted from Field v. Shorb, 99 Cal. 661, 666, 34 P. 504, 505: "We are adverse to holding that a finding by a jury or trial court on an issue of fact is not warranted by the evidence, whatever we might think as to its preponderance, where there is presented a fair, reasonable ground for a difference of opinion, and where a conclusion either way could not be considered as the necessary result of the exercise of an unsound judgment. But where the great current of the evidence is against the verdict, and we cannot escape the conviction that it is wrong, we should not be deterred from setting it aside by the contention that one or two general statements or assertions of one or two witnesses bring the case within the rule which governs in cases where there is a material 'conflict of evidence.'"

In the case of In re Coburn, 11 Cal. App. 604, 620, 105 P. 924, 931, it is said: "We are fully aware that an appellate court will not reverse a finding if there is a substantial conflict in the evidence; but the evidence, in order to raise a conflict, must be such as to present a fair and reasonable ground for a difference of opinion. The finding or verdict must have meritorious support in the evidence. A few general statements without substantial reasons is not sufficient to raise a conflict." See, also, Smith v. Belshaw, 89 Cal. 427, at page 430, 26 P. 834; Wenban Estate, Inc., v. Hewlett, 193 Cal. 675, at page

We also have in mind that no evidence as to the fact that the will truly expresses the testator's wishes can dispense with proper proof of every legal requirement in the making of the will. In re Walker, 110 Cal. 387, 42 P. 815, 30 L. R. A. 460, 52 Am. St. Rep. 104; Estate of Seaman, 146 Cal. 455, 80 P. 700, 106 Am. St. Rep. 53, 2 Ann. Cas. 726.

With these principles to guide us in studying the testimony, we have concluded that when B. R. Darling signed the propounded will he did so in the actual presence of decedent, and also, in legal contemplation, in the presence of decedent. His written attestation to the will states this to be a fact. In the early stages of his testimony in this case he affirms it. Later his testimony is somewhat uncertain, and he explains: "But it made me feel so bad to go in there and see an old man—I had never witnessed anything like that before—that I was flustered, I guess." His testimony as to his position when signing the instrument is not definite and out of accord entirely with the testimony of all the other witnesses. The same is true of his testimony to the effect that there were persons between himself and the bed occupied by the testator at the moment of signing, and not consistent with his own testimony, for he concludes on that subject as follows:

"The Court: Who was standing between you and the foot of the bed? A. I don't remember.

"The Court: How many people do you recall? A. It seemed like three or four.

"The Court: Were they directly between you and Mr. Offill at that particular time? A. I didn't notice.

"The Court: Your line of vision? A. I did not notice."

It seems to us that the final assertion that he did not notice that persons who were standing between him and the foot of the bed were or were not in the line of vision between himself and the testator leaves that point without any evidence at all.

The testimony about the obstruction of the vision by the foot of the bed seems wholly destroyed by the court's clear examination, but, aside from that, it is out of line of all of the other testimony and with the admitted physical facts. Felsenthal v. Warring, supra. The witness was standing at or near the bed foot, writing. He was writing on a book held by some one for him. The bed was not a structure of wooden head and foot board, but was a steel bed of common manufacture. Evidence, if it is evidence, of no greater probative nature than that can be of no use at all where there is clear evidence negativing it. To borrow an expression from the opinion in Wenban Estate, Inc., v. Hewlett, supra, the testimony "is so nebulous and evanescent as to render it nothing more than a mere pretense of evidence."

At best, the evidence of B. R. Darling is self-contradictory, uncertain, and by his own admission indefinitely recalled from a "flustered" mental reception of the facts as they occurred.

In our opinion, the evidence does not support the court's finding that B. R. Darling was not in the presence of the testator when he signed as a witness to the will.

The judgment is reversed.

SHIPLEY v. JORDAN et al. (S. F. 12735.)

Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1929.

1. Executors and administrators 🔑315(5)—Powers and duties of trustees regarding trust property under will are measured by decree of distribution transferring property.

Powers and duties of trustees in regard to trust property devised by will are to be measured by terms of decree of distribution by virtue of which trustees received property in trust for city.

2. Executors and administrators 🔑315(5)—Will held merely evidence aiding in distributing estate, and was entitled to no further consideration after decree of distribution, except on direct appeal therefrom.

Will held merely evidence before court sitting in probate when called on to determine how estate should be distributed, but was entitled to no further consideration after entry of decree of distribution for purpose of determining rights of parties interested in estate, except on direct appeal from decree.

3. Evidence 🔑413—Will offered to explain testator's intention, in action to enjoin unauthorized expenditure by trustees, held properly excluded as varying decree of distribution.

In action to enjoin trustees under will from alleged unauthorized expenditure of trust funds for erection of library, will offered to explain testator's intention and nature of trust was properly excluded, on objection that evidence of will varied decree of partial distribution and was not within issues.

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; Fred A. Treat, Judge.

Action for injunction by Lotta A. Shipley against John B. Jordan and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. F. Lacey, of Salinas, for appellant.

J. A. Bardin, of Salinas, and Argyll Campbell, of Monterey, for respondents.

WASTE, C. J. The plaintiff appeals from a judgment refusing to enjoin, temporarily or permanently, the defendants, who are the trustees of Carmel-by-the-Sea, a municipal corporation, and trustees under the will of Ella Reid Harrison, deceased, from an alleged unauthorized expenditure of a $20,000 trust fund for the erection of a library building upon property devised to the city for that purpose, and to be known as the "Ralph Chandler Harrison Memorial Library." Plaintiff alleges that the city trustees, disregarding the terms of the trust, intend to construct a nonfireproof frame building instead of a "fireproof construction and of Spanish style of architecture."

In their answer the defendants admit that, as trustees under the will of Mrs. Harrison, they intend to expend the sum of $20,000 in the construction of "a frame-stucco building, with a tile roof, and of architecture suggestive of the Spanish," but deny that the proposed construction is contrary to the terms upon which the trust fund was bequeathed and distributed. They specifically plead that portion of the decree of distribution in the estate of Mrs. Harrison which distributes to the board of trustees of the city of Carmel-by-the-Sea twenty $1,000 bonds, certain real property in that city, a large number of books, etchings, curios, and furniture, as follows: "In trust to said Board of Trustees of the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea, and its successors, for the following eleemosynary purposes, namely: To build, construct, equip and maintain a public library building and to conduct and maintain a library service in the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea, with and by the property hereby distributed and the proceeds, issues and profits thereof, for the use, benefit and upon behalf of the people, generally, of the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea, which said public library building shall be known as 'Ralph Chandler Harrison Memorial Library.'"

On the trial of the cause this decree was introduced in evidence. Certain evidence, including the will of Mrs. Harrison, was offered by the plaintiff as explanatory of the testator's intentions and the nature of the trust. The testimony was objected to by the defendants on the ground that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and offered for the purpose of impeaching and varying a decree of partial distribution, and not within the issues. The objection was sustained. Injunctive relief was denied. The correctness of the court's ruling in regard to the proffered testimony presents the only question for consideration on this appeal.

[1] The ruling of the trial court excluding the evidence was correct, and the judgment must be affirmed. The decree of distribution is the instrument by virtue of which the defendants have received the property in trust for the city. Their powers and duties in regard to that property are to be measured by its terms. Goad v. Montgomery, 119 Cal. 552, 557, 51 P. 681, 63 Am. St. Rep. 145.

[2, 3] There seems to be some uncertainty as to whether or not the will was actually admitted in evidence. Whether it was or not does not change the situation. The will was merely evidence before the court sitting in probate when it was called upon to determine how the estate should be distributed, but upon the entry of the decree of distribution that decree became the measure of the rights of the parties interested in the estate, and the will was entitled to no further consideration for that purpose except upon a direct appeal from the decree. In re Trescony, 119 Cal. 568, 570, 51 P. 951.

The judgment is affirmed.

CRAIG v. WHEELER et al. (L. A. 10464.)

Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1929.

Judgment 🔑725(4)—Judgment in prior action determining that foreclosure was valid held conclusive in action to quiet title.

Where it was adjudged, in action to quiet title, that plaintiff had no right in premises involved, rendering judgment that decree of foreclosure in favor of one of defendants, made and entered in another action to which plaintiff was not a party, was void, in which case an appeal had been taken which determined that judgment of foreclosure was not void, but constituted a valid judgment, held reversible error.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; A. C. Finney, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Lee Craig against Helen Reehl Wheeler and others. Judgment adverse to plaintiff and named defendant, and the latter appeals. Reversed as to portion of judgment appealed from.

Bicksler, Smith & Parke, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

L. E. Dadmun, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This action as originally commenced by the plaintiff was one to quiet title to a lot situate in the city of Los Angeles, of which he alleged himself to be the owner and in possession, and further alleged that the defendants claimed some right, title, and interest in said premises which were without right or value; wherefore the plaintiff prayed judgment quieting his title as to the defendants. The defendant Helen Reehl Wheeler, by her answer to said complaint, denied that the plaintiff was or ever had been the owner of said lot or any portion thereof or that he was ever in possession thereof or any part thereof. The said defendant further set forth that she was the owner of said premises by virtue of the fact that one Frances May Craig, a former owner thereof, had made and executed to said defendant a mortgage upon the property in due form to secure a loan of $4,000, which mortgage had been foreclosed by said defendant by decree of foreclosure duly given and made in said action; that said premises had been sold under and by virtue of said decree, and that said defendant had become the purchaser thereof at the foreclosure sale; and that in due course a sheriff's deed to the premises had been duly and regularly executed to her, by virtue of which deed she had become the owner in fee of the same.

The defendant Wheeler also filed a cross-complaint against her codefendant, Mabel King Fallis, alleging that the latter was claiming some right, title, and interest in the premises, which claim was without merit, and prayed for a judgment quieting her title against her said codefendant. The defendant Mabel King Fallis failed to answer the complaint of the plaintiff or the cross-complaint of her codefendant, and her default was duly entered. Thereafter plaintiff filed an amended complaint, wherein he set forth that he was the owner in fee of said premises by virtue of the fact that he was the husband of said Frances May Craig and that said property, while standing in the name of Frances May Craig, was at all times the community property of himself and said Frances May Craig, and that the same was such at the time that Frances May Craig borrowed from the defendant Helen Reehl Wheeler the sum of $4,000 and gave the mortgage above referred to upon the premises for the security thereof; that the money was borrowed and the mortgage given without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiff, but that as to the mortgagee she was aware at the time of taking the same that the plaintiff and Frances May Craig were husband and wife, and that the latter had no authority to make or execute said mortgage. The plaintiff further set forth at length the facts relating to the foreclosure of the mortgage, and stating in hæc verba the several steps taken by the mortgagee thereof to procure the publication of summons in said foreclosure action, together with the order for such publication, and, having set forth these matters in detail, he alleged that the order for publication of summons was void, and that the judgment thereafter rendered in said foreclosure action was also void upon its face, and that the defendant Helen Reehl Wheeler derived no right or title to the property by virtue of the sheriff's deed which had followed such foreclosure. Wherefore said plaintiff prayed judgment quieting his title against both the defendants in said action. A stipulation was presently filed to the effect that the answer of Helen Reehl Wheeler to the original complaint should stand as her answer to the amended complaint of plaintiff, and that all new matter contained therein was to be deemed denied. The cause came on for trial upon the issues as thus presented, and upon its submission the trial court made its findings of fact and conclusions of law, wherein it found that the allegations of the plaintiff in both his original and amended complaint with respect to his ownership of the premises in question were untrue, and that he did not have, and never had, any right, title, or interest in said premises. The court further found that the defendant Mabel King Fallis had no right, title, or interest therein. The court then proceeded to find that the right, title, and interest of the defendant Helen Reehl Wheeler in said premises consisted originally in her interest therein derived from the aforesaid mortgage which had been duly executed to her by Frances May Craig, who, at the time of the execution of the same, was the owner of said premises as her sole and separate property. The court further found the facts in detail with respect to the foreclosure of said mortgage, finding the detailed steps taken in the foreclosure as set forth in the plaintiff's amended complaint to be true. As conclusions of law from the foregoing findings of fact the trial court found, first, that the plaintiff had no right, title, interest, possession, or right of possession in or to said premises or any portion thereof, and was entitled to take nothing by his action; second, that the judgment and foreclosure in the action brought by the defendant Helen Reehl Wheeler against Frances May Craig and others, was by reason of the facts set forth in its aforesaid findings of fact void. The trial court thereupon made and entered its judgment in accordance with its aforesaid conclusions of law. From this singular judgment the plaintiff has taken no appeal. The defendant Helen Reehl Wheeler has, however, appealed from that portion of the judgment wherein it was adjudged and decreed "that the judgment and decree of foreclosure of the superior court of the state of California in that certain action entitled Helen Reehl Wheeler, plaintiff, against Frances May Craig, Jack Cady, R. Whiston and Charles McGee, defendants, being cause Number 158845, is void."

The plaintiff has filed no brief in response to the appeal of the defendant Helen Reehl Wheeler from that portion thereof above set forth. It is difficult to understand why the trial court, having found and adjudged that the plaintiff had at no time any right, title, interest, or possession in or to said premises, or any portion thereof, should have found it necessary or proper to determine that the decree of foreclosure in favor of Helen Reehl Wheeler, made and entered in another action to which the plaintiff herein was not a party, was void. But, however that may be, a sufficient reason for a reversal of the judgment which the court made and entered is to be found in the fact that in the case of Helen Reehl Wheeler v. Frances May Craig et al., above referred to, and in which case an appeal was taken to this court, we have heretofore decided that the judgment of foreclosure made in said action upon substituted service was not void, but that the same constituted in all respects a valid judgment. This decision, filed on January 12, 1929, has become final, and is to be found in (Cal. Sup.) 273 P. 558, and it is determinative of the present appeal. Said judgment having thus been found to be valid, it follows that the conveyance of said premises to the plaintiff in the action by sheriff's deed made in pursuance of the judgment of foreclosure invested the plaintiff Helen Reehl Wheeler in said action and the defendant and appellant in this action with the title to the premises, and that she would have been entitled in this action to have had her aforesaid title and ownership of said premises acquired thereby upheld if in this action she had prayed for such affirmative relief as against the plaintiff and respondent herein. As it is, however, she is probably fully protected in her ownership of said premises by the determination in her favor of the former appeal.

The judgment as to that portion thereof appealed from herein is reversed.

STERN & GOODMAN INV. CO. v. DANZIGER et al. (FREELAND et al., Interveners). (L. A. 10623.)

Supreme Court of California. Feb. 11, 1929.

1. Appeal and error 🔑79(2)—Orders dismissing interveners' complaints held final and appealable as to interveners.

Orders dismissing complaints in intervention in action to quiet title held final and appealable as to the interveners.

2. Appeal and error 🔑612(2)—Clerk of trial court alone may authenticate judgment roll, order appealed from, and notice of appeal (Code Civ. Proc. § 951).

The clerk of trial court alone may authenticate the judgment roll order appealed from and the notice of appeal under Code Civ. Proc. § 951, providing that appellant must furnish court with copy of notice of appeal of judgment or order appealed from and of papers used on hearing in trial court on appeal from judgment rendered on an appeal or from an order except one granting new trial.

3. Appeal and error 🔑143—Interveners, whose complaints in intervention were dismissed, held to have no appeal from judgment rendered in action to quiet title.

Where complaints of interveners in action to quiet title were dismissed, interveners held to have no appeal from judgment rendered in action; they having been unsuccessful as interveners, so that record tendered by them purporting to be three judgment rolls on appeal from order dismissing complaints in no way concerned interveners.

4. Appeal and error 🔑874(1)—Where appeals from orders dismissing complaints in intervention were taken before there could legally be judgment roll and only record tendered was judgment roll, review was precluded; only authenticated papers being orders and appeal notices (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 951, 953a; Supreme Court Rule 29).

Where orders dismissing complaints in intervention and appeals taken therefrom were prior to time there could legally be judgment roll in action to quiet title, on appeal from order dismissing the complaints in intervention, where record entered purported to be three judgment rolls, the only two papers authenticated, as required by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 951 and 953a, and Supreme Court Rule 29, in the record tendered, are the orders and notices of appeal therefrom, so that no record exists upon which orders may be reviewed.

5. Parties 🔑42—Interveners claiming only from or under defendants already in default in action to quiet title were precluded from intervening as matter of right; default being equivalent to "trial" (Code Civ. Proc. § 387).

Where interveners appealing from order dismissing their complaints in intervention in action to quiet title claimed only from or under defendants already in default, they were precluded from intervening as matter of right; default being equivalent to "trial," within meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 387.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leon R. Yankwich, Judge.

Action to quiet title by the Stern & Goodman Investment Company against Ed Danziger, in which the Graceland Development Company and others intervened. Judgment for plaintiff, and orders dismissing the complaints in intervention, and the interveners appeal from a dismissal of their complaints. On motion to dismiss appeal. Orders affirmed.

J. M. Danziger, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Joseph L. Lewinson, Jerry Powell, and Frank L. Kostlan, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. In this cause the orders of dismissal are affirmed, but without costs to any party to this action. We exercise this power because upon no possible ground could the appeals be sustained. Sonoma M. Co. v. National Mag. P. Co., 189 Cal. 433, 434, 208 P. 962.

[1, 2] Respondent bases a motion to dismiss the appeals from said orders upon the claim that the orders are nonappealable under the statute. This contention is erroneous. The orders dismissed the complaints in intervention; hence as to the interveners they are final and appealable. Dollenmayer v. Pryor, 150 Cal. 1, 87 P. 616; Britt v. East Side, etc., Co., 25 Cal. App. 231, 143 P. 244; Howe v. Key System, 198 Cal. 532, 246 P. 39.

But the appellants are without any record whatsoever to support their appeals. From certain papers certified by the clerk only, we get the following assumed facts: The action is by plaintiff corporation to quiet title to certain real property in Los Angeles county. The trustees of two certain corporations alleged to be defunct are made defendants, as is one Foster, alleged to be an attaching creditor upon the interest of one of the said corporate claimants to the property in suit. The two corporations defaulted. A demurrer to the answer of said Foster was sustained without leave to amend. Later judgment passed for the plaintiff.

After the defaults of the corporate defendants had been duly entered, efforts to have them set aside failed. Graceland Development Company, a corporation, then upon an ex parte order of the court, was allowed to intervene. It alleged merely succession to the rights of one of the defunct corporations in the property under a written contract, the tenor of which was not set forth, ending with the allegation that said predecessor had performed all covenants thereunder. Milton P. and Mamie Freeland were next allowed to intervene upon an ex parte order of the court, while the record was as above indicated, and were allowed to set up certain claims to lots deeded them by the other defunct corporation, described as per certain maps alleged to be official and to delineate the subdivision in a specified manner of the property in suit as a cemetery and mausoleum park. In effect, this complaint sought to adjudicate the legality of said maps.

Later, and on March 20, 1928, the court vacated these orders and dismissed both complaints in intervention, basing such action, no doubt, upon the fact that, after said defaults, the intervention was too late, especially as the parties were claiming solely as successors to or under said defendants in default. Appellants filed their notices of appeal on March 21, 1928. The court, however, did not enter final judgment until March 28, 1928. The proceedings granting the orders permitting intervention and the proceedings resulting in said later dismissals are in no wise authenticated, either by bill of exceptions or by a proceeding under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, commonly called a reporter's transcript. See Code of Civil Procedure, § 951, and rule 29 of the Supreme Court.

The judge of the court below authenticates no paper presented as part of the transcript. There are but three things the clerk alone may authenticate, viz. the judgment roll, the order appealed from, and the notice of appeal. Code Civ. Proc., § 951; Martin v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 195 Cal. 544, 546, 234 P. 321; Jeffords v. Young, 197 Cal. 224, 227, 239 P. 1054. The signature of the trial judge is necessary to authenticate a record under section 953a, supra. Bell v. Brigance, 194 Cal. 448, 229 P. 27. The same is, of course, true of a bill of exceptions. Sections 650, 651, Code Civ. Proc.

[3, 4] The record tendered purports to be three judgment rolls. How in any one case more than one judgment roll can exist is not explained, but appellants cannot be concerned about judgment rolls, whether they be many or few, for, as unsuccessful interveners, they have no appeal from the judgment. They are not aggrieved by it. The position of these parties is well considered in People v. Pfeiffer, 59 Cal. 89, 91, where it is said: "The appellant was not a party to the action in the court below, because his suit to be made a party was rejected, nor was he injured by the judgment. And what he claims to have been a final judgment was not a judgment against him. He was neither a party nor privy to it. It did not affect his rights; and he was in no way prejudiced by it. Hibernia S. & L. Soc. v. Ordway, 38 Cal. 680; South's Heirs v. Hoy, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 523."

Again, these orders were given and appeals taken before there could legally be a judgment roll; therefore the only two papers authenticated in the record tendered us are the orders and notices of appeal therefrom. Under this situation manifestly no record exists upon which the orders may be reviewed. The minute orders and notices of motion shown here are never authenticated by the clerk. Brown v. Canty, 31 Cal. App. 184, 159 P. 1056. But this observation is equally true in the present situation of the complaint and all other papers therein other than the orders themselves and notices of appeal, as above noted.

This proposition was well disposed of by the language of the late Justice Hart in the case of Britt v. East Side Hardware Co., supra, where at pages 232, 233 of 25 Cal. App. (143 P. 245), it is said: "While an order disallowing an intervention amounts in legal effect to a final judgment as to the proposed intervener (Dollenmayer v. Pryor, 150 Cal. 1, 87 P. 616), it seems to be settled that, where an appeal is taken from such order, the record thereon must be authenticated by a bill of exceptions containing all the papers and documents used in that particular proceeding and upon which the trial court acted in making the order. This conclusion is in accord with rule XXIX of the Supreme Court (160 Cal. lvi, 119 P. xiv), which provides: 'In all cases of appeal from the orders of the superior court, the papers and evidence used or taken on the hearing of the motion must be authenticated by incorporating the same in a bill of exceptions, except where another mode of authentication is provided by law.' We know of no other mode provided by law for authenticating the record on a motion such as the one resulting in the order from which this appeal has been taken than by a bill of exceptions. It can hardly be said that there is, within the contemplation of section 670 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a judgment roll in a proceeding on a motion for leave to intervene in an action, where the motion has been denied; hence, the certificate of the clerk of the trial court, certifying that 'the foregoing is a true copy of the transcript of the judgment roll in the above entitled cause' is not an authentication of the record on the motion. There is, in strictness, no judgment roll until the action has been tried and a decision therein reached on the merits. We cannot, therefore, conceive how it could be held that the certificate of the clerk to a record of the nature of the one before us can amount to anything, in so far as it purports to be evidence of the authenticity of such record. As stated, the only proper mode for authenticating a record on an appealable order is by a bill of exceptions, as required by rule XXIX of the Supreme Court. (160 Cal. lvi, 119 P. xiv.) It follows that all that we are authorized to review on this appeal are the papers and documents embraced in and authenticated by the bill of exceptions which is printed in the transcript. In other words, we cannot, in the consideration of this appeal, examine the pleadings of the original parties or any other documents contained in the transcript that are not embodied in the bill of exceptions. Thus confined in our consideration of the record before us, we cannot say that the court below erred in refusing to permit the appellant to intervene in this action."

[5] But, treating the papers tendered as a proper and complete transcript, the orders appealed from must be sustained. As noted above, the interveners claim only from or under defendants already in default. This precludes them from intervening as a matter of right Default in this instance is equivalent to trial within the meaning of section 387 of the Code of Civil Procedure. See Hibernia, etc., v. Churchill, 128 Cal. 633, 61 P. 278, 79 Am. St. Rep. 73. This is especially true where the party seeking to intervene is merely the successor to or claims under the party in default. Martin v. Lawrence, 156 Cal. 191, 193, 103 P 913. See, also, Mack v. Eummelen, 31 Cal. App. 508, 160 P. 1096.

COPE v. SUTTER COUNTY. (Sac. 3963.)

1. Counties 🔑127—County board of supervisors could not rescind contract with engineer for preparation of bridge plans and specifications, in absence of compliance with statute (Pol. Code, § 4041).

County board of supervisors could not rescind contract with engineer for preparation of plans and specifications for extension of bridge after engineer's preparation of two sets of plans, where there was no compliance with Pol. Code, § 4041, empowering board to reject lowest bid and order work done under supervision of county surveyor or engineer.

2. Counties 🔑129—Fact that bridge plans contained corporation's name held not to warrant finding that they were not prepared by engineer hired for that purpose.

In action by engineer against county for county's breach of contract to hire engineer to prepare plans and specifications and superintend construction of bridge, fact that name of corporation appeared on plans and specifications did not warrant court's finding that plans were not prepared by defendant, where his testimony that he prepared them was not contradicted.

3. Counties 🔑129—Finding that bridge plans submitted by engineer to county supervisors were incomplete and objectionable held not sustained, where supervisors ordered payment of substantial sum on plans submitted.

Finding, in action by civil engineer against county for breach of contract to employ him for preparing plans and specifications and superintending construction of bridge, that plans furnished were incomplete and not acceptable to county supervisors, was not sustained, where evidence showed that $2,000 was ordered to be paid engineer after submission of plans, and $2,000 after amendments thereto, and where plans were not rejected, but merely disregarded by supervisors.

4. Counties 🔑127—County held not entitled to terminate at will contract for employment of engineer to superintend construction of bridge.

County board of supervisors held not entitled to terminate at will contract employing engineer to prepare plans and specifications for, and to superintend construction of, bridge, where there was no provision in contract permitting county to discontinue the work or discharge the engineer.

5. Counties 🔑129—County which disregarded engineer hired to submit plans and superintend construction of bridge, and built bridge under others' plans, held liable for breach of contract.

County, having employed civil engineer to prepare plans and specifications for, and to superintend construction of, bridge, held liable for breach of contract to engineer, who submitted plans, and was ready to carry out his part of contract, where board of supervisors went ahead with building of bridge under plans submitted by county surveyor without declaring engineer's work insufficient or engineer incompetent.

6. Counties 🔑113(2)—Contract of old board of county supervisors, executed after election, held binding on newly elected board.

Contract of old board of supervisors, made between time new board was elected and the time such new board took office, was binding on the new board and was not against public policy as depriving new board of its legislative function since in legal contemplation the new board is identical with board entering into contract.

7. Counties 🔑122(1)—County's contract for employment of one not licensed architect for preparation of plans for bridge held valid (Pol. Code, § 4041).

Contract between county supervisors and civil engineer for preparation of plans and specifications and estimates for proposed bridge held not void on ground that engineer was not a licensed architect, since Pol. Code, § 4041, gives supervisors general authority to employ any one thought to be competent to do the work.

8. Counties 🔑129—Engineer held entitled to damages for contract price less cost of performance on county's repudiation of contract hiring him to prepare plans and superintend construction of bridge.

Civil engineer, who proved contract with county engaging him to prepare plans and specifications and to superintend construction of bridge, performance thereof on his part by preparing the plans and offering to superintend construction, and county supervisors' refusal to proceed with their part of contract, established prima facie case, entitling him to damages, in suit against county for full contract price, less the cost of performance.

9. Counties 🔑129—Burden to prove mitigation of engineer's damages on county's breach of contract employing him to superintend construction of bridge was on county.

Where engineer, employed by county to prepare plans for, and superintend construction of, bridge, proved performance of contract on his part and county's repudiation, burden to prove facts in mitigation of damages, representing the full contract price, less cost of performance, was on county.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by Erle L. Cope against the County of Sutter. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions. Superseding opinion in 267 P. 141.

Joe G. Sweet and Hadsell, Sweet & Ingalls, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Arthur Coats and Lawrence Schillig, both of Yuba City, and W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. This action, originally appealed to this court, was subsequently transferred to the District Court of Appeal in and for the Third Appellate District. That court rendered an opinion reversing the judgment, and a petition was filed in this court asking for a hearing herein, which petition was granted. At the time of the consideration of said petition by this court, we were in doubt as to the effect of section 4041 of the Political Code upon the right of the board of supervisors to rescind a contract entered into by said board with the plaintiff and hereinafter set out. The order for a transfer was made largely for the purpose of giving opportunity for further consideration of the effect of said section 4041 upon the rights of the parties under said contract.

By this contract of December 5, 1922, the plaintiff was employed by the board of supervisors of the defendant to prepare plans and specifications for the extension of the Nicolaus bridge situate in said county. After two sets of plans had been prepared by him and submitted to the board of supervisors, the board, without rejecting either of said sets of plans, passed a resolution directing the county surveyor of said county to prepare plans for said bridge, and upon plans, so prepared by the county surveyor, the board of supervisors, after advertising for bids, let the contract for the construction of said bridge, and under this contract the bridge was constructed according to the plans prepared by said county surveyor.

[1] Section 4041 of the Political Code provides that after the board of supervisors has adopted plans for the construction of a bridge, or other improvements therein mentioned, and has advertised for bids, as required by said section, "if the board of supervisors shall be advised by the county surveyor or engineer that the work can be done for a sum less than the lowest responsible bid, it shall then be their privilege to reject all bids and to order the work done or structure built by day's work, under the supervision and direction of the said surveyor or engineer." It is apparent that the provisions of this section of the Code have no bearing upon the rights of any of the parties to the present action. The board of supervisors made no attempt to proceed under the terms of the section just quoted. Had it done so, a different question might be presented for our determination. The facts before the court, as will more clearly appear from their discussion hereinafter, show that the members of the board after entering into the contract with plaintiff, and after plaintiff in accordance with said contract had prepared two sets of plans for the construction of said bridge, changed their minds and determined to have the county surveyor instead of the plaintiff prepare said plans. There is nothing to be found in the provisions of said section 4041 of the Political

Code that would in any way justify this course of action on the part of the board of supervisors.

The board was given "the privilege" of constructing the bridge under the direction of the county surveyor and by day's labor only after bids had been received, and the county surveyor had advised the board that the improvement could be constructed for a sum less than the lowest bid. The evidence shows that the proceedings for the construction of said bridge had never reached that stage after which the board would have been authorized to act under the privilege provided for by said section, and, furthermore, that the board never attempted to act under the authorization of said privilege. Therefore, the provisions of said section 4041 cannot in any way afford defendant any defense to said action.

All other questions presented on this appeal are sufficiently dealt with and satisfactorily determined in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal written by Justice pro tem. Preston, while acting as a member of said court. This opinion we adopt as the opinion of this court, and it is as follows:

This is an appeal by plaintiff, Erle L. Cope, from a judgment in favor of defendant, County of Sutter, in an action brought by plaintiff to recover damages for breach of contract.

The plaintiff and appellant is a civil engineer. On December 5, 1922, he was employed by the board of supervisors of Sutter county to prepare plans and specifications for, and to superintend the construction of, a bridge to be built by the county and known as "Nicolaus causeway." The contract of employment was in writing, and is as follows:

"This agreement made and entered into this 5th day of December, 1922, by and between Erle L. Cope, of Berkeley, Cal., and A. E. Schellenger, acting for and on behalf of the county of Sutter, and in the capacity of chairman of the board of supervisors of Sutter county, witnesseth:

"That, whereas it is necessary to extend the Nicolaus bridge from the present truss spans westerly to the river levee; and

"Whereas, at a regular meeting of the board of supervisors of the county of Sutter held on the 15th day of November, 1922, said board of supervisors decided to build this extension of reinforced concrete, and instructed Erle L. Cope to prepare plans and specifications for and to have borings made for said bridge; and

"Whereas, at a regular meeting of said board held on the 5th day of December, 1922, the chairman of the board was authorized to enter into a contract with Erle L. Cope, civil engineer, to draw plans and specifications and to superintend the construction of said bridge:

"Now, therefore, said Erle L. Cope hereby agrees to and with said county of Sutter to draw all plans and specifications and superintend the construction of a reinforced concrete bridge from the end of the present truss spans of the Nicolaus bridge westerly to the river levee, said bridge to be complete in all respects, including approaches, and to be in accordance with the requirements of the state reclamation board. Said plans and specifications to include copies not exceeding fifteen (15) in all, and to be complete with drawings and working plans in all respects for receiving bids for such construction.

"It is understood that by superintendence is meant that said Erle L. Cope shall make a visit to said bridge during the building thereof as often as required, and that he will at all times give his advice to said board concerning the construction of said bridge.

"And it is further understood that the inspectors on construction shall be selected by, and work under the direction of, said Erle L. Cope, and shall be paid by the county of Sutter.

"It is further agreed that, if said board chooses to make alterations or extensions in connection with said bridge, said Erle L. Cope will provide plans and specifications for such work, and shall superintend the same.

"And said county of Sutter, acting by and through the chairman of said board, hereby agrees that if, said Erle L. Cope shall fulfill all the terms and agreements of his employment herein contained, then it will pay said Erle L. Cope six (6) per cent. of the cost, said cost is understood to be the lower of engineer's estimate or accepted bids of said bridge with approaches as follows, to wit: Two thousand ($2,000) dollars on February 6, 1923, or on such earlier date that plans and specifications may be adopted by said board of supervisors; two thousand ($2,000) dollars on June 4, 1923; and the balance thereof monthly when payment is made for labor or materials, in the proportion that said payment bears to the total cost of the work.

"In witness whereof said parties have hereunto set their hands this 5th day of December, 1922. Erle L. Cope. A. E. Schellenger, as Chairman of the Board of Supervisors of the County of Sutter."

In accordance with the terms of this agreement, the appellant prepared plans and specifications and estimates of cost for the construction of this proposed bridge and also, at the request of said board of supervisors, prepared amended or supplemental plans and specifications, etc. The original plans and specifications, and estimates of costs, were filed with the said board of supervisors on February 6, 1923. The amended plans, specifications, and estimates were prepared by the appellant and filed with said board on March 5, 1923. None of these plans and specifications, etc., have ever been rejected, nor does it appear from the record that any of them were actually approved or adopted by said board of supervisors. The testimony shows that the two sets of plans and specifications were merely "ordered filed and taken under advisement by the board."

After appellant filed the original plans and specifications on February 6, 1923, he presented his claim to said board for $2,000; it being the first payment called for under the contract. The board passed the claim and ordered it paid, but the auditor refused to draw his warrant upon the treasurer therefor, and appellant instituted mandamus proceedings against the auditor, in which proceedings appellant finally prevailed, and received from the county this payment of $2,000. Cope v. Flannery, 70 Cal. App. 738, 234 P. 845.

After the decision in Cope v. Flannery, the second payment of $2,000, called for in the contract, was allowed by the board of supervisors, and paid by the auditor without litigation. Therefore, up to date, appellant has received $4,000 on account of said contract.

After filing the amended plans and specifications in March, 1923, appellant attended many meetings of the board of supervisors and insisted that he be allowed to proceed with his contract. He also wrote many letters to the board, requesting that he be allowed to proceed with the contract and superintend the construction of the bridge. The board of supervisors, however, entirely ignored appellant and his plans and specifications and said contract, and on January 7, 1924, passed the following resolution:

"On motion, it was ordered that William Shearer, the county surveyor, be and he is hereby instructed and directed to prepare plans for a grade and bridge across Barrow Pit, at the approach of Nicolaus bridge."

Thereafter, plans and specifications were prepared by Mr. Shearer, the county surveyor, adopted by the board, and the bridge was constructed according to such plans and specifications at a cost of $169,850. The bridge was constructed at the same general location as contemplated in appellant's plans and specifications, but entirely according to the plans and specifications, and under the supervision, of the county surveyor.

After the board of supervisors had placed the superintending of the construction of the bridge entirely in the charge of Mr. Shearer, the county surveyor, appellant still insisted that he be allowed to carry out his contract and superintend the construction of the bridge, so, on March 16, 1925, said board of supervisors passed the following resolution:

"On motion, it was ordered that Mr. Erle L. Cope be notified that Mr. William Shearer, county surveyor, will continue as representative and engineer of the county, on the construction of the 'Nicolaus causeway,' and that the contractor on said construction is not authorized to recognize any other person as such engineer and representative of the county. The foregoing order passed and adopted by unanimous vote of all members of said board."

This resolution was served upon appellant, and he was ordered off of the job. Appellant made no further attempt to superintend the work or attend any further meetings of the board of supervisors or have anything further to do with the construction of said bridge, but on the 1st day of June, 1925, presented his claim, which is the basis of this action, to the board of supervisors for $5,610, claiming that this amount is due him under the contract, calculated as follows:

Total fees, 6% of $166,000	$9,960 00
Less payments	4,000 00
	$5,960 00
Less expenses to fulfill	$ 350 00
Balance being damages sustained	$5,610 00

This claim was rejected by the board of supervisors, and this action followed. The case was tried by the court sitting without a jury, and the court made findings and rendered judgment in favor of the defendant.

The execution of the contract is admitted.

[2] Appellant strenuously insists that the material findings of the court are not supported by the evidence. The court, among other things, found that the plans and specifications for the bridge were prepared by Cope, Rand, Means Company, a corporation, under the supervision of the appellant, and not by the appellant, and for this reason appellant had violated the contract. The only testimony upon this question was that given by the appellant, which is as follows:

"By the Court: Under whose direction were they drawn (plans and specifications)? A. My direction, and a good part of it was drawn by me personally.

"Mr. Sweet: And are these the amended plans that you allege in your complaint you filed with the board of supervisors? A. Yes, sir."

It is true that the name of Cope, Rand, Means Company appears on the plans, but that is no proof that the plans were not prepared by, or under the direct supervision of, appellant, as he testified, and there is no testimony in the record that Cope, Rand, Means Company had anything to do with the original plans and specifications or the amended plans and specifications. Furthermore, these plans were before the board of supervisors when they ordered the two $2,000 payments made to appellant, and no objection whatever was then raised by the board that the plans and specifications were not prepared by appellant.

[3] The court also found "that said plans and specifications were incomplete and objectionable to said board of supervisors, and not satisfactory or acceptable to them, and were in violation of the terms of said contract." These plans and specifications were filed, and the board of supervisors made no formal order either approving or rejecting the same, but ordered appellant's claim for

$2,000 paid. The board requested amended plans and specifications, which were furnished, and then the board ordered that appellant's second claim for $2,000 be paid. No other conclusion can be drawn from this action of the board than that the plans and specifications furnished by appellant were satisfactory to, and approved by, them. It would be unreasonable to assume that the board of supervisors would pay $4,000 of the county's money after receipt of the plans and specifications, and amended plans and specifications, if the same were not satisfactory, or were in violation of the contract. In view of this affirmative action by said board, certainly it could not be successfully contended that they rejected the plans, or that such plans and specifications were unsatisfactory to them, simply because no formal order of approval was entered on their minutes. The fact that the board called for amended plans is no evidence of dissatisfaction. The contract, on this point, provides:

"It is further agreed that if said board chooses to make alterations or extensions in connection with said bridge, the said Erle L. Cope will provide plans and specifications for such work and shall superintend the same."

This simply indicates that the board reserved the right in the contract to have several sets of plans and specifications for the proposed bridge prepared, if necessary, in order to meet any changes or alterations that might be made in the construction of the bridge, which is a very common occurrence in the building of a bridge such as contemplated by said board. Therefore we are unable to find any evidence in the record that would support the finding that the plans and specifications furnished by appellant were incomplete or not acceptable to the said board of supervisors.

Other findings made by the trial court are also unsupported by the evidence. None of the supervisors testified in this case, and respondent has not pointed out any evidence that would in the slightest degree support the findings, and from a careful search of the entire record we are unable to discover any, but, on the contrary, find that all the evidence supports the contention of appellant except on the question of damages, which we will refer to later.

[4, 5] Respondent contends that the board of supervisors had the right to terminate the contract at any time because there was no provision in the contract that the owner may not discontinue the work or discharge the engineer. There is no merit in this contention. There is no provision in the contract which permits the owner to discontinue the work or discharge the engineer, and, in the absence of such provision in the contract, it could certainly not be terminated and the engineer discharged without cause. Furthermore, the board of supervisors did not abandon the project; on the contrary, they built the bridge upon plans later prepared by the county surveyor. Neither did the board of supervisors declare the work of appellant insufficient or that the appellant himself was incompetent. They simply ignored the appellant altogether, as though he had no contract whatever with them, and proceeded without regard to their responsibility under the contract.

[6] Respondent also contends that, as the contract was made in December, between the time a new board was elected in November, and the time such new board took office in January, 1923, such contract is against public policy, because the outgoing board has contracted in advance what the new board shall do, and the new board thereby deprived of their legislative function, discretion, and power to act for the best interests of the county, in case the new board deems the bids too high or the plans unsatisfactory. There is no merit in this contention. In contemplation of law, it is wholly immaterial that the new board of supervisors had nothing to do with entering into the contract with appellant. In legal contemplation, the new board of supervisors is the same board that entered into the contract. California Highway Commission v. Riley, 192 Cal. 97, 218 P. 579. See, also, Cope v. Flannery, supra.

[7] The respondent contends, and the trial court found, that the contract was void because the appellant was not a licensed architect at the time he prepared the plans and specifications for said bridge. Respondent has cited no authority, and made no argument, in support of this finding. Section 4041 of the Political Code, which deals with the power of boards of supervisors to build bridges, etc., contains no provision that the board of supervisors, in securing plans and specifications and estimates for any proposed bridge, shall only employ licensed architects. Supervisors are given general authority, and may employ any one who, in their judgment, is competent to do the work. Cope v. Flannery, supra.

[8, 9] Appellant contends that the proper measure of damages is the full contract price, less the cost of performance, and offered evidence at the trial in support of this theory. His evidence tended to show that he had been damaged in the sum of $5,960. The county surveyor testified that, even under appellant's theory of damages, appellant would only be entitled to approximately $3,000.

No other testimony was offered on the question of damages; still, the trial court found that appellant had not been damaged in any sum whatever.

We are of the opinion that, when appellant has proven the contract, the performance thereof on his part by preparing and filing with the board of supervisors the plans and specifications, his offer to superintend the construction of the bridge, and respondent's refusal to proceed with the contract, then he has established at least a prima facie case, entitling him to recover as damages the full contract price, less the cost of performance. The record reveals that all these matters were fully established by appellant. This being true, then the burden was cast upon respondent to prove facts in mitigation of those damages. Vitagraph, Inc., v. Liberty Theatres, 197 Cal. 694, 699, 242 P. 709, and cases there cited. The finding of the court that "appellant has suffered no damages whatever" cannot stand, and it was incumbent upon the trial court to find the actual damages sustained by appellant from the evidence before it.

The judgment is reversed.

SCHELLING v. THOMAS et al. (Civ. 6574.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 11, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⚷659(4)—Proof not made below cannot be inserted in transcript on suggestion of diminution of record.

A suggestion of diminution of the record is only for the purpose of correcting an error of defect in the transcript, and not for inserting therein proof not made below.

2. Appeal and error ⚷891——Application for taking additional evidence by appellate court for additional finding refused, where relative to matter not in issue below and immaterial (Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583).

A motion, if considered an application for taking under Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583, additional evidence for additional finding by appellate court, will be refused; it being relative to an issue not raised by the pleadings or at the trial and to a matter which is immaterial.

3. Husband and wife ⚷267(4)—Incumbrance of community property is not void because by husband alone, but voidable only at instance of wife (Civ. Code, § 172a).

Noncompliance with provision of Civ. Code, § 172a, that wife must join husband in instrument incumbering community property, does not make the instrument void, but only voidable, and that only at the instance of the wife, and so not by holder of later incumbrance.

4. Mortgages ⚷32(4)—Instrument agreeing to turn over property to another till he is released from note signed as accommodation held equitable mortgage.

Instrument whereby T. agrees to turn over all his described property to S. till S. is released from note which as accommodation maker he has signed with T. held an equitable mortgage.

5. Mortgages ⚷13—It is immaterial that mortgagor's title to the property was subsequently acquired (Civ. Code, § 2930).

That mortgagor required title to mortgaged property subsequent to execution of mortgage is immaterial, in view of Civ. Code, § 2930.

6. Mortgages ⚷244(2)—First mortgage, void against subsequent mortgagee in good faith and for value whose mortgage is first recorded, is also void against subsequent mortgagee's assignee having knowledge of first (Civ. Code, §§ 1214, 1215, 1217).

Under Civ. Code, §§ 1214, 1215, notwithstanding section 1217, making a mortgage void against a subsequent mortgagee in good faith and for value whose mortgage is first recorded, assignee of the recorded subsequent mortgagee has like precedence, though taking with knowledge of the prior mortgage.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; Warren V. Tryon, Judge.

Action by W. J. Schelling against Rexford Thomas and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant L. J. Conley appeals. Affirmed.

J. Logan Beamer and Henry L. Ford, both of Eureka, for appellant.

Mahan & Mahan, of Eureka, for respondent Schelling.

Nelson & Ricks, of Eureka, for respondent Tooby.

LUCAS, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal taken by defendant and cross-complainant L. J. Conley from a judgment and decree of foreclosure and sale in favor of plaintiff and respondent W. J. Schelling and defendant and cross-complainant E. N. Tooby.

The facts are that on September 22, 1922, respondent Schelling signed, as an accommodation maker, a $1,000 promissory note with defendant Rexford Thomas, thereby enabling the latter to borrow $1,000 from the First National Bank of Eureka. On the same date Rexford Thomas executed and delivered to respondent the following instrument:

"I hereby agree to turn over all my property, namely one timber claim No. 816932, and my lot and two buildings at McKee's mill to W. J. Schelling until such time he is released from my note, held by the First National Bank of Eureka. I also agree to pay him eight percent int. of principal on note.

"Rexford Thomas."

At the time the agreement was executed, Thomas stated it was given as security on his property for the respondent's liability under the said $1,000 note.

Subsequently, and on April 27, 1923, Thomas wrote upon this agreement the words: "This agreement is to hold good for $1000 and interest"—signed his name thereto, and acknowledged the instrument before a notary public. It was placed on record in the county recorder's office on the same day at 59 minutes past 10 a. m.

On September 22, 1922, at the time said writing was executed, the said Thomas held a patent to timber claim No. 816932, and was occupying and in possession of a lot and two buildings at McKee's mill, but was not yet the owner of the lot.

Schelling testified that the $1,000 borrowed from the bank as above stated was used by Thomas in the construction of the said buildings on the McKee's mill lot. Subsequent to the construction of the buildings, and by deed dated December 28, 1922, acknowledged January 4, 1923, and recorded April 25, 1923, Norine McKee and Ernest M. McKee, her husband, deeded to Thomas the lot above referred to.

On January 15, 1923, Thomas negotiated a loan of $2,000 from appellant L. J. Conley, and as security therefor gave Conley a trust deed to the property involved herein, which trust deed was signed by Thomas and by "Clara Thomas, his wife." The trust deed was recorded on April 27, 1923, at 47 minutes past 1 p. m. Conley testified that the $2,000 was used by Thomas in purchasing the McKee lot.

On April 24, 1923, to secure a further loan of $600, Thomas and "Clara Thomas, his wife," executed a mortgage on the same premises to Homer B. Douglas and Arnie M. Douglas. The mortgage was recorded April 25, 1923. In consideration of the sum of $600, this mortgage was assigned by the Douglases to defendant E. N. Tooby on October 3, 1923. The assignment was recorded October 10, 1923.

No part of the principal of any of the foregoing notes was ever paid.

It was stipulated at the trial that at the time Douglas and wife assigned their mortgage to Tooby, the latter knew of the existence of the Conley deed of trust.

On April 25, 1924, the Conley deed of trust was foreclosed, and Conley received a trustee's deed to the premises. The rights of Schelling and Tooby being undetermined, the said Schelling, on June 11, 1925, brought the present action to have the writing of September 22, 1922, herein first above referred to, declared to be a mortgage on the timber claim mentioned therein and upon the said McKee's mill lot, prayed judgment for the sum of $1,000 and interest alleged to be secured thereby, and asked that the property be sold in payment of the moneys due thereunder. Both Conley and Tooby, being made defendants, filed answers and cross-complaints setting out their respective claims of interest in the property.

In its judgment, the trial court found that Tooby had a first lien on the property arising out of the assigned Douglas mortgage; that the writing of September 22, 1922, was in fact a mortgage creating a second lien thereon, and that the interest of Conley created by his trustee's deed was subject to said two prior liens. Sale was decreed, and the proceeds thereof ordered applied in accordance with the above findings.

Appellant Conley urges as grounds for reversal: (1) That the writing of September 22, 1922, did not create a valid mortgage on the premises involved in this action; (2) that since respondent Tooby took the assignment of mortgage from Douglas and wife with knowledge of the existence of the Conley deed of trust, the Tooby lien is subject to said deed of trust; and (3) errors of law occurring at the trial.

These errors, it is contended, consist in the court overruling appellant's demurrer. The demurrer should have been sustained, it is urged, because the instrument relied upon by plaintiff as a mortgage is void, having been executed by Rexford Thomas alone, while the complaint alleges that Rexford Thomas and Clara Thomas are husband and wife; and because the said instrument is not effective as an equitable mortgage for the reason that it fails to show a consideration; and, further, because it cannot be enforced against an innocent third party.

[1-3] In briefing the case, counsel entered into a controversy as to whether the said Rexford Thomas was in fact a married man. The complaint is silent on the subject other than by reference made in the title of the cause, "W. J. Schelling, plaintiff, v. Rexford Thomas, Clara Thomas, his wife," etc., and the allegation that said defendant Clara Thomas has or claims to have some interest in the mortgaged premises. In this answer and cross-complaint, defendant Tooby sets up his claim of interest by virtue of a mortgage executed and delivered by "Rex Thomas and Clara Thomas his wife," etc., and the answer and cross-complaint of defendant and appellant Conley contains similar language. No proof of the marriage of Rexford Thomas being made at the trial below, appellant has moved this court for a "diminution of of the record" by having inserted in the transcript a certified copy of the marriage certificate of Rexford Murray Thomas and Clara Etta Hunter, showing their marriage on September 1, 1922.

Such a motion will not lie. A suggestion of diminution of the record is only for the purpose of correcting an error or defect in the transcript. Even considering the motion as an application under the provisions of section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure (added by St. 1927, p. 583) for permission to introduce additional evidence, such application would have to be refused on the ground that no community property issue was raised by the pleadings nor at the time of trial, and on the further ground that the evidence sought to be adduced is immaterial. The offer is made for the purpose of attempting to prove that the McKee's mill lot was the community property of Rexford Thomas and wife. This is unimportant. If separate property, Thomas could deal with it alone; if community property, the alleged mortgage of September 22, 1922, is not, as contended by appellant, void by reason of the failure of Thomas' wife to join therein. The provisions of section 172a of the Civil Code as it existed in 1922, providing that the wife must join with the husband in executing any instrument by which community property is sold or incumbered, has been held to make the instrument not void but voidable, and this only at the instance of the wife. Goodrich v. Turney, 44 Cal. App. 516, 519, 186 P. 806; Rice v. McCarthy, 73 Cal. App. 655, 664, 239 P. 56. In this case the wife of Rexford Thomas (if it be conceded that she was such) was made a party to the action and defaulted, thereby waiving her right, if any she had, to contest the validity of the transfer. This being a personal right, no one else can claim the benefits of the section by seeking to enforce such rights for her.

[4, 5] Coming now to the other points raised by appellant, the court is of the opinion that the writing of September 22, 1922, was an equitable mortgage.

"Every express agreement in writing, whereby the party clearly indicates an intention to make some particular property therein described a security for a debt, creates an equitable lien upon the property, which is enforceable. The form of the writing is not important, provided it sufficiently appears that it was thereby intended to create a security. If that intention appears, it will create a mortgage in equity, or a specific lien on the property so intended to be mortgaged." Higgins v. Manson, 126 Cal. 467, 469, 58 P. 907, 908 (77 Am. St. Rep. 192); Title Ins. Co. v. California Development Co., 171 Cal. 173, 152 P. 542.

"An equitable lien upon real property is enforceable against the property in the hands not only of the original contractor, but of his heirs, administrators, executors, voluntary assignees and purchasers or encumbrancers with notice, actual or constructive. Upon recording an instrument creating an equitable mortgage or lien, the lien becomes a matter of record, and notice is thus given to all the world that the title is encumbered, so that any one subsequently dealing with the property would deal with it subject to the lien." 19 Cal. Jur. 734, 735.

The instrument in question clearly indicates the intention of the parties to make the property mentioned therein security for a debt, and the property is described with sufficient particularity. The execution of the instrument was in good faith, for a valuable consideration, as shown upon the face of the writing, and the money secured thereby went into a portion of the property thereby incumbered. It was executed prior to the execution of the Conley trust deed, and was recorded prior to the recordation of said trust deed. Contrary to the last of appellant's contentions in attacking the validity of the instrument, the fact that the record title to the McKee's mill lot was not in Thomas at the time the instrument was executed is immaterial, in the light of section 2930, Civil Code, which provides that: "Title acquired by the mortgagor subsequent to the execution of the mortgage, inures to the mortgagee as security for the debt, in like manner as if acquired before the execution."

[6] The remaining point for consideration, namely, that, since defendant Tooby took the assignment of the Douglas mortgage with knowledge of the existence of the Conley deed of trust, it is subject thereto, the court believes to be without merit.

Appellant relies upon the provisions of section 1217 of the Civil Code, namely, that an unrecorded instrument is valid as between the parties thereto and those who have notice thereof, and cites certain supporting authorities. These authorities, however, are readily distinguishable from the case at bar, in that in each instance the subsequent conveyance was taken with knowledge of the existence of a prior unrecorded instrument.

In the case under consideration, it is not contended by appellant that at the time the Douglases made the $600 loan that they, or either of them, had any knowledge of either the prior unrecorded equitable mortgage of the respondent Schelling or of the Conley deed of trust. Such being the case, their mortgage, having been taken in good faith and recorded prior to the Schelling deed of trust, constituted a prior lien thereto. Conley could not make the Douglas mortgage secondary to his, because his unrecorded instrument, while valid between himself and Rexford Thomas, was invalid as against the Douglases, who took without notice. By the assignment of the Douglas mortgage, Tooby took all rights of the Douglases, including the right of priority.

Section 1214 of the Civil Code rather than section 1217 is more properly applicable to the case at bar: "Every conveyance of real property" (and under the provisions of section 1215, Civil Code, the word "conveyance" includes mortgages) * * * "is void as against any subsequent * * * mortgagee of the same property, * * * in good faith and for a valuable consideration, whose conveyance is first duly recorded. * * *"

In construing a statute similar in effect the case of Coonrod v. Kelly (C. C. A.) 119 F. 841, is authority for the rule which Jones on Mortgages (8th Ed.) vol. 1, p. 827, and other textwriters have seen fit to adopt: "The assignee of a mortgage takes all the rights of his assignor, and if, in the hands of the assignor, it was entitled to priority over another mortgage under the statute because of its priority of record, and of the fact that it was taken by the assignor for a full consideration, and without notice that the other mortgage had in fact been previously executed, it has the same priority in the hands of the assignee, although he may have taken it with knowledge of the facts."

This we believe to be the correct rule. Were it otherwise, the owner and holder of a negotiable instrument secured by a first lien against real property (Tooby in the present instance) might frequently be unable to negotiate the note and assign the mortgage because the purchaser thereof would receive no better than a second, or, as in this case, a third, mortgage. We feel certain that no such anomalous condition was contemplated by the Code.

The motion for diminution of the record is denied, and the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

CAMPBELL v. SMITH. (Civ. 3574.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 12, 1929.

1. Factors 🔑18—Factor could not claim ownership of goods under consignment contract providing for retention of ownership by principal until sold.

Where contract pursuant to which goods were consigned to factor provided that they were to remain property of principal and subject to its control until sold by factor, latter could not claim ownership of goods consigned to him.

2. Replevin 🔑11(2)—Demand held unnecessary, where defendant alleged ownership and right of possession.

Where defendant in claim and delivery action set up ownership of property and right of possession in himself, proof of demand for possession before action was unnecessary.

3. Replevin 🔑91—Instruction authorizing verdict for defendant for return of property or value thereof held error.

Where factor against whom claim and delivery action for possession of goods was brought owned only part of the goods and such ownership was question of fact for jury, held that instruction that, if defendant had right of possession, verdict should be for defendant or for value of property, was erroneous, since, if defendant had only special interest in property which entitled him to possession thereof, verdict should have been for return of such property or for value of such special interest and not whole value of property.

4. Factors 🔑47(2) — On claim and delivery, factor to whom principal was indebted held to have general lien entitling him to property or indebtedness and detention damages (Civ. Code, § 3053).

Under Civ. Code, § 3053, factor has general lien on property in his possession on consignment for all that is due him from principal, and on claim and delivery action against factor, if principal was indebted to factor, latter was entitled to return of property or amount of indebtedness in case delivery could not be had and damages for the detention.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action by W. S. Campbell against W. Tyler Smith, wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Joseph Scott and A. G. Ritter, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Bordwell, Mathews & Wadsworth, of Los Angeles (Odell S. McConnell, Ray W. Bruce, and John H. Mathews, all of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This is an action to recover personal property, consisting of automobile tires and tubes, in which action the plaintiff claims the delivery of the property and it was given into his possession prior to the trial. The case was tried before a jury, which returned a verdict in favor of the defendant for the return of the property and fixed its value at $30,000. Judgment was entered accordingly, and the plaintiff has appealed. The plaintiff is the assignee and agent of the Falls Rubber Company, which will be referred to herein as the company.

By the terms of a consignment agreement between the company, as party of the first part, and the defendant, as party of the second part, dated September 28, 1922, the latter became the del credere agent, or factor, of the former in Los Angeles and surrounding territory "solely for the sale on commission of the consigned tires and tubes of its manufacture." Some of the terms of the agreement are as follows:

"(4) That said party of the first part agrees to furnish and consign to the party of the second part * * * such tires and tubes as in the opinion of the party of the first part will meet the requirements of the trade of the party of the second part, * * * not exceeding $25,000 in value at list price, such tires and tubes so furnished and consigned to be and remain the property of the party of the first part, and subject to its control until sold by the party of the second part in the regular course of business upon the terms and conditions set forth in the aforesaid schedule of prices, terms and conditions.

"(5) That party of the first part will allow to party of the second part by way of reimbursement * * * and as commission * * * all the surplus amounts realized from said sales, over and above the net amounts specified in the aforesaid schedule of prices, terms and conditions.

"(6) In consideration whereof the party of the second part hereby promises and agrees: * * *

"(10) To make all sales and deliveries from the stock of the said consigned tires and tubes for the account of the party of the first part. * * *

"(17) To guarantee and does hereby guarantee payment for all goods sold from said consigned stock of tires and tubes and guarantee the credit of all persons to whom said sales are made, and to accept the aforesaid commission as consideration therefor. * * *

"(20) It is mutually agreed by and between the parties hereto, on the consideration aforesaid: * * *

"(26) That the party of the first part shall have the right at any and all times to enter in or upon the premises where said tires and tubes are, to inventory, audit, and examine said tires and tubes, and to remove the same if it so desires. * * *

"(29) Upon failure of either party to comply with and perform all of the terms and provisions of this contract on the part of either party to be performed, the same shall at once terminate; and either party may terminate this contract at any time by giving to the other party sixty days notice of its intention so to do.

"(30) That this contract is to be in full force and effect for a period of ten years unless sooner terminated by the acts of the parties as herein provided.

"(31) That the full and entire agreement between the parties hereto is contained in this writing and supersedes all previous contracts between said parties."

The company made large shipments of tires and tubes to the defendant, and as he sold them he made weekly reports to the company. Commencing in February, 1924, he sent with the reports his trade acceptances in payment of goods sold. In June, 1924, he had on hand under consignment from the plaintiff a stock of tires and tubes of the estimated value of about $18,000. At that time he gave the company trade acceptances in the total amount of $18,000, payable as follows: July 18, $3,000; August 22, $3,000; September 15, $6,000; September 30, $6,000. The defendant testified:

That the company's representative told him to sign these trade acceptances "to take care of the inventory on the floor. * * * I told him that I doubted whether I could make payments on those. 'Well,' he says, 'If you can't, * * * give us plenty of time and we will send you a check from the factory.' * * * I paid $9,000 out of the $18,000. * * *

"Q. That money came from the sales of stock on the floor, did it? A. Yes.

"Q. And the other nine thousand they sent money enough to pay, is that correct? A. Yes, sir."

The defendant pledged tires of the value of $3,000 to secure the repayment of money which he borrowed. He did not inform the company that he had pledged them. He testified that by giving these trade acceptances he considered that he became the owner of the tires and tubes in stock, although he did not so state "to anybody at that time." The trade acceptances contained the following: "The obligation of the acceptor hereby arises out of the purchase of the goods from the drawer." After giving these trade acceptances, the defendant received other tires and tubes from the company on consignment. Half or more of the tires and tubes in stock in June, 1924, and of which defendant contends he became the owner, were sold by him before this suit was commenced. A witness for the plaintiff testified that he "checked over the records and * * * found there were 99 tires left in December that were on hand about June 8th," and that their wholesale value was the sum of $1,500. This specific testimony was not contradicted except by the defendant's general estimates. Witnesses testified that the market values of tires and tubes were greater at the time of the trial than in December, 1924, but there is no evidence to support the finding of the jury that property taken in this action by the plaintiff, to which the defendant had any plausible claim of ownership, was of a value even approaching $30,000.

December 10, 1924, the tires and tubes in defendant's possession were taken under a writ of attachment in a suit brought against him by a former partner, and the sheriff took possession of the defendant's place of business and closed it. Two days later this action was commenced.

Both parties allege ownership of the property and right to the possession thereof. Respondent contends that the complaint does not state a cause of action, but it does not appear upon what theory the judgment in favor of the defendant can be affirmed on the mere ground that the complaint is insufficient. The defendant interposed a general demurrer to the complaint, which was overruled, and the case was tried on the theory that the complaint states a cause of action. The complaint appears to be sufficient as against a general demurrer.

[1] Respondent contends that "whether or not the execution and delivery of such trade acceptances constituted payment for said tires and tubes is a question of fact * * * for determination by the jury." This may be conceded in so far as applicable to the stock on hand when the trade acceptances in the sum of $18,000 were given, but there is no logical theory upon which the defendant can claim ownership of the tires and tubes subsequently consigned to him. Respondent does not contend that the original agreement between the company and himself was terminated or abandoned. At the trial, his counsel said: "We do not think that the agreement was canceled, but we take the position it was modified." The only modification claimed in respondent's brief to have been made, which is material in this case, is that, by giving the trade acceptances in June, 1924, he became the owner of the tires and tubes then in his possession.

[2, 3] This action and two others, in both of which W. P. Cline, who was an agent and assignee of the company, was plaintiff and respondent herein was defendant, all growing out of the transactions between the company and the defendant, were tried together, before the same jury. Appellant contends that the court erred in giving the following instructions in this case:

"If you believe from the evidence that no demand was made by W. S. Campbell for the possession of the property before he commenced the action in replevin on December 12, 1924, then, in that action, you must bring in your verdict for the defendant.

"You are instructed that if at the time of the filing by plaintiff of said actions in claim and delivery, defendant had the right to the possession of the property described in the complaint, then you are instructed to bring in a verdict in favor of defendant in each of said claim and delivery actions for the return of said property to defendant or for the value thereof as of the present date."

Both of these instructions are prejudicially erroneous. The defendant having set up ownership of the property and right of possession in himself, proof of demand before action was unnecessary. Drinkhouse v. Van Ness, 202 Cal. 359, 373, 260 P. 869. The second instruction quoted is erroneous for several reasons. At most, the defendant owned only a part of the property. It was a question of fact for the jury whether he was the owner of that part. If he had only a special interest in the property which entitled him to the possession thereof, then the verdict should have been for the return of the property or for the value of such special interest, not the whole value of the property.

[4] "As a general rule, although the factor has possession of the goods consigned, and is a del credere factor, until the goods are sold by him to a bona fide purchaser the general title to or property in the goods remains in the principal, and he has the right to direct and control their sale or disposition; and unless there is a special contract in regard to returning the goods, the principal may repossess himself of the goods at any time before sale on payment of his indebtedness to the factor." 25 C. J. 377; 11 R. C. L. 758; Mechem on Agency (2d Ed.) § 2561. The agreement in this case expressly provides that title and ownership of the property shall remain in the company, with the right "to remove the same if it so desires." The defendant had a general lien on the property in his possession on consignment for all that was due him from the company. Civ. Code, § 3053. If the company was indebted to the defendant, he was entitled to the return of the property or the amount of the indebtedness, in case delivery could not be had, and damages for the detention. Respondent relies on Riverside Portland Cement Co. v. Taft, 192 Cal. 643, 648, 221 P. 357, 359, in which case it is said: "The general rule in this state is well settled that the respondent was entitled to have all of the attached property taken under the replevin bond returned, and if it cannot be returned, then to have a judgment for the value of the whole. Only the right of possession is involved in the replevin action." The replevin action referred to was a suit by a third party claimant of attached property, who "gave a claim and delivery bond and took the property into his possession," against the sheriff who had levied on it, and in which action judgment went against such claimant. The sheriff, of course, was not the general owner of the property, but he was "responsible over to the owner for the excess in value of the property above the judgment and costs" in the attachment suit. Loosemore v. Baker, 175 Cal. 420, 422, 166 P. 26, 27. In such a replevin action "only the right of possession is involved," but, where the alleged right of possession is based on ownership, it is necessary to prove either a general or special property in the subject-matter of the suit. Young v. Matthew Turner Co., 168 Cal. 671, 676, 143 P. 1029. "Where, in an action of replevin by the general owner of property against one who has a special interest therein, the property has been delivered to the plaintiff, the true value to be assessed and recovered by the defendant—where the suit goes in his favor—is the value of his special or limited interest in the goods recovered." Pico v. Martinez, 55 Cal. 148; Keiser v. Levering, 29 Cal. App. 41, 44, 154 P. 281; Griffith v. Reddick, 41 Cal. App. 458, 461, 182 P. 984; Connell v. Hogg, 181 Cal. 730, 731, 186 P. 134; Wilkerson v. Thorp, 128 Cal. 221, 226, 60 P. 679; Bibb v. United Grocery Co., 73 Fla. 589, 74 So. 880; 34 Cyc. 1568; Cobbey on Replevin (2d Ed.) § 971; Wells on Replevin (2d Ed.) § 584. The same rule is applied in actions for conversion. Corey v. Struve, 170 Cal. 170, 173, 149 P. 48; Conolley v. Power, 70 Cal. App. 70, 76, 232 P. 744. In California C. F. Association v. Ainsworth, 134 Cal. 461, 464, 66 P. 586, 587, it is said that, if the owner of a special or limited interest in property should recover from the general owner thereof its full value, he would hold the excess above the value of his special interest for the use of the other party and be immediately liable therefor, and, "to avoid circuity of action, it is the policy of the law that the rights of both parties shall be settled in one suit."

It is not probable that the other errors of which appellant complains will be repeated at the retrial of the action, they being covered in a general way by what has been said herein, and a specific discussion thereof is not deemed necessary.

The judgment is reversed.

CLINE v. SMITH et al. (Civ. 3575.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 12, 1929.

1. Factors 🔑6—Provision in contract for consignment of goods to factor for termination on 60 days' notice held valid and binding.

Provision in contract for consignment of goods to factor that either party could terminate contract on 60 days' notice is valid and binding on the parties.

2. Evidence 🔑448—Letter part of negotiations preceding or accompanying execution of contract, neither uncertain nor ambiguous, held inadmissible, in absence of fraud or mistake (Code Civ. Proc. § 1856; Civ. Code, § 1625).

Where terms of contract for consignment of goods to factor were neither uncertain nor ambiguous, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1856, and Civ. Code, § 1625, in absence of fraud or mistake, letter which was part of negotiations preceding or accompanying execution of contract was inadmissible as evidence of terms of contract.

3. Factors 🔑5—Contract for consignment of goods to factor held not modified by letter written by principal to factor.

Letter written by principal to factor, but not attached to or in any manner referred to in contract of consignment, did not have effect of modifying contract, especially in view of provision in contract that full and entire agreement between parties was contained in contract, which supersedes all previous contracts between parties.

4. Trial 🔑253(10)—Instruction authorizing consideration of fact that consignment contract had eight years to run held erroneous, in view of contract provision authorizing termination on 60 days' notice.

Where contract for consignment of goods to factor authorized its termination by either party on 60 days' notice, instruction in claim and delivery action against factor, authorizing jury, in estimating factor's damages, to consider that contract had eight years to run at time of its termination by principal, was erroneous.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action by W. P. Cline against W. Tyler Smith, wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint against plaintiff and the Falls Rubber Company. From a judgment for defendant on his cross-complaint, plaintiff and cross-defendant appeal. Reversed.

Joseph Scott and A. G. Ritter, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Bordwell, Mathews & Wadsworth, of Los Angeles (Odell S. McConnell, Ray W. Bruce, and John H. Mathews, all of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This is one of the actions arising out of the contract and transactions set forth in Campbell v. Smith (No. 3574) 274 P. 758, to which reference is hereby made for a more complete statement of facts. The plaintiff in this action is the assignee and agent of the Falls Rubber Company.

The complaint is in three counts, on three trade acceptances executed by defendant in favor of the Falls Rubber Company. The jury found in favor of the plaintiff for the amount of these trade acceptances, and judgment was entered accordingly. The defendant has not appealed from the judgment, and the facts upon which it is based need not be further considered.

By cross-complaint, the defendant set up a cause of action against the plaintiff and the Falls Rubber Company for damages on account of the termination by that company of the contract set forth in the Campbell Case and its refusal to furnish tires and tubes as provided therein. By a separate verdict and a separate judgment, the defendant was awarded damages on his cross-complaint in the sum of $25,000. The plaintiff and the company have appealed from the judgment. The trial court gave the following instructions, among others, to the jury:

"14. Unless the power of an agent is coupled with an interest in the subject of the agency, it may be terminated by its revocation by the principal, within a reasonable time after the consideration was given for the agency, and under such circumstances no liability exists on the part of the principal for such termination. * * * The agency of Mr. Smith under said contract was not an agency coupled with an interest, and * * * plaintiff had a right under paragraph 27 of its contract, to terminate the contract at any time upon sixty days' notice to defendant."

"31. If the defendant and the cross-complainant is entitled to recover in this case for injury to his business, the measure of damages for such injury is such sum as will compensate him therefor, and in arriving at such sum you should consider evidence introduced on his behalf of profits earned by him under said contract with plaintiff, also any increase in the sales of said business from the time the business was started until the filing of plaintiff's suit, and you should also consider what the future would bring in the way of profits to defendant and cross-complainant from a business established as shown by the evidence, and also that his contract had eight years to run."

[1-3] Instruction 14 was given at the plaintiff's request, except the part thereof italicized herein, which was added by the court. Instruction 31 was given at the request of the defendant and cross-complainant. Appellants contend that the italicized parts of both instructions are erroneous. In respondent's brief it is said: "The Falls Rubber Company had the power to revoke the agency and to terminate the contract, but it did not have the right to do so after agreeing not to for a period of ten years, until the expiration of that time." Paragraph 29 of the agreement provides that "either party may terminate this contract at any time by giving to the other party sixty days notice of its intention so to do." It is unnecessary to cite the numerous authorities holding that such a provision in a contract is valid and binding upon the parties. Attention, however, is directed to A. Leschen & Sons Rope Co. v. C. T. Patterson & Co., 130 La. 557, 58 So. 336, because it involves a state of facts in legal effect the same as those of this case. In that case the contract provided: "This agreement can be cancelled by either party by giving thirty days' notice to the other party" The objection that the length of notice was unreasonably short was overruled and the provision quoted was held binding upon the parties to the contract. Respondent contends that the agreement was modified by the following letter:

"Mr. Tyler Smith, 1242–44 South Flower St., Los Angeles, Calif. Subject: Sixty Day Clause. Dear Sir:—In reference to the second paragraph of your letter wherein you refer to paragraph (29) on Contract, termination of agreement in sixty days, the writer wishes to give the explanation of this paragraph himself. We have been in business since 1909 and we have never as yet withdrawn a contract from a distributor or a representative, but upon mutual consent. All our agreements are based upon the confidence we have in our distributor or agent more than they are on the legal points, but for your information should we happen to get hold of a crook, we certainly would not wish to tolerate him for one year. For that reason the writer has insisted upon that sixty day clause in every contract. You will find this same term used in contracts with companies that are not worth over five hundred dollars. Where there are so many contracts outstanding you can readily understand if they were not standardized it would make an endless job to keep them in mind and the writer will give you his word of honor that you need have no concern as to the termination of this contract without you are amply and amicably taken care of and I trust that this will allay your mind of any uneasiness with regard to being disturbed so long as you represent us faithfully as you have in the past. With best wishes for your success we remain Very truly yours, The Falls Rubber Company. M. J. O'Donnell, president."

The defendant, referring to the agreement and the foregoing letter, testified: "At the time this agreement was executed it was signed by me here in Los Angeles. At the time that it was signed, at the time that it was executed by me, the circumstances concerning its execution were that I had returned from the factory; they mailed the contract to me for signature here; previous to signing it I had written them objecting to certain clauses; they answered this with a letter which was satisfactory to me. I signed the contract, returned it to the factory; they signed it at the factory and returned it to me. * * * I objected to the sixty-day clause and received his (O'Donnell's) assurance in another letter which I considered was a supplement to the contract." The context shows that by the words "another letter" the witness meant the letter of October 5, 1922, quoted herein. His own letter to the company, to which the letter of October 5 was an answer, was not produced, and no attempt was made to show the contents thereof, other than by his statement that he "objected to the sixty-day clause." He did not further explain the nature of his objection. Whether the objection was to the length of the notice of election to terminate the contract or to any option at all to terminate it does not appear. In the company's letter of October 5, 1922, it is said: "Should we happen to get hold of a crook, we certainly would not wish to tolerate him for one year." It may be inferred from this statement, in the absence of other evidence, that the defendant had asked the company to change the provision as to notice of election to terminate the contract from sixty days to one year. It is unnecessary, however, to base the decision on such an inference.

The letter of October 5th emphasized the sixty-day clause and made it clear that the company insisted upon its retention in the contract. After the receipt of that letter, the defendant could have been in no doubt as to the meaning of the provision in question, and the very fact that he objected to it shows that he understood its meaning.

Respondent relies on the following statement contained in the letter: "The writer will give you his word of honor that you need have no concern as to the termination of this contract without you are amply and amicably taken care of and I trust that this will allay your mind of any uneasiness with regard to being disturbed so long as you represent us faithfully as you have done in the past." It is contended that this letter and the formal contract must be construed together as one instrument, and that, "aside from telling Smith in positive terms that there would be no termination of the contract without he was 'amply and amicably taken care of,' the letter further promised that Smith would not be disturbed so long as he represented the company faithfully." It appears from the defendant's testimony that the letter was a part of the negotiations preceding or accompanying the execution of the contract. In the absence of fraud or mistake, it was inadmissible as evidence of the terms of the contract, which were neither uncertain nor ambiguous. Code Civ. Proc. § 1856; Civ. Code, § 1625. The formal contract executed by the parties provides: "(20) It is mutually agreed by and between the parties hereto, on the consideration aforesaid: * * * (31) That the full and entire agreement between the parties hereto is contained in this writing, and supersedes all previous contracts between said parties." This is more than a mere admission that the instrument contains the entire agreement between the parties. It is a covenant to the effect that neither party is to be bound by any agreement or understanding not contained in the writing. The letter was not attached to the contract or in any manner referred to therein.

[4] The italicized parts of both instructions quoted are prejudicially erroneous. Paragraph 29 gave either party the right to terminate the contract "at any time," by giving the required notice, and the jury, in estimating defendant's damages, if any, had no right to consider, contrary to the plain provisions of the contract, that it "had eight years to run." In view of the company's right to terminate the contract at any time on sixty days' notice, there is not sufficient evidence to warrant a judgment in favor of the cross-complainant for anything like $25,000.

CLINE v. SMITH. (Civ. 3576.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 12, 1929.

1. Replevin 🔑83—Factor, having only special interest in consigned goods, could not, in claim and delivery action against him, recover in excess of value of such special interest.

If, under contract for consignment of goods to factor, principal was general owner of goods, and factor was owner of special property or interest therein, factor's right of recovery in claim and delivery action against him could not exceed value of such special interest in case return of property could not be had.

2. Replevin 🔑11(2)—Demand for possession before suing held unnecessary, where defendant alleged ownership and right of possession.

Where defendant in claim and delivery action set up ownership of property and right of possession in himself, proof of demand for possession before action was unnecessary.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action by W. P. Cline against W. Tyler Smith, wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Joseph Scott and A. G. Ritter, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Bordwell, Mathews & Wadsworth, of Los Angeles (Odell S. McConnell, Ray W. Bruce, and John H. Mathews, all of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This is one of the actions growing out of the contract and transactions set forth in Campbell v. Smith (No. 3574) 274 P. 758, this day decided by this court, to which reference is hereby made for a more complete statement of facts. The plaintiff herein is the assignee and agent of the Falls Rubber Company. He prosecutes this action to recover possession of automobile tires and tubes of the alleged value of $8,000. He took possession of the property under a claim and delivery bond before the trial. Verdict and judgment went for the defendant for the return of the property or its value in the sum of $8,000. The plaintiff has appealed from the judgment.

[1] This action and the Campbell Case and another action between the parties hereto were tried together before the same jury. The facts involved in this action are largely the same as those in the Campbell Case. Some of the tires and tubes, for the recovery of which this action was brought, had been pledged by defendant as security for money borrowed by him, and others had been distributed by him among retail dealers. The defendant claimed ownership of a part of this property by reason of the trade acceptances for $18,000 which he gave the company, as set forth in the Campbell Case. In respondent's brief it is said: "It was our contention at the trial of this case, and we still hold to that view, that whether or not the execution and delivery of such trade acceptances constituted payment for said tires and tubes is a question of fact * * * for determination by the jury." The instructions to the jury, however, rendered the determination of that question immaterial. In the instruction set forth at length in the Campbell Case, expressly made applicable to both cases, the court told the jury that, if the "defendant had the right to the possession of the property," he was entitled to a verdict for its return or "for the value thereof as of the present date." If, as stated in the Campbell Case, the plaintiff was the general owner of the tires and tubes and the defendant was the owner of a special property or interest therein, then the latter's right of recovery cannot exceed the value of such special interest, in case a return of the property cannot be had.

[2] The court instructed the jury that "when a person has lawfully come into possession of the property of another it is a necessary prerequisite that a demand be made before a claim and delivery action can be commenced," and the court refused to give an instruction requested by the plaintiff to the effect that no demand was necessary, "inasmuch as defendant in his answer * * * has asserted title and a right of possession in himself." Under the circumstances stated, the instruction given is erroneous, and the one refused should have been given. Drinkhouse v. Van Ness, 202 Cal. 359, 373, 260 P. 869. It is unnecessary to repeat the discussion and the citation of authorities in the Campbell Case. They are equally applicable to the facts of this case.

WISEMAN et al. v. SKLAR et ux. (Civ. 5770.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 4, 1929.

Appeal and error 🔑150(2)—Plaintiff's appeal will not be dismissed because of assignment of his interest in judgment to coplaintiff, by clerk, pursuant to order of court.

Appeal by a plaintiff will not be dismissed on the ground that he, having assigned his interest in the judgment to his coplaintiff, is no longer interested in the result of the appeal, the assignment not having been made by him personally and voluntarily, but by the clerk for him, in consequence of an order of the trial court, so that, since the outcome of the appeal is uncertain, appellant may still be pecuniarily interested in the litigation.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank C. Collier, Judge.

Action by E. C. Wiseman and another against Joseph Sklar and wife. There was judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants and plaintiff Sidney J. Kass appealed. On motion to dismiss appeal of defendant husband. Motion denied.

Edward Brody, of Los Angeles, for appellant Kass.

William Ellis Lady, of Los Angeles, for respondent Wiseman.

HOUSER, Acting P. J. Motion by respondent (who was one of the plaintiffs in the lower court) to dismiss appeal taken by one of the appellants (who also was a plaintiff in the lower court), on the ground that said appellant, having assigned his interest in the judgment to respondent, is no longer interested in the result of the appeal. However, since it appears that the assignment in question was not made by such appellant personally and voluntarily, but that, in consequence of an order of the trial court, such assignment was made in behalf of said appellant by the clerk of the court; and, since the outcome of the appeal is uncertain, it is clear that said appellant, notwithstanding his involuntary assignment of the judgment, may still be pecuniarily interested in the litigation.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

WARFIELD v. KRUEGER. (Civ. 6534.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Feb. 8, 1929.

1. Damages 🔑87(2)—Actual damages must be found as predicate for recovery of exemplary damages.

Actual damages must be found as predicate for recovery of exemplary damages.

2. Appeal and error 🔑1056(6)—Plaintiff, failing to establish right to compensatory damages for assault, malicious prosecution, and false imprisonment, held not injured by exclusion of evidence on exemplary damages.

Where jury found in favor of defendant sued for assault, malicious prosecution, and false imprisonment, it must be assumed that plaintiff suffered no actual damage, and plaintiff was not injured by exclusion of evidence of arrest after commencement of action, offered for purpose of proving malice in support of claim for exemplary damages, which were not recoverable in any case, unless plaintiff established right to compensatory damages.

3. Appeal and error 🔑1056(6)—Plaintiff, failing to show actual damage for assault, malicious prosecution, and false imprisonment, held not injured by exclusion of evidence of defendant's financial condition.

Where plaintiff, suing for assault, malicious prosecution, and false imprisonment, failed to show that he suffered actual damage, exclusion of evidence of defendant's financial condition was not injurious, since wealth or lack of wealth of defendant was immaterial, in absence of showing of actual damage.

4. Pleading ⚷369(3)—Malicious prosecution and false imprisonment cannot exist on same facts, and requirement that plaintiff elect was not error.

Malicious prosecution and false imprisonment cannot exist on same state of facts, as they are inconsistent with each other, since, if arrest was without lawful authority, it could not be a case of malicious prosecution, and, if under lawful process, there was no false imprisonment, and hence requirement that plaintiff elect on which count he should proceed was not error.

5. Action ⚷45(3) — False imprisonment and malicious prosecution might be united, if acts complained of were based on different facts (Code Civ. Proc. § 427).

If acts complained of had been based on different facts, causes of action for false imprisonment and malicious prosecution might be united under Code Civ. Proc. § 427.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Louis H. Ward, Judge.

Action by Henry Warfield against William F. Krueger. Judgment for defendant, plaintiff's motion for new trial was denied, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Henry Warfield, in pro. per.

Sylvain D. Leipsic and Henry Heidelberg, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Action for damages for assault, malicious prosecution, and false imprisonment. Plaintiff appears in propria persona. By a third amended complaint he charged, under various counts, that defendant, a police officer, arrested him on several occasions, and that said arrests were made maliciously and without probable cause. He also alleged that, at the time of making one of the arrests, defendant struck him on the arm. Actual and exemplary damages were prayed for. Defendant denied all the allegations of the complaint. It appeared at the trial, which was had by jury, that plaintiff was in the habit of addressing the public on a certain street corner, he having at some time secured a permit from a police officer so to do, on condition that he would not violate the laws of the state or the United States. Plaintiff testified as to the arrests and the manner in which they were made. Defendant on his behalf testified that he bore no malice toward plaintiff, but had in taking him into custody on different occasions acted simply in the performance of his duties and under the instructions of his commanding officer that he was not to permit disturbances of the peace or the blockading of the sidewalks. This officer testified that he had received protests from the merchants doing business in the vicinity of plaintiff's activities, and that plaintiff caused disturbances of the peace and congestion on the sidewalks to such an extent that pedestrians could not pass thereon when plaintiff was speaking. These merchants were also witnesses, and they testified that plaintiff's acts caused disturbances and a complete blocking of the streets. It also appeared in evidence that plaintiff had been found guilty of one of these charges, and had been given a suspended sentence thereon, and that he had been dismissed on others. At the conclusion of the trial the jury rendered a verdict in favor of the defendant. Motion for new trial was made and denied. The appeal is taken from the judgment and order. In support thereof appellant claims that the court erred in refusing to admit evidence of an arrest of the same character made after the commencement of the action. This evidence was offered to prove malice in support of the claim for exemplary damages. It is further claimed that the court likewise erred in forcing plaintiff to elect upon which count he should go to trial; the court concluding that false arrest and malicious prosecution could not be joined, except where they arose out of a different set of facts. Refusal to allow evidence of defendant's financial condition and the giving and refusal to give certain instructions to the jury is also complained of.

[1-3] Upon the first objection it appears from the record that, before closing his case, plaintiff, for the purpose of proving malice in support of his claim for exemplary damages, offered evidence of another arrest of plaintiff by defendant at the same place and upon the same charge made after the commencement of the action. This offer was rejected by the trial court as being inadmissible for the purpose, and was excluded. We fail to see in what manner plaintiff was prejudiced by the ruling. Actual damages must be found as a predicate for the recovery of exemplary damages. 2 Sutherland on Damages (4th Ed.) § 406. The jury having found in favor of defendant, it must be assumed that plaintiff suffered no actual damage. Plaintiff was not injured therefore by the exclusion of evidence that went to enhance that to which he was found not to be entitled. Exemplary damages not being recoverable in any case, unless plaintiff establishes his right to compensatory damages, a plaintiff is not injured by the action of the trial court in excluding evidence directed to the recovery of exemplary damages where he fails to establish a right to compensatory damages. Chavez v. Times-Mirror Co., 72 Cal. App. 694, 237 P. 1085. What we have said applies with equal force to the contention that the court erred in excluding evidence of defendant's financial condition. Where there is no actual damage, the wealth or lack of wealth of a defendant is immaterial.

[4, 5] Nor is there any merit in the claim that the court erred in compelling plaintiff to elect upon which counts he should proceed. Malicious prosecution and false imprisonment cannot exist upon the same state of facts. If the one lies upon the facts the other does not, as they are inconsistent with each other. If the arrests were without lawful authority, it was not a case of malicious prosecution; and, if under lawful process, there was no false imprisonment, the imprisonment being by lawful authority. Both cannot exist, upon the same state of facts. Davis v. Pac. Tel., etc., Co., 127 Cal. 312, 321, 57 P. 764, 59 P. 698. Had the acts complained of been based upon different facts, the causes of action, no doubt, could have been united under the provisions of section 427 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

We have examined the instructions given and refused, and we find no error in the court's ruling upon the subject.

Judgment and order affirmed.

BOUEY v. PORTERFIELD et al.★
(Civ. 3660.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 11, 1929.

Rehearing Denied March 13, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 11, 1929.

1. Fraud ⚷12—Promise is actionable fraud, where made without intention of performing it, but not where made in good faith (Civ. Code, § 1572, subd. 4).

Mere failure to perform promise made in good faith does not constitute actionable fraud, but promise made without any intention of performing it is actionable fraud, under Civ. Code, § 1572, subd. 4.

2. Evidence ⚷595—Intention not to perform promise is matter of inference from facts proven.

In action for fraud, based on failure to perform promise, the failure to perform is a matter of inference from the facts proven.

3. Fraud ⚷22(1)—Opportunity for investigation does not preclude recovery for fraud.

Opportunity for investigation does not, of itself, prevent recovery in action for fraud.

4. Fraud ⚷59(1)—Plaintiff, induced to make investment by fraudulent promises, held entitled to recover amount invested.

Plaintiff, who was induced to invest a certain sum in business to be incorporated by defendants by defendants' promises to invest certain amounts and to promote certain industries, without any intention of performing such promises, held entitled to recover amount invested in action for fraud.

5. Money received ⚷17(1)—Count held not to state cause of action for money had and received.

Count held insufficient to state cause of action for money had and received, in that there was no allegation that the money was had and received for the use or benefit of the plaintiff.

6. Appeal and error ⚷1170(3)—Insufficiency of complaint, which could have been amended on objection, held not ground for reversal (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Failure of complaint, pleading cause of action for money had and received, to allege that the money was had or received for the use or benefit of the plaintiff, held not ground for reversal, under Const. art. 6, § 4½, where defendants did not point out such defect, since, if they called court's attention to the defect in the complaint, it could have been amended.

Appeal from Superior Court, of Los Angeles County; John L. Fleming, Judge.

Action by John J. Bouey against Walter L. Porterfield and others. Judgment for plaintiff against certain defendants, and defendant Porterfield appeals. Affirmed.

Harry M. Irwin and Marcus C. Clark, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Charles E. Putnam and Charles W. Hackler, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMISON, Justice pro tem. This action was tried upon the amended complaint of respondent, which contained three counts. In the first count thereof respondent seeks rescission of a contract entered into between himself and defendants Porterfield and Deyot upon the ground of fraud and fraudulent representations; in the second count he seeks judgment against defendants for money had and received; and in the third count he seeks to set aside the contract and for return of money advanced by him thereon upon the ground of fraud practiced upon him by said Porterfield and Deyot, and for failure of consideration. The action was dismissed as to the Porterfield Company, and judgment was rendered in favor of respondent against Porterfield and Deyot. Porterfield alone appeals. The facts of the case are as follows:

Through an advertisement inserted in the Los Angeles Times respondent met the defendant Deyot and appellant Porterfield. They told him they were incorporating the Porterfield Company, and were looking for a bright young man to learn the business, a general brokerage business, in which said corporation was to engage; that they wanted this young man to put in $5,000; that they were going to incorporate said company for $25,000, and one-third of the stock would be issued to each of them; that they had $400,000 worth of bonds of the Imperial Gypsum Company; that they were going to finance the erection of a terminal warehouse to the amount of $150,000, and were going to finance the Whitewater Cement Company; that Deyot and Porterfield would each put into said company $8,333.33 in cash; and that all money advanced by each and all of the parties would be returned to them out of the dividends and earnings of said company within 90 days; that by reason of these representations respondent was induced to pay over to said Deyot and Porterfield $3,850, and that immediately after these representations were made, and on January 18, 1924, Porterfield and Deyot, as parties of the first part, and respondent, as party of the second part, entered into a contract to the effect that said parties would incorporate the Porterfield Company, with a capital of $25,000, divided into $2,500 shares; of the par value of $10 per share; the business of the corporation to be dealing in all kinds of securities and promotion of California industries. Porterfield was to be president and treasurer of said corporation, and Deyot to be vice president and general manager, and respondent to be secretary and assistant general manager thereof, under the supervision of Deyot. Respondent was to have a salary of $250 per month.

The contract further provided that each of the said parties was to purchase one-third of the capital stock of said corporation at par value; that Deyot and Porterfield were each to pay $8,333.33 cash for their respective thirds of said capital stock when the company was incorporated; that respondent was to pay $8,333.33 for his third of said capital stock as follows: $3,500 upon the execution of the contract and the remainder of said $8,333.33 to be paid in payments of $50 per month and the dividends declared by the corporation, until the said $50 per month and dividends completed the payment of the said sum of $8,333.33, nothing being said in the contract regarding the additional $350 paid by respondent to Porterfield and Deyot. When the $3,850 was paid over by respondent, Porterfield deposited it in a bank and drew checks against the same in the name of W. L. Porterfield, treasurer, although the by-laws of said corporation provided that all of its checks should be signed by the treasurer and countersigned by the president, vice president, or secretary.

Neither Porterfield nor Deyot ever paid over any part of the $8,333.33 each of them had agreed to pay as the purchase price for the capital stock of said corporation. Up until a few days prior to June 25, 1924, Porterfield gave respondent to understand that he intended to and would pay the said $8,333.33 for both himself and Deyot. A few days prior to said last-named date Porterfield informed respondent that he did not intend to pay and would not pay the purchase price of said capital stock, or any part thereof, and thereupon, on said 25th day of June, 1925, respondent served upon said Deyot and Porterfield notice of the rescission of the said contract and demanded the return of the money he had paid to them. None of the capital stock of said corporation had been issued and delivered to respondent. The company had done no business, nor had respondent received anything of value from said corporation, or from Deyot or Porterfield, under said contract, or otherwise, except a part of his said salary. On July 23, 1924, respondent Deyot and Porterfield prepared and signed articles of incorporation for said company, and thereafter said company was duly incorporated.

The trial court found that the statements and representations of Deyot and Porterfield that they would each purchase one-third of the capital stock of said corporation and pay $8,333.33 therefor, that they had $400,000 of the bonds of the Imperial Gypsum Company to sell, $150,000 to finance the erection of a terminal warehouse, or were going to finance the Whitewater Cement Company, and that respondent's investment would be returned to him within 90 days, were all untrue, false, and fraudulent, were known to said Deyot and Porterfield to be false and untrue; that their said promises were made without any intention on their part of performance, and were made for the purpose and with the intent of causing and inducing respondent to pay the $3,500 in cash; and that, relying upon the said representations and believing them to be true, respondent paid over to said Deyot and Porterfield the said sum of $3,500; and all of these findings are supported by the evidence.

The court further found that, at the time respondent entered into the contract with Deyot and Porterfield, he had had no experience in the business then being conducted by them, nor any knowledge or experience in the business that would be carried on by the corporation, nor of similar business, nor of the value of the capital stock of said corporation, and for information upon said matters respondent was compelled to rely and did rely upon the statements and representations of Deyot and Porterfield, and this finding is fully supported by the evidence. The court also found, and this finding is supported by the evidence, that the shares of the capital stock of said corporation, which respondent purchased as aforesaid, were wholly worthless, and without any value, and that ever since its purchase by respondent such stock has not been, nor is it now, of any value whatever.

[1, 2] Mere failure to perform a promise made in good faith does not constitute actionable fraud. However, a promise made without any intention of performing it is actionable fraud. Subdivision 4, § 1572, Civ. Code; Rheingans v. Smith, 161 Cal. 362, 119 P. 494, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1140; California Credit Corporation v. Carpenter, 77 Cal. App. 18, 246 P. 126. And the intention not to perform a promise is a matter of inference from the facts proven. Holiday v. Tolosano, 39 Cal. App. 151, 178 P. 170. In the case of Henry v. Continental Building, etc., Ass'n, 156 Cal. 680, 105 P. 965, the court said: "A party inducing another to contract in reliance upon estimates or opinions professedly based upon alleged facts known to the party stating them to be nonexistent will not be permitted to escape responsibility by the plea that he was merely declaring his opinion."

[3, 4] Appellant claims that respondent had the opportunity of discovering, and should have known and discovered, the falsity of the representations of Deyot and Porterfield, if, in fact, the said representations were untrue. There is no evidence that respondent had such opportunity. The contract was drawn up and the money paid over immediately after the false representations and the false promises were made to respondent. Even though oportunity for investigation was open to respondent, this, of itself, would not prevent his recovery in this action. Bigelow, in his work on Fraud, vol. 1, § 523, says: "The proposition has now become very widely accepted at law, as well as in equity, that a man may act upon positive representations of fact, notwithstanding the fact that the means of knowledge were specifically open to him." And Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, § 896, also lays down the rule that the mere existence of opportunities for examination are not sufficient to prevent reliance upon fraudulent representations assumed to be within the knowledge of the party making them.

In the case of Teague v. Hall, 171 Cal. 668, 154 P. 851, the Supreme Court of this state said: "This view of the law has been repeatedly declared in the decisions in this state"—and, among the numerous cases cited in support thereof, calls attention to the case of Ruhl v. Mott, 120 Cal. 668, 53 P. 304, wherein the court said: "It is true that where one is justified in relying, and in fact does rely upon false representations, his right of action is not destroyed because means of knowledge were open to him." We think the court's finding to the effect that, by reason of the false representations and false promises made to him by Deyot and Porterfield, he was induced to pay over and did pay over to the said Deyot and Porterfield the sum of $3,850, is supported by the evidence.

[5] Appellant strongly insists that the case should be reversed because the second count of the complaint does not state a cause of action, in that it is for money had and received, and no allegation is therein made that the money was had or received for the use or benefit of respondent. The consideration of this contention is important only by reason of the fact that the first and third counts mention only the sum of $3,500 as having been paid over to Deyot and Porterfield, and that in no place in the amended complaint, except in the second count thereof, does this additional $350 appear. The judgment of the court was for the sum of $3,850. No demurrer was interposed to the amended complaint. However, at the beginning of the trial, defendants objected to the introduction of any evidence upon the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, the alleged defect in the second count not being pointed out or mentioned. There is no doubt but that the second count was defective in failing to state that the money was had or received for the use of respondent. Fox v. Monahan, 8 Cal. App. 707, 97 P. 765; Rand v. Columbian Realty Co., 13 Cal. App. 444, 110 P. 322.

Just why the contract entered into between the parties stated that upon its execution respondent should pay to Deyot and Porterfield only the sum of $3,500, instead of $3,850, is not shown. Apparently, after the contract was drawn up and before the money was paid over, the amount to be paid by respondent was changed to $3,850, for the check or draft that was given to Porterfield was dated January 18, 1924, the day the contract was executed, and was for the sum of $3,850, which included the $3,500 named in the contract. In the case of Slaughter v. Goldberg, Bowen & Co., 26 Cal. App. 318, 147 P. 90, which was an action for damages brought by the administrator for the death of plaintiff's intestate, the complaint failed to show the existence of heirs. The action for the death being statutory, the personal representative of deceased is permitted to bring the action merely as a statutory trustee for the benefit of heirs, and in the absence of heirs, no action lies, and no cause of action would be stated, unless the complaint alleged the existence of heirs. In that case judgment went for the plaintiff and the court refused to reverse the case, on the authority of section 475 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and in doing so said: "In the case here the trial proceeded in all respects as though the pleadings sufficiently presented the issue as to there being heirs and precisely as it would had the complaint contained the allegation which it is insisted it should have contained. Why, then, should the case go back to have the complaint amended, as it is manifest that the proofs would have been the same? How can it be said that defendant has sustained 'substantial injury and that a different result would have been probable if such error * * * had not occurred'?"

[6] In the case under consideration, when the general objection was made by Porterfield and Deyot to the introduction of any evidence, because the complaint did not state a cause of action, they pointed out that the the matters set forth in the first count of the complaint failed in certain particulars to state a cause of action. Had they pointed out the particular objection to the second count that appellant now urges, there can be no doubt that the complaint would have been amended so as to cure the defect. In the case of Texas & Pac. Ry. Co. v. Lacey (C. C. A.) 185 F. 226, the court said: "If there were no statutes or local decisions to sustain the view, we would hold, nevertheless, that a defendant would not be permitted to successfully urge the alleged defect" in the count "in this court after entering a general denial and trying the case on the merits in the lower court and having failed to suggest the alleged defect in" the lower "court."

We are satisfied that this case was fully and fairly tried, and the error alleged in the second count of the complaint did not prejudice the substantial rights of the appellant, and that the same did not affect the result of the action, and from an examination of the entire cause we are of the opinion that the said error has not resulted in a miscarriage of justice. Under the authority conferred by section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, we feel that we should not reverse the judgment for the alleged error appearing in the second count of the complaint.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

UNITED STATES FIDELITY & GUARANTY CO. v. MATTHEWS et al.★
(Civ. 3662.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 28, 1929.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Feb. 25, 1929.

Descent and distribution 🔑87—Assignee of distributive share took subject to claims against estate then existing and administration expenses, not to administrator's debt accruing after assignment.

Where heir on death of ancestor was not indebted to deceased or estate, assignee of distributive share of heir, who was also administrator of estate, took assignment subject only to such debts or claims against estate as then existed and to expenses of administration, and hence assignment took precedence over debt owing by administrator to estate which accrued after assignment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen County; H. D. Burroughs, Judge.

On petition for rehearing. Petition denied. For former opinion, see 273 P. 822.

Horace W. B. Smith and P. R. Lund, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. E. Pardee, of Susanville, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Appellant has filed a petition for a rehearing in this case, in which it insists that this court erred in holding that the assignment by George W. Wilson of his distributive share in his father's estate, of which estate he was administrator, took precedence over a debt owing by said Wilson to said estate, which debt accrued after said assignment.

We are of the opinion that, inasmuch as under the laws of this state the title to the property vests in the heir upon the death of the ancestor, and that at the date of such vesting and at the date of said assignment the said George W. Wilson was not indebted to his father or to said estate, the assignee of said distributive share took the same subject only to such debts or claims against the estate as then existed and subject to the expenses of administration.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

PANZER-HAMILTON CO. v. BRAY et al.
(Civ. 5331.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 29, 1929.

1. Corporations 🔑630(6)—Corporation which had forfeited charter had no power to assign judgment subsequently obtained.

Corporation which had forfeited its corporate charter had no power to assign judgment, which it obtained in action instituted subsequent to the forfeiture of its charter.

2. Appeal and error 🔑1008(1)—District Court of Appeal will not be justified in disturbing trial court's implied finding that corporation obtaining judgment after forfeiting charter had not assigned judgment, under evidence.

District Court of Appeal would not be justified in disturbing implied finding of trial court that corporation, which, subsequent to time it forfeited charter, obtained judgment, had not assigned it, where party claiming to be assignee merely testified that he had obtained consent of other parties to proceedings to enforce execution of judgment which corporation had recovered, though it be assumed capable of assignment under St. 1905, p. 493, and Civ. Code, § 400.

3. Corporations 🔑630(6)—Notice of appeal by corporation from vacation of order allowing it judgment in action instituted after it forfeited charter held nullity (Code Civ. Proc. § 385).

Notice of appeal by corporation, though assumed under Code Civ. Proc. § 385, to be proper appellant, from cancellation and vacation of order allowing it judgment in action instituted after it forfeited its corporate charter for nonpayment of state corporation license tax, held nullity.

★Superseded by opinion of Supreme Court 279 P. 655.

4. Judgment 🔑16—Court was without jurisdiction to render judgment for plaintiff corporation, which had, before action, forfeited charter.

Court was without jurisdiction to render judgment for corporation, which was plaintiff in action instituted by it after it had forfeited its corporate charter.

5. Judgment 🔑489—Judgment for plaintiff corporation, which had, before action, forfeited charter, held subject to collateral attack.

Judgment for plaintiff corporation, which had, previous to instituting action, forfeited its corporate charter for nonpayment of state license tax, held subject to collateral attack.

6. Estoppel 🔑3(3)—Though complaint, in action by corporation which had forfeited charter, alleged corporation's existence, defendants, not denying it by answer, were not estopped from doing so on subsequent motion to vacate judgment for plaintiff (St. 1905, p. 493).

Though complaint, in action by corporation which had forfeited its charter, alleged corporation's existence, defendants, not denying such existence by answer, were not estopped from asserting nonexistence of such corporation on subsequent motion to have judgment rendered for plaintiff corporation vacated; St. 1905, p. 493, providing for forfeiture of charter, also providing that no corporation shall do business by virtue of its charter without a state license therefor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by the Panzer-Hamilton Company against Louise R. Bray and another. Judgment against defendants was subsequently, on their motion, canceled and vacated, and plaintiff appeals. Appeal dismissed.

H. L. Sacks, of Los Angeles, for appellant.
Meserve & Meserve and Roy P. Dolley, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

HOUSER, J. In consequence of the fact that in 1907 the plaintiff corporation failed to pay its state corporation license tax, its corporate charter was at that time forfeited. Six years later, without its status having been changed in any way, the then pretended corporation commenced an action against defendants, in which, among other things, the corporate existence of the plaintiff was alleged. Defendants answered the complaint, but failed to deny the allegation regarding the corporate existence of the plaintiff. Thereafter judgment was rendered in said action against defendants. In 1925, some 12 years after the action was commenced, under the provisions of section 685 of the Code of Civil Procedure, one Strangman, claiming to be "an officer and assignee of the plaintiff," procured an order from the superior court authorizing the issuance of an execution in the matter of said judgment. Thereafter, based upon the records and files in the action, on motion of defendants (which on the hearing thereof was supported by oral and documentary evidence), the court canceled and vacated its former order therein. The plaintiff then gave notice of appeal "from the judgment made and entered * * * on the 7th day of July, 1925, in favor of the defendants and against plaintiff, and from the whole thereof."

Each of the several points presented on appeal depends upon the situation presented by the fact that, prior to the time when the original action was commenced, the corporation plaintiff had forfeited its charter. It is respondents' contention that, having lost its charter, the corporation in itself had no power whatsoever—either in the first instance to commence the action; or, secondly, to assign the judgment which it recovered against defendants; or, finally, to give notice of or to perfect an appeal from the order in question.

Appellant's contention that the act is unconstitutional, in that its effect is confiscatory of the life and property of the corporation without giving it its day in court, is completely answered by the case of Kaiser L. and F. Co. v. Curry, 155 Cal. 638, 654, 103 P. 341.

[1, 2] That upon the forfeiture of the license of a corporation it is dead, and, consequently, rendered incapable of performing any act, is attested by a long line of authorities in this state. See Rossi v. Caire, 186 Cal. 544, 549, 199 P. 1042; Sharp v. Eagle Lake Lumber Co., 60 Cal. App. 386, 389, 212 P. 933; Crossman v. Vivienda Water Co., 150 Cal. 575, 580, 89 P. 335; Newhall v. Western Zinc Min. Co., 164 Cal. 380, 128 P. 1040; Van Landingham v. United Tuna Packers, 189 Cal. 353, 208 P. 973. It therefore becomes apparent that the corporation itself had no power to assign the judgment. But if, under the provisions of statutes amendatory of the original statute (Stats. 1905, p. 493), or under the provisions of section 400 of the Civil Code, power on the part of the board of directors of such a corporation to make an assignment be assumed, the evidence adduced on the hearing of the motion to vacate the order which authorized the issuance of the writ lacked convincing force to show that any attempt had been made by the directors acting as such trustees to assign the judgment.

The most that appeared was that, in answer to a leading question to the alleged assignee of the judgment, he had categorically answered "Yes" to a question as to whether he had "obtained the consent of either one of the other parties (presumably the trustees) to the proceedings * * * to enforce the execution of this judgment," but that such "consent" was not in writing. Also, that the "interests of the other members of the board of directors" had been assigned to him. On cross-examination, in explanation of such answers, the witness testified that all he had was "one slip of paper where we sold tools, that is all"; that he had "no books, assignments, writings, or papers of any kind relative to the collection of this judgment by any parties whatever. * * *" "Q. Have you that assignment with you? A. Sale of the tools. Q. That is all you have, an assignment which is the sale of the tools? A. Yes; just a sale of the tools. Q. And that is all you have? A. Yes, sir." In view of the foregoing evidence, we would not be justified on appeal in disturbing the implied finding of the trial court that there was no assignment of the judgment.

[3] But if it could be conceded that the attempted assignment of the judgment was legally sufficient, the procedure in perfecting the appeal was inadequate. Even assuming that, under the provisions of section 385 of Code of Civil Procedure, in an appeal arising from circumstances such as have been set forth herein, either the person in whose favor the original judgment was rendered, or his assignee, might properly be the appellant, nevertheless the situation here presented is, first, that under the authorities hereinbefore cited, as a matter of law, the corporation could not appeal, and as a matter of fact, the assignee did not do so. Although the corporation was dead, no substitution of the members of its board of directors as trustees for the defunct corporation appears to have been made in the proceedings. The notice of appeal was given in behalf of the plaintiff corporation—not by its trustees, or even by its alleged assignee.

In the case of Aalwyn's Law Institute v. Martin, 173 Cal. 21, 159 P. 158, in principle it is held that when a corporation has failed to pay its license tax, and by reason thereof its charter has been forfeited, the corporation is dead, and that in its behalf the trustees of the corporation are the only persons or representatives who have any standing in court. It is therefore manifest that, as the corporation itself had no power or capacity to act in the premises, and as its directors, acting as trustees for the corporation, gave no notice of appeal, the notice purporting to emanate from the corporation was a nullity. Venable Bros. v. Southern Granite Co., 135 Ga. 508, 69 S. E. 822, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 446.

[4, 5] With reference to the status of the judgment recovered by the corporation after its existence had been legally terminated the case of Crossman v. Vivienda Water Co., 150 Cal. 575, 89 P. 335, is authority to the effect that the trial court was without jurisdiction to render the judgment and that such judgment was subject to collateral attack. To the same effect see Newhall v. Western Zinc Min. Co., 164 Cal. 380, 128 P. 1040; Sharp v. Eagle Lake Lumber Co., 60 Cal. App. 386, 212 P. 933; McPhee v. Reclamation District, 161 Cal. 566, 119 P. 1077.

[6] The contention by appellant that, because the complaint in the action contained an allegation of the existence of the corporation, which was not denied by the answer of the defendants, the respondents are estopped from now asserting the nonexistence of the corporation, is controverted by the several rulings in the cases last cited. In principle it should be plain that estoppel of the classification of that here under consideration would require knowledge on the part of the person claimed to be estopped of the facts upon which the estoppel depends. 10 Cal. Jur. 632; Newhall v. Western Zinc Min. Co., 164 Cal. 380, 128 P. 1040; Wheaton v. North British & M. I. Co., 76 Cal. 415, 18 P. 758, 9 Am. St. Rep. 216.

It is equally clear that estoppel cannot operate as against positive law or public policy. "The doctrines of estoppel and waiver do not in general apply in transactions that are forbidden by statute or that are contrary to public policy." Montsdoca v. Highlands B. & T. Co., 85 Fla. 158, 95 So. 666. "An estoppel can never be invoked in aid of a contract which is expressly prohibited by a constitutional or statutory provision." Deer Creek Highway Dist. v. Doumecq Highway Dist., 37 Idaho, 601, 218 P. 371. Although the statute providing for the forfeiture of the charter of the corporation (Stats. 1905, p. 493) contains no express provision by which the corporation is forbidden to bring an action after its charter has been forfeited, the statute does contain a provision by which it is provided that: "No corporation * * * shall do or attempt to do any business by virtue of its charter, * * * in this state, without a state license therefor." Section 1. Also, that "* * * any person or persons who shall exercise any powers under the charter of any such corporation after the same shall become forfeited to the state, * * * shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." Section 9. In addition thereto, by the several decisions to which attention has been directed it is judicially determined that a corporation whose charter has been forfeited is powerless to perform any corporate act.

To permit appellant's contention to prevail in effect would be tantamount to a recognition of an equitable principle which in its foundation is lacking in at least two substantial elements.

The appeal is dismissed.

Failure of plaintiff, sustaining severe sprain and partial fracture of knee bone, to select medical aid for period of 11 months after injury, held not to prevent recovery for negligence, where he gave limb complete rest, as skilled physicians would have advised, and there was no imperative need of putting limb in a cast.

2. Innkeepers 🔑14¼—Hotel keepers, failing to maintain lights in passageway, were negligent per se as to guest's invitee (State Housing Act, § 66).

Proprietors of hotel and rooming house, failing to keep any lights in passageway extending to rooms, were guilty of negligence per se as to invitee of guest in hotel, under State Housing Act (St. 1923, p. 781) § 66.

3. Innkeepers 🔑14¼—Invitee of guest, falling over edge of unlighted passageway, held not precluded from recovery against hotel keepers, on ground of contributory negligence or patent defect.

Invitee of hotel guest, falling over edge of unlighted passageway on return from guest's room after dark, held not precluded from recovery against hotel keepers on ground of contributory negligence, or that injury arose from patent defect, since invitee, who was unfamiliar with premises, was not chargeable with knowledge of guest.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Fleming, Judge.

Action by Ray Allred, administrator of the estate of S. E. Allred, deceased, against John G. Orth and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Haas & Dunnigan and H. E. Forster, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Thos. L. Clay, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J. On February 15, 1924, the appellants, John G. Orth and Mary Paul, were engaged in conducting a hotel and rooming house in the city of Los Angeles, consisting of 248 rooms. On February 15, 1924, at about the hour of 7 o'clock p. m., respondent, evidently a man past middle life, upon the invitation of a guest of said hotel and rooming house, called upon said guest upon a matter of business. Respondent had never before been upon said premises, and upon arriving at said hotel and rooming house he informed the clerk at the desk that he had come to call upon said guest, and the clerk thereupon requested a bystander to conduct respondent to said guest's room. He was so conducted the greater portion of the way, and directed as to the balance of the way. Some 36 feet of the passageway, which extended through a court, was along and over a porch 4 feet in width. Said porch and passageway was built at an elevation of some 16 inches above the ground surface. One side of the porch abutted against the wall of the building, while the other side was open and without guard rail or any obstruction that would afford reasonable protection to persons using said porch from unwittingly walking off of the same under the darkness of night. Respondent transacted the business he had with said guest within a minute or two, and started to retrace his steps along the unlighted way, which he had traversed a few minutes before, and in so attempting his misdirected steps led him over the edge of the porch and he fell to the ground, sustaining painful and serious injuries. Upon striking the ground, respondent's left foot and ankle were thrown backward and under the body, in such a position that the weight of his body was thrown thereon, causing a severe sprain and producing a partial fracture of the lower end of the fibula. X-ray plates, taken some months thereafter, showed that the bone had united, leaving traces of some enlargement of the bone where it overlaps the ankle joint, and indications that the injured member would probably never completely regain its former flexible state. Immediately after he received said injuries, respondent was taken to the emergency hospital, where he was given first aid, and on the following day he was taken to his quarters, where he was confined to his bed for a period of 3 months, suffering more or less pain. Thereafter, for several months, he was able to walk only with the aid of crutches. For a period of about 11 months he received no skilled medical attention, and the only treatment his limb received consisted of the application of liniments, ointments, hot applications, masseur treatment, and other homelike treatments. During this period he employed for a short time a Chinese herbalist, who applied poultices made from herbs to reduce the inflammation. Later he attended a clinic, and was assigned to a department where he was treated for a period of 2 months by a physician.

[1] Appellants claim that respondent did not exercise reasonable diligence in caring for his injuries and in selecting medical and surgical aid. He was told by the attendants at the emergency hospital that he had suffered a sprain of the ankle. However, he adopted the best method that could have been adopted, and one that skilled physicians would have advised, according to the testimony of the physician called by appellants, which was giving the limb complete rest. The evidence of the physicians is that the fracture was only partial, and did not extend the whole distance across the bone, and, this being so, there was no imperative need of putting the limb in a cast. Appellants suffered no prejudice by respondent's failure to employ a surgeon at an earlier period or at all. The court's award was for general damages only, except the small sum of $70 allowed for drugs and treatment, and no compensation was charged against appellants for respondent's loss of time.

[2, 3] The only other point made by appellants is that the injury arose from a patent defect, for which a guest at a hotel or his invitee is not entitled to recover. Respondent was entirely unfamiliar with the premises. The "porch," as it is referred to in the case, is actually and in fact a passageway generally used by guests and others in passing from one portion of this building to another, and is equipped with electric light fixtures. It was necessary for respondent to use said passageway in visiting said guest. The sun set on February 15, 1924, at 5:40 p. m. That said passageway was not only insufficiently lighted, but that it was not lighted at all, was proved by an overwhelming preponderance of the evidence. Appellants were guilty of negligence per se. The act commonly known as the State Housing Act (Stats. 1923, p. 781), provides:

"Sec. 66. In every apartment house or hotel there shall be installed and kept burning from sunset to sunrise throughout the year artificial light sufficient in volume to properly illuminate every public hallway, passageway, public stairway, fire escape egress, elevator, public water-closet compartment, or toilet room. The provisions of this section shall not apply to an apartment house built with not more than two apartments above the first floor thereof."

The only artificial light visible to a person on said passage was a dim secondary light reflected from the crevices of the doorway through which he had passed in going to said guest's room, and which he was attempting to reach at the time he was injured. To charge the invitee, who was totally unfamiliar with the premises, with the knowledge which the guest who resided therein possessed of said premises, would be a distortion of legal principles. Respondent's conduct, in the light of the circumstances of the case, cannot be said to be such a departure from the normal conduct of a person similarly situated as to impute to him contributory negligence. As a matter of fact, while contributory negligence on the part of respondent is argued to an extent, it was not made an issue in the pleadings, and, if it had been, a finding against the contention would be fully supported by the evidence.

Clearly the findings of the court on every material issue presented by the case are amply supported by the evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

BRYSON v. NATIONAL TRAVELERS' CASUALTY CO. OF DES MOINES, IOWA. (L. A. 9597.)

Supreme Court of California. Feb. 14, 1929.

1. Insurance 🔑361—Insurance company, issuing receipt which authorized salesmen to collect first year premiums, was estopped to deny agent's authority to collect premium for additional insurance.

Where receipt, issued on form printed by insurance company for use of its agents and given to insured, recited that salesmen were permitted to collect first year payments only, insurance company was estopped, in suit on accident policy for accidental death, to deny that its agent had authority to collect sum from insured which was to be used for additional insurance.

2. Insurance 🔑361—Insurance company, failing to assert forfeiture in reply to letter stating payment had been made agent, was estopped to assert forfeiture for agent's want of authority.

Where insured, after receiving notices of delinquency, wrote to insurance company that he had paid agent for new or increased indemnity policy which he had not received, and inquired if agent had remitted the amount to the company, company, by failing to claim forfeiture in its reply and merely asking insured to get in touch with agent, was estopped to declare rights of insured forfeited for nonpayment of premiums on account of agent's want of authority.

3. Insurance 🔑310(2)—Pending negotiations with policyholder concerning premium paid agent, insurance company could not declare forfeiture without extending further opportunity for payment.

Insurance company, while negotiating with policyholder concerning premium which insured paid to agent which it was claimed agent failed to remit, and before reasonable time elapsed for insured's reply to letter requesting insured to take the matter up with the agent, was not entitled to declare forfeiture of the policy for nonpayment of premiums without extending further opportunity for payment.

4. Insurance 🔑361—Policy was not forfeited for nonpayment of premium by delinquency notices, where insured had paid agent full amount.

Where insured made payment to agent for new and increased indemnity policy, which was sufficient to meet all his obligations, and company's receipt showed salesmen were permitted to collect first year payments, there was no breach of any obligation on part of insured, and notices of delinquency were ineffective to suspend or forfeit insurance contract for nonpayment of premiums, and finding of trial court in plaintiff's favor in action on policy for accidental death was justified.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Fleming, Judge.

Action by Frank Bryson, as administrator of the estate of Bruno Cosco, against the National Travelers' Casualty Company of Des Moines, Iowa. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

George W. Seith, Louis P. Pink, and Page, Nolan, Rohe & Hurt, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Andreani & Haines and John L. Bisher, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. Action by the administrator of the estate of Bruno Cosco, deceased, to recover upon a policy of accident insurance following the accidental death by drowning of said Bruno Cosco; said action being opposed by defendant upon the ground that said policy had lapsed and all rights thereunder had been forfeited because of nonpayment of the premium due thereon. The court gave judgment for plaintiff, finding that at the time of said death said policy had not lapsed nor had any rights thereunder been forfeited for nonpayment of premium, or at all, but that at said time said policy of insurance was in full force and effect. Defendant has appealed. The sole question is with respect to the sufficiency of the evidence to support said findings above set forth.

The facts, established largely by documentary evidence and almost undisputed, follow:

The policy was dated July 25, 1923. As consideration it named a premium of $5 to be paid upon issuance and a further annual premium of $12 to be paid in quarterly installments starting October 25, 1923. Said Bruno Cosco duly made the initial payment of $5, and thereafter on October 25, 1923, also paid the first quarterly installment. Thereafter and prior to January 23, 1924, the due date of the second quarterly installment, to wit, on January 3, 1924, he gave to the soliciting agent for said insurance company his check for $24, payable to the company, for the purpose of having said policy raised from $25 to $50 weekly indemnity. Said payment was accompanied by his application for the larger policy, in which, answering the question as to whether he was carrying accident and health insurance in other companies, it was stated: "Pacific Mutual $25.00 week and National Travelers Casualty Ass'n $25 per week which this will replace." In return said agent gave him a receipt on the regular printed form issued by the company acknowledging a first payment on his said application; the receipt also recited that salesmen were permitted to collect first year payments only.

The application for an increased policy was rejected by the company; however, said agent deliberately neglected to communicate this fact to the insured, nor did he return his money to him. Explaining this action, he testified:

"There was a sort of partial understanding between Mr. Cosco and myself—he didn't know that this application had been rejected and I didn't dare tell him, at least didn't want to tell him * * * because he was rejected on ticklish grounds. The Company said they would not accept him because he was an Italian. * * *

"Q. The situation was that he gave you $24.00 to apply on the premium of a new policy of insurance which he understood would take the place of the policy then outstanding? A. Yes, sir. * * *

"Q. You didn't tell him at any time that the policy had been rejected? A. No.

"Q. You did tell him that as long as the other policy was issued that would take the place of the one he had made? A. Yes."

Thereafter on three separate occasions said insurance company sent to the insured from its head office notices informing him that there was due and payable on January 23, 1924, the sum of $7 to cover the quarterly installment due on the accident policy here involved and also a quarterly installment due on a health policy which he held in said company. The second notice, among other things, stated: "If payment has already been made, no attention to this notice is necessary, but be sure it has—take no chance." On January 24th the company wrote him, asking for an explanation of his delinquency, and also sent him a final delinquent notice which stated that reinstatement of his insurance could be made by sending in the amount due.

On March 4th said insured wrote the company, stating that on January 3d he had paid said $24 to their representative to have his policy raised from $25 to $50, but as he had received many letters regarding delinquency, he wanted to know whether said agent had ever turned the money in to the company. The company's reply, dated March 10th, dispatched from Des Moines, stated that no money had been received from their representative, asked for his name and address, and suggested that the insured ascertain from him why the matter had not been taken care of, for as it then stood said insurance was delinquent, saying nothing, however, about declaring a forfeiture under the terms of the policy. Six days later, to wit, on March 16, 1924, said insured was drowned, and thereafter the public administrator presented said claim, the subject of this action, for recovery upon said accident policy, with the aforesaid result.

[1] The record leaves us with no doubt that this insured was led by said agent to believe, and rested in his belief, that his insurance was paid for and would be continued in full force and effect either until a further payment became due upon the old policy or the new policy should be issued to take its place. The company not only had full notice that its agent secured said application for additional insurance, but in fact examined and passed upon it. No claim is made that the agent was not then representing said company to secure applications for insurance and to collect first payments thereunder. The company contends that his authority to receive premiums extended no further than to permit him to collect the original or initial payment; hence, even if it be conceded that said $24 was intended to apply upon the old policy, said agent was without authority to make the collection. However, the receipt itself issued on the form printed by said company for use of its agents and given to this insured, as above noted, recites: "Salesmen are permitted to collect first year payments only. * * *" Certainly, therefore, the company is estopped to deny that its agent had authority to collect said sum and to apply it as a first payment upon the new policy, if issued to replace the old, or if not issued, to receive and apply it as a payment upon the policy then in force, as in either instance it would be in full or partial settlement of the premium due for the first year of the life of the policy upon which it was applied.

Under these circumstances, knowing that an amount amply sufficient to meet all his obligations had been paid, said insured was not at fault in disregarding the notices from the company until he could find time to inquire about the matter. The situation is not altered by the fact that the first notice stated "Salesman not authorized to accept this payment," for the payment had already been accepted by the salesman and the above understanding had already been had with him. Furthermore, the second notice reassured said insured by stating that if payment had already been made, no attention to the notice was necessary.

[2, 3] Again, appellant, by its own act, estopped itself to declare the rights of the insured forfeited when, in response to his letter of March 4th, which was to the effect that he had paid $24, that he was to get a new or increased indemnity policy but had not received it and wanted to know if the agent had remitted said amount to the company, it replied on March 10th, saying nothing about a forfeiture, but, on the contrary, asking said insured to get in touch with the agent and ascertain why he had not taken care of the matter. Before an unreasonable time elapsed for a reply, the insured was drowned. It requires no citation of authority to support the conclusion that appellant, while negotiating with a policyholder about the premium and with pending matters unfinished, could not declare a forfeiture of the policy without extending a further opportunity for payment of the amount due.

[4] In short, there having been no breach of any obligation on his part to be performed by said insured, said notices were ineffective to suspend or forfeit for nonpayment of premium his said insurance contract, and we hold that the findings of the court below, to the effect that at the time of his death said policy was in full force and effect, have abundant support in the evidence.

As authority for the holding we here make, see Knarston v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co., 124 Cal. 74, 56 P. 773; Bank of Anderson v. Home Insurance Co., 14 Cal. App. 208, 111 P. 507; Knarston v. WIKSTROM v. YOLO FLIERS CLUB et al.

Abatement and revival ⟹55(3)—Purchaser's cause of action for damages for fraud in misrepresenting acreage was assignable and survived purchaser's death; "thing in action;" "arising out of violation of a right of property" (Civ. Code, §§ 953, 954).

Purchaser's cause of action for damages for fraud of vendor's agent in misrepresenting quantity of valuable acreage in part of tract where other part of tract was considered by all parties to be worthless held assignable at common law, and, under Civ. Code, §§ 953, 954, was assignable, and survived death of purchaser as being a "thing in action" within section 953, and as "arising out of violation of a right of property," within section 954.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Chose in Action.]

In Bank.

Action by Andrew Wikstrom against the Yolo Fliers Club and another. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals. On defendants' motion to dismiss the appeal. Motion denied.

Armfield & Eddy, Elmer W. Armfield and Arthur B. Eddy, all of Woodland, for appellant.

Huston, Huston & Huston, of Woodland, for respondents.

PRESTON, J. Respondents have moved the dismissal of the appeal herein, contending that the action has abated. Appellant died on September 28, 1928, and his executor has been substituted in his stead herein.

The complaint charges the sale by respondent club through the respondent Pratt, its vice president and agent, to appellant, of a tract of land of 152.44 acres in Yolo county. Taking the complaint as true, a portion of the tract of land so purchased lies north of a certain fence, and was by all the parties considered worthless. It was to be donated in the deed conveying the portion thereof south of said fence, which last-mentioned portion was bought and sold at a price of $210 per acre. The deed, as written and delivered, called for the said 152.44 acres, for which appellant paid the whole purchase price of $210 per acre. The survey later made showed only 109.2 acres thereof were south of said fence; the balance of 43.24 acres lay north of the fence in the zone overflowed by the waters of Cache creek, being the land which, according to the complaint, was to be donated with the purchase.

Other allegations of the complaint were that respondent Pratt, who had also been the confidential agent of appellant in other matters, deceived appellant in this behalf respecting said acreage south of said fence, well knowing that he was collecting for respondent club the full price per acre for the worthless area as well as for the area intended to be purchased, and well knowing also that appellant understood that all of the sum paid was to apply to the purchase of land lying south of said fence. The prayer of the complaint was for a return in damages of an amount equivalent to $210 per acre for said 43.24 acres of land, or $9,080.40.

The suit was not commenced until some four years after completion of the transaction, but appropriate allegations tolling the statute are found in the complaint, showing the discovery of the fraud and commencement of this action within the statutory period allowed thereafter for suit. The court found the existence of fraud, but held the action was barred by the statute. The propriety of this finding and decision of the court is the chief question on the merits in the appeal.

This statement is ample to show without doubt that the cause of action is assignable; that it survived in this case and passed to the personal representative of appellant. Under the common law of England, including the exceptions, found in the statute of 4 Edw. III, c. 7, and in the later statute of 4 Wm. IV, c. 42, and also including later development of it, the rule of assignability seemed to be: "As regards particular results, it is pretty generally held in America that the only causes or rights of action which are not transferable or assignable in any sense are those which are founded upon wrongs of a purely personal nature, such as slander, assault and battery, negligent personal injuries, criminal conversation, seduction, breach of marriage promise, malicious prosecution, and others of like nature. All other demands, claims and rights of action whatever are generally held to be transferable. In conformity with the principle just stated the following demands, claims, and rights of action have been held to be assignable: Causes of action arising from the breach of a contract of any kind (except the breach of a promise to marry); causes of action arising from torts which affect the estate rather than the person of the individual who is injured. Under the latter head are claims arising from the carrying away or conversion, of personal property, from the fraudulent misapplication of funds by the officer of a bank, from negligent or intentional injury done to personal property or upon real estate. In view of the general tendency to recognize the transferability of rights of action growing out of injuries done in respect of one's property or estate, it is somewhat curious to note that it is commonly held that the right of action for fraud and deceit is not assignable. But where property is obtained by a deceit or fraudulent device of any sort, the cause of action is assignable, for here the injury is done in respect of the particular property which is wrongfully acquired." Street's Foundations of Legal Liability, vol. III, pp. 86, 87.

Under this doctrine, without reference to a statute, it has been held that a cause of action ex delicto for injuries to personal or real property is assignable. Haynes v. Halliday, 151 Tenn. 115, 268 S. W. 130, 131; Pomeroy's Remedies and Remedial Rights, § 147; Sayre v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 205 Mich. 294, where, at page 314 (171 N. W. 502, 509), the court approves the following language: "'The position is that the right of action for a tort is not the subject of assignment; and this we understand to be the general rule' [citing cases]. 'But this rule applies only to those torts which are merely personal, and which, on the death of the person wronged, die with him; while torts for taking and converting personal property, or for injury to one's estate, and generally, all such rights of action for tort as would survive to the personal representatives, may, it seems, be assigned so as to pass an interest to the assignee which he can enforce by suit at law' [citing cases]."

In fact, in California, without reference to the statutory enactments, this court, in Rued v. Cooper, 109 Cal. 682, 693, 34 P. 98, 101, approved language as follows, based upon a consideration of the English and American cases then in existence: "Assignability of things in action is now the rule; nonassignability, the exception; and this exception is confined to wrongs done to the person, the reputation, or the feelings of the injured party, and to contracts of a purely personal nature, like promises of marriage." We have no doubt that, under the above general doctrine alone, the cause of action in question must be held assignable and to have survived. Lazard v. Wheeler, 22 Cal. 139.

But, supplementing said general doctrine, it must be said that sections 953 and 954 of the Civil Code have lifted many of the restrictions imposed by the rule of the common law upon this subject. There can be little doubt that the cause of action set forth in the complaint here is a "thing in action," under said section 953, and arises "out of the violation of a right of property," under said section 954, and is expressly made assignable and declared to survive the death of the owner by the latter statute. That these statutes were intended to liberalize the common-law rule was expressly held in Morris v. Standard Oil Co., 200 Cal. 210, 214, 252 P. 605. See, also, to the same effect, Dibble v. San Joaquin L. & P. Corp., 47 Cal. App. 112, 117, 190 P. 198, and Stapp v. Madera Canal & Irrigation Co., 34 Cal. App. 41, 47, 166 P. 823.

Another statement worthy of note in this behalf is that assignability and survivorship are by the last-mentioned Code section placed upon the same footing. Mr. David Dudley Field, who proposed to the New York Civil Code a section identical with said section, said of it: "This section is proposed to establish one rule for the assignability and the survivorship of things in action." Cases proving the tendency of the doctrine to assignability found among our decisions are many. A few may be cited. Simmons v. Zimmerman, 144 Cal. 256, 261, 79 P. 451, 1 Ann. Cas. 850; Perkins v. Sunset Tel. & Tel. Co., 155 Cal. 712, 103 P. 190; Estate of Baker, 170 Cal. 578, 587, 150 P. 989; Stapp v. Madera Canal, etc., Co., supra, at page 46 (166 P. 823); McCord v. Martin, 34 Cal. App. 129, 166 P. 1014; Harris v. Mount Washington Co., 55 Cal. App. 144, 146, 202 P. 903. In other jurisdictions we find ample support for the holding we have announced.

The case of Henderson v. Henshall (C. C. A.) 54 F. 320, is a well-considered case, where an action was brought to recover $30,000 damages alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff in the exchange of lands. It was charged that false representations were made by the defendant whereby plaintiff was induced to exchange lands in Tulare county for lands in Shasta county, all to her damage in the amount sued for. Plaintiff died pending the suit and a special administrator of her estate was substituted. Defendant moved to dismiss the action on the ground that it had abated by the death of the original plaintiff. This motion was denied, and sections 953 and 954 of the Civil Code as well as the general doctrine received consideration. The result of that consideration may be summed up in the following quotation: "If we follow this rule, and construe the provisions of the Code liberally, with a view to effect its objects and to promote justice, we must determine that the cause of action in this case survived to the administrator as assets on his hands, because the wrong which is the subject of the action was not merely a personal injury inflicted upon the decedent, and the damages claimed the measure of her bodily or mental suffering, but the wrong was to the estate of the original plaintiff, whereby it became diminished in value. 'It is now the general American doctrine that all causes of action arising from torts to property, real or personal—injuries to the estate by which its value diminished—do survive and go to the executor or administrator as assets in his hands.' Pom. Rem. & Rem. Rights, § 147. We think, upon principle as well as authority, the cause of action in this case survived to the administrator. Judgment affirmed."

A cause of fraud and deceit similar in principle and related by kindred facts to the one before us is Sherman v. Harris, 36 S. D. 50, 153 N. W. 925, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 675, where Code sections exist identical with the two sections above cited. Our own statutes are construed, and the holding made is in accord with our conclusion here. The decision of the court of Idaho in the case of MacLeod v. Stelle, 43 Idaho, 64, 249 P. 254, related to an action arising out of fraud in the sale of mining stock, and therein it was held that the cause of action survived and was assignable. Likewise in the case of Horton v. Tyree, 102 W. Va. 475, 135 S. E. 597, an action for fraud and deceit, it was held that the action related to the property and not to the person and was assignable. See, also, Sullivan v. Curling, 149 Ga. 96, 99 S. E. 533, 5 A. L. R. 124. See, also, note to said cause, page 130; Harris v. Welch, 148 Wis. 441, 134 N. W. 1041; Metropolitan Ins. Co. v. Day, 119 Me. 380, 111 A. 429; Leavenworth & Son v. Hunter, 150 Miss. 245, 116 So. 593, 596; Porter v. Lane Cons. Corp., 212 App. Div. 528, 209 N. Y. S. 54. The converse of the situation here before us was before the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Ninth Circuit in the case of Houston v. Rosborough (C. C. A.) 295 F. 137, and it was there held that the death of the party committing the fraud and procuring by means thereof the conveyance to him by the plaintiff of certain of his property did not abate an action against his estate, citing Fox v. Hale & Norcross S. M. Co., 108 Cal. 478, 483, 41 P. 328.

This inquiry may be appropriately closed by a reference to the case of McCord v. Martin, supra, at pages 132, 133, of 34 Cal. App. (166 P. 1014). This was an action by an assignee of 25 persons, stockholders in a corporation known as the Lost Hills Mining Company, for damages sustained in making sales of their respective shares of stock on the false representation of a fellow stockholder as to the price reported by him to them that could be obtained for the stock and for fraud and deceit in connection with the transaction. The contention was made that the causes of action were not assignable. The court, in disposing of the contention, among other things, said: "We are unable to give our concurrence to the views of the trial court in sustaining the defendants' demurrers without leave to the plaintiffs to amend upon the ground that the causes of action set forth in the complaint were not assignable. It is true, as the respondents contend, that naked actions for fraud and deceit are not the subject of assignment under long and well-settled rules of equity. But the state of facts set forth in the plaintiffs' amended complaint and above recited does not present a case where the plaintiffs are seeking to recover upon assigned claims for damages for naked fraud and deceit involving no substantial right of property in plaintiffs' assignors. On the contrary, the facts, in our opinion, clearly show that the defendants, by means of their alleged fraudulent and deceitful acts and conduct, were enabled to come into possession of an amount of money representing the difference between eight dollars a share, which the respective stockholdings of plaintiffs' assignors in the Lost Hills Mining Company were really worth and for which they were actually sold, and the sum of five dollars per share, which was all that the plaintiffs' assignors received for their said stock by reason of the defendants' fraudulent and deceitful representations. This sum of money, amounting to the exact damages claimed in this action, was a sum of money which these defendants must be equitably held to have received and retained for the use and benefit of the plaintiffs' assignors, the right to recover which was a substantial part of their cause of action against said defendants. It is not disputed that the form of assignment to plaintiffs was sufficient to cover the entire equitable and property rights and claims of the plaintiffs' assignors in the premises, and was thus a transfer of much more than a mere naked right of action for fraud and deceit, since it included also the right to recover the respective sums of money which the defendants had received for the use and benefit of plaintiffs' assignors and to which in equity they were justly entitled. This being so we are entirely satisfied that these several causes of action were assignable under sections 953, 954, and 1044 of the Civil Code [citing cases]."

We do not regard either the case of Whitney v. Kelley, 94 Cal. 146, 29 P. 624, 15 L. R. A. 813, 28 Am. St. Rep. 106, or Emmons v. Barton, 109 Cal. 662, 42 P. 303, as setting forth any principle in necessary conflict with the views herein expressed; if so, they must give way to the later expressions of this court on the same subject.

The interesting question that, conceding the action does not ordinarily survive, under the powers conferred by section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure (added by St. 1927, p. 583), we may make contrary findings to those of the court below and direct a judgment nunc pro tunc and thus save abatement of the action, need not be considered.

The motion is denied.

FEATHER RIVER POWER CO. v. STATE BOARD OF EQUALIZATION et al.

(S. F. 13194.)

Supreme Court of California. Feb. 14, 1929.

1. Taxation 🔑40(1)—Liberal construction will be indulged to accomplish fair and equal taxation of all property in state.

It is the policy of the law that all property within the state should bear its fair and equal burden of taxation, and a liberal construction will be indulged to accomplish that end.

2. Taxation 🔑490—Decision of body authorized to render decisions, such as state board of equalization respecting classification of property for taxation, will not be set aside, unless it abused power or exceeded jurisdiction (Pol. Code, §§ 3664, 3664a, 3665a, 3665b, 3666; Const. art. 13, § 14).

Decision of body vested with power to render decisions, such as state board of equalization, authorized by Pol. Code, § 3666, to determine finally whether property is operative or nonoperative within sections 3664, 3664a, 3665a, 3665b, and Const. art. 13, § 14, as to state and local taxation, will not be set aside, unless it abused its power or exceeded its jurisdiction.

3. Taxation 🔑490—State board of equalization's decision that power company's hydroelectric properties were subject to local taxation as nonoperative held conclusive (Pol. Code, §§ 3664, 3664a, 3665a, 3665b, 3665c; Const. art. 13, § 14).

Decision of state board of equalization, classifying power company's hydroelectric properties as nonoperative on first Monday in March, as stated in report and tax return filed by company within time required by Pol. Code, § 3665c, and hence subject to assessment for local taxation as of such date, under section 3665b, rather than to gross receipts tax for state purposes, under sections 3664, 3664a, 3665a, and Const. art. 13, § 14, cannot be disturbed by court, where company did not file amended report and return until over two months afterward, nor clearly show particular day on which plant was completed; status of property being matter about which reasonable persons might entertain conflicting opinions.

4. Taxation 🔑485(1)—Burden was on power company, filing amended tax return, listing hydroelectric properties as operative, contrary to original return, to prove such fact (Pol. Code, §§ 3664, 3664a, 3665a, 3665b, 3665c; Const. art. 13, § 14).

Burden was on power company, filing with state board of equalization amended report and tax return, listing its hydroelectric properties as operative on first Monday in March, contrary to original report, filed over two months before under Pol. Code, § 3665c, to prove that such properties were operative on such date, and hence subject only to state gross receipts tax under sections 3664, 3664a, 3665a, and Const. art. 13, § 14, and exempt from local taxation under section 3665b.

5. Statutes 🔑245—Taxation laws are imperative.

Taxation laws are imperative in their requirements.

In Bank.

Application by the Feather River Power Company, a corporation, for a writ of mandate to the State Board of Equalization and the members thereof. Petition denied, and writ discharged.

Robert M. Searls, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank Guerena, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

SEAWELL, J. The hydroelectric properties of petitioner, organized as a public utility corporation, and particularly the Buck Creek plant, had been for three years immediately prior to the first Monday in March, 1928, in the course of construction and were nonoperative property, and therefore subject to assessment and taxation in Plumas county, their situs, for county purposes. Section

3665b et seq., Pol. Code. On or about March 14, 1928, petitioner, within ten days after the first Monday in March, as required by section 3665c of the Political Code, made its report and tax return to the state board of equalization, and furnished a duplicate of said report to the assessor of Plumas county covering so much of its property as was located in Plumas county. Said report and return was verified on March 13, 1928, and described its properties located in said county of Plumas in these words: "Plant in course of construction—See our letter of March 1st." The only portion of said letter which is at all relevant to the subject-matter reads: "This company is now engaged in the construction of a power plant, operation of which will be commenced shortly." By said report, as by its reports of former years, petitioner's properties were rated as being nonoperative. More than two months thereafter, petitioner, claiming that said report was made under a mistake of fact, and was erroneous, in that it reported said properties as being nonoperative, when in fact they were operative, caused the compilation and the listing of certain lands claimed to be operative and in use in the operation of said hydroelectric plant as distinguished from those which were nonoperative, and transmitted, on May 21, 1928, a copy of said lists and accompanying maps to the assessor of Plumas county. On June 8, 1928, petitioner filed with the state board of equalization an amended report and return, claiming that the properties therein described and which are involved in this proceeding, particularly the Buck Creek plant, were operative as of date March 5, 1928, and, therefore were not subject to assessment and taxation by said county of Plumas for county purposes, which tax computed on said properties as nonoperative amounted to approximately $7,000. The county assessor of Plumas county, in a communication to the state board of equalization dated June 20, 1928, refused to recognize said amended report and return on the ground that all of the properties of petitioner located in Plumas county had been placed upon the assessment rolls of that county in accordance with the verified report and return of petitioner made within the time provided by law, to wit, March 13, and that said proposed amended report was filed long after the time provided by law for the filing of said report and return. Other objections not necessary to be stated here were made by said assessor to said proposed amended report. By reason of the objections and protests of said assessor, petitioner appealed to said state board of equalization, and a hearing was had upon said amended report and return on June 26, 1928, and said board of equalization on June 30, 1928, found and decided "that all property of the Feather River Power Company be and the same is hereby declared to be classed as nonoperative as of the first Monday in March, 1928, and, therefore, subject to assessment for local taxation as of that date."

Petitioner thereupon applied to this court for a writ of mandamus to be directed against said board and commanding it to correct and amend its findings and decision by designating as operative property for the year 1928 all of the properties listed as operative in petitioner's said amended report and return filed approximately three months after the expiration of the period within which each corporation or company organized as a hydroelectric utility must file its report for the purposes of assessment and taxation.

Petitioner has presented for our consideration a record of the proceedings had and taken before the state board of equalization which consists of affidavits, records, and testimony of certain witnesses produced by it. All of the hydroelectric energy generated by petitioner on its Buck Creek plant was sold on contract direct to the Great Western Power Company, a public utility, and by it transmitted over its wires to its consumers throughout the northern part of the state. A table prepared by R. E. Ballew, the load dispatcher of the Great Western Power Company, showing the electric current in kilowatt hours purchased by and transmitted to the Great Western Power Company from petitioner's Buck Creek plant, which is a part of the properties of petitioner situate in Plumas county, is made a part of the record. By said table it appears that the first delivery of electric current by petitioner to the Great Western Power Company was made on March 4, 1928, and consisted of 53,000 kilowatt hours of electric current. The same table shows on March 5, 93,000 kilowatt hours; March 6, 173,000; March 7, 124,000. During certain days of said month the electric current ran as high as 358,000 kilowatt hours. On six days of said month, after operations are alleged to have begun, no electric current was furnished by said Buck Creek plant. The Buck Creek plant seems to be one of a group of two other plants and properties, to wit, Grizzly Creek and Milk Ranch Creek, which constitute the hydroelectric system of the Feather River Power Company in Plumas county. T. S. MacDonald, the superintendent of Buck Creek plant of said Feather River Power Company, by affidavit, averred that said power plant was physically and electrically connected with the electric transmission lines of the Great Western Power Company prior to March 5, 1928, and that on March 4, 1928—one day prior to the first Monday in March—said Buck Creek plant began operations and the delivery of electric current to said Great Western Power Company in kilowatt hours, as shown by the statement heretofore referred to. The assistant secretary, who prepared and verified the report and return within the time provided by law, appeared before the state board of equalization, and testified that she had not been informed that there had been any change in the status of the property from what it had been at the times she made the reports for the three previous years. She "presumed that the Great Western Company had their original contract and that they were not required to take any electricity until the plant was entirely completed, that is, not until the Milk Ranch Creek conduit had been finished." She further testified that she did not know the state of completion of the plant on the first Monday in March, and that "there was still construction going on at that time with regard to the Milk Ranch Creek conduit."

The secretary and treasurer of petitioning power company testified that on Sunday, March 4th, the power plant was started, and thereafter continuously operated in the generation of power for public use through the distribution system of the Great Western Power Company. He did state, however, that the Milk Ranch Creek conduit was but a little more than one-half completed on March 5th. As to the uncompleted state of the reservoirs the witness testified: "The reservoirs themselves were operative so far as actual use was concerned, that is, they were all operative because we were using them although they might not have been 100% complete. The portion of the dam that was not completed was then operative because so far as it was completed we were using it." The witness explained that the completion of the plant at an earlier day was delayed by winter storms. On March 3, 1928, a meeting was arranged between the representatives of the Great Western Power Company, which had contracted for all the power generated, and the Feather River Power Company, whereby the former company, which under its contract of 1925 was not obligated to accept power from the latter until it should entirely complete all of the various units in the construction of the whole property, agreed to accept power at once under an agreement and understanding that said Feather River Power Company was not to be relieved of the obligation to complete its plant as it had covenanted to do by its original contract. This agreement to accept power in advance of the completion of petitioner's plant was executed on Saturday afternoon, March 3d.

Said secretary and treasurer testified that he had not learned of the filing of the report by the assistant secretary until on or about May 10th or 15th, on which date he took the matter up and filed the amended report and tax return which culminated in the order made by the state board of equalization that all property of the petitioner be classified as nonoperative as of the first Monday in March. T. S. MacDonald, superintendent of operations for petitioner, testified that the long break in the supply of power in May, 1928, and the variation in the load beginning in early March was occasioned by minor repairs. He also testified that, so far as operative conditions were concerned, the plant could have produced its maximum output on the first Monday in March and that the Milk Ranch Cheek conduit had no direct relation to the plant except as a means of furnishing additional water, of which they then had sufficient.

If the properties of petitioner be classified as operative public utility properties, the tax shall be fixed upon the gross receipts from operation and shall be exclusively for state purposes. Sections 3664, 3664a, Pol. Code. If, on the other hand, they should be classified as nonoperative properties they would be subject to assessment and taxation for county, municipal and district purposes. Section 3665b, Pol. Code. As nonoperative properties, the tax thereon due and payable on the third Monday in October, 1928, would have amounted to approximately $7,000. If operative, no tax for county purposes would be collectible, inasmuch as the gross receipts from operation are defined to include all sums received from business done during the year ending the 31st day of December last preceding (section 3665a, Pol. Code), and said tax on gross receipts is in lieu of all other taxes and licenses, except county and municipal taxes on real estate. No state tax under article 13, § 14, of the state Constitution, could have been imposed as of 1928, for the reason that petitioner was not operating as a public utility at any time during the calendar year 1927.

[1] It is the policy of the law that all property within the state should bear its fair and equal burden of taxation, and a liberal construction will be indulged to accomplish that end.

[2-4] Section 3666 of the Political Code provides that, in case of an issue raised as to whether certain property is operative or nonoperative, the state board of equalization shall fix a time for the hearing and determination of said issue, and shall, "from the evidence presented and from the best information it can obtain," determine whether said property is operative or nonoperative. "Said decision shall be binding upon all parties * * * unless set aside by a court of competent jurisdiction. * * *"

From the above Code section it will be seen that the state board is given wide latitude in the matter of investigation as well as being vested with finality of decision subject to being set aside by a court of competent jurisdiction. The decision of a body vested with the power to render decisions will not, however, be set aside, unless it appears that said body has abused the power reposed in it or has exceeded its jurisdiction. It cannot be said that either a misuse of power or an excess or want of jurisdiction has been shown to exist in the determination of the proceeding herein reviewed.

That the petitioner did not comply with the taxation and revenue laws of the state is admitted. The state and the county assessor of Plumas county were certainly thrown off their guard by petitioner's report and tax return as far as making a satisfactory investigation on the vital day, to wit, the first Monday in March, as to whether or not petitioner's properties were in such a state of completion as to be classified as operative. Two months or more passed, during which period there had been much activity on the part of petitioner in preparing to show that a condition existed on the first Monday in March, 1928, contrary to that which was described in its sworn statement made some two months prior thereto. We have no intention of suggesting that the witnesses who testified in behalf of petitioner willfully or at all misstated the facts as they saw them, but manifestly the state and county were, by petitioner's fault and neglect to act within the time prescribed by law—assuming its report to have misstated the actual condition—deprived of an opportunity of making a timely investigation and presenting their case in the full strength they would have been able to do had they not been lulled into a state of repose by the sworn statement and tax return filed by petitioner. The true situation is not made entirely satisfactory by the record prepared by petitioner. That there was a question existing as to the particular day on which the plant was completed is shown by the evidence adduced by petitioner. Whether the properties were operative on said particular day involved the exercise of judgment on the part of state board of equalization to be formed "from the evidence presented and from the best information" that the board could obtain. The burden of proof was upon petitioner. The judgment of the state board should not be set aside, unless it clearly appears that it exceeded its powers or acted arbitrarily in reaching its conclusion. The status of petitioner's properties was a matter about which reasonable persons might entertain conflicting opinions. In such a case the judgment of the board cannot be disturbed.

[5] The revenue laws make no provision authorizing the filing of an amended report such as was offered by petitioner. Taxation laws are imperative in their requirements. If, however, such a procedure is to be countenanced in the interest of justice, the person or corporation invoking the same and who will profit thereby should, as a matter of policy, be required to support its position with clear and convincing proofs. The state board of equalization, upon a consideration of all the evidence before it and from information obtainable by it, having made its order that petitioner's properties be classified as "non-operative as of the first Monday in March, 1928, and, therefore, subject to assessment for local taxation of that date," and it not appearing that it exceeded its powers or acted contrary to law in so doing, the petition is hereby denied, and the writ is discharged.

It is so ordered.

LEAL v. LEAL. (Sac. 4080.)

Supreme Court of California. Feb. 15, 1929.

1. Divorce ⚷301—In divorce action, court properly excluded testimony as to conduct of disreputable house in another city by mother's cousin, on issue of mother's fitness to have custody of child.

In action for divorce, in which fitness of mother to have custody of minor child was contested, court properly excluded testimony to the effect that cousin of mother and his wife were engaged in business of conducting a disorderly house in another place, where it did not appear that the child would come in contact with cousin, or that mother frequented the house.

2. Divorce ⚷312—Defendant in divorce action could not, on appeal, produce further evidence of plaintiff's unfitness to retain child, without showing that justice required supplementing record (Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583; Rules of Supreme Court, rule 38).

Defendant, on appeal from interlocutory decree in divorce suit, awarding custody of minor child, held not entitled, under Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583, and Rules of Supreme Court, rule 38, to produce additional evidence with reference to character and fitness of plaintiff to have child's custody, where no showing was made that justice required supplementing of record.

3. Divorce ⚷312—Party appealing from interlocutory divorce decree has no right to trial de novo (Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583; Supreme Court Rule 38).

Party appealing from interlocutory decree in divorce suit does not, under Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583, and Supreme Court Rule 38, have right to trial de novo.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; Eugene P. McDaniel, Judge.

Action by Ruth V. Leal against Edward L. Leal for divorce. From an interlocutory decree, granting plaintiff custody of a minor son, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Ray Manwell, of Marysville, F. W. Sawyer and Sawyer & Sawyer, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

E. S. Norby and Warren Steel, both of Marysville, for respondent.

SHENK, J. In this action for divorce, the plaintiff was granted an interlocutory decree on the ground of extreme cruelty. She was also awarded the custody of a minor son, born in August, 1923, with the right of the defendant to visit the child at all reasonable times, and to have the custody of said child for a period of one month each year. The plaintiff was granted an allowance of $40 per month for the maintenance, support, and education of the child. The community property of the spouses was also set apart to her. The defendant appeals from the interlocutory decree.

It is urged as grounds for reversal that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings, and that the court erred in its rulings as to the admissibility of certain evidence. The record is presented under the so-called alternative method. Before the cause was placed on the calendar, the defendant had not complied with the requirements of section 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure and rule 8 governing the practice and procedure in this court. When the cause was called for submission, permission was granted to the defendant to supply the deficiency by the filing of a supplement to his opening brief.

[1] It is conceded by the defendant that the evidence was in conflict. From an examination of the record it appears that there is sufficient corroboration of the testimony of the plaintiff to entitle her to a divorce. Likewise from the record it cannot be said that the court abused its discretion in awarding the custody of the minor child to the plaintiff. The contention of the defendant in this regard is that the plaintiff was shown to be an unfit and improper person to have the custody of her offspring. In this connection the defendant attempted to prove that the plaintiff was guilty of improper conduct with her cousin, one Howard Wilson, and that another cousin of the plaintiff and the wife of the latter cousin were engaged in the business of conducting a disreputable house in the city of Sacramento. The court went fully into the question of the alleged conduct of the plaintiff with her cousin Wilson, but excluded the testimony with reference to the character of the business of the other cousin, and we think rightly so. At the time of the trial the plaintiff was living at Challenge, in Yuba county. It was not shown, nor was it attempted to be shown, that the child was caused to be in association with the cousin whose business was sought to be questioned, or with his wife, or that the plaintiff was a frequenter of said alleged disreputable place of business. No other alleged errors are worthy of mention.

[2, 3] A month or thereabouts after this cause was called for submission, the defendant filed an application for leave to produce further evidence in this court with reference to the character and fitness of the plaintiff to have the custody of the minor child. The application is made because of the provisions of section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure (added by St. 1927, p. 583), and of rule 38 of this court adopted in pursuance thereof. It is apparently the contention of the defendant that, under the powers now vested in this court on appeal, the cause may be tried de novo on the application of a party as matter of right. But such is not the case. The power granted to the court is to authorize the taking of additional evidence when, in the discretion of the court and in the interest of justice, the record presented should be supplemented. Necessarily a proper showing must be made by the applicant, and no sufficient showing is presented.

The application to present further evidence is denied, and the judgment is affirmed.

CHICO WELL DRILLING CO. v. GIVENS et al. (Sac. 4132.)

Supreme Court of California. Feb. 13, 1929.

1. Evidence ⚷571(1) — On question as to whether well was drilled, so as to install turbine pump, it was court's duty to consider testimony of all expert witnesses qualifying.

Question whether well was drilled by plaintiff straight and plumb enough to permit installation of a deep-well turbine pump, as required by contract, being one to be determined by expert witnesses, it was trial court's duty to consider testimony of all witnesses who qualified as experts in subject.

2. Appeal and error ⚷1011(1)—Trial court's finding on conflicting expert testimony will not be disturbed on appeal.

Finding of trial court on conflicting expert testimony will not be set aside or disturbed by appellate court.

3. Contracts ⚷198(6)—That written contract for drilling well did not mention perforation of casing held immaterial, where perforation was necessary part of drilling.

Where practically undisputed evidence was that perforation of casing of well is considered to be an integral and necessary part of its drilling, fact that written contract for drilling of well did not mention perforation held not to affect defendants' rights in respect thereto.

4. Contracts ⚷322(3)—Evidence held to warrant finding plaintiff abandoned drilling of well before completion thereof, precluding recovery.

In action for amount due plaintiff for drilling of well on defendants' land and foreclose lien for cost of said well, evidence held to warrant finding that plaintiff never completed the well, but abandoned completion thereof before casing was adequately perforated, precluding recovery.

5. Work and labor 🔑14(3)—Driller having failed to complete well, which could not be used and was of no value, held not entitled to recover reasonable value of services.

Where plaintiff never completed drilling of well, but abandoned it without adequate perforation of casing, and trial court found that well drilled could not be used and was of no value, plaintiff was not entitled to recover for reasonable value of its services.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Glenn County; Claude F. Purkitt, Judge.

Action by the Chico Well Drilling Company against Samuel Givens and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Jerome D. Peters, of Chico, for appellant.

H. C. Bell, of Willows, for respondents.

CURTIS, J. Action brought to recover an amount alleged to be due the plaintiff for the drilling of a well upon defendants' land and to foreclose a lien against said land for the cost of said well. The complaint is in two counts, one upon an express contract, and the other is for the reasonable value of services rendered defendants in the drilling of said well. The trial court found for the defendants, and plaintiff has appealed. The sole ground of appeal is that the evidence does not support the judgment. There is no dispute between the parties hereto as to their agreement. It was in writing and bore date March 20, 1924, and provided for the drilling of said well for a stipulated price per foot. The two findings of the court which plaintiff claims do not find substantial support in the evidence are findings 3 and 4, which are as follows:

Finding 3: "That thereafter plaintiff went in and upon the lands of said defendant, Samuel Givens, and partially drilled a well thereon, but did not drill same straight or plumb enough to permit the installation of a deep well turbine pump therein, as required by said contract. That in drilling said well plaintiff excavated large quantities of gravel from the lower levels of said well which resulted in the earth above such excavations caving in and around the casing in said well, and that such excavations and caving were due to the negligence of said plaintiff. That said plaintiff placed casing in said well, but did not install and perforate the same so that the water contained in the ground surrounding said casing could flow into said well. That said plaintiff never completed said well, but removed its drilling tools and outfit from the land of defendant, Samuel Givens, and abandoned the completion of same."

Finding 4: "That by reason of the failure of said plaintiff to drill and case said well in accordance with the requirements and terms of said contract, said well could not be used and was of no value to defendant, who was compelled to drill another well to supply water to his land, and that said plaintiff is not entitled to recover any payment therefor from said defendants, or any of them."

[1, 2] The written contract was executed immediately preceding the acts of the plaintiff which are set forth in said findings 3 and 4. The contract provided, among other things, that, "Above well to be drilled straight and plumb enough to permit the installation of a deep well turbine pump." As to whether the well drilled by the plaintiff complied witn this provision of the contract the evidence presents a sharp conflict. This is admitted to be so by the plaintiff, but it claims that all of the experts called by the defendants, and who testified that a deep well, or turbine pump, could not be installed in the well drilled by the plaintiff with satisfactory results, also stated that they had never observed a deep-well pump installed in a well not plumb, while plaintiff's witnesses, who testified that a turbine pump would work satisfactorily in a well not plumb, all testified from their own personal observations. Plaintiff contends that under these circumstances the testimony of defendants' witnesses was valueless and should have been rejected by the trial court, and that this court cannot give to it any consideration. Plaintiff concedes that the question whether a deep-well pump would work satisfactorily in a slanting well, or a well not plumb, was one to be determined by expert testimony. All of the witnesses testifying upon this question, either for the plaintiff or the defendants, qualified as expert witnesses in their knowledge of the use, operation, and installation of deep-well pumps. The trial court may well have rejected the evidence of those who had no personal experience in the operation of deep-well pumps in slanting wells. But we know of no authority compelling the trial court to refuse to consider such evidence. On the other hand, the question being one to be determined by expert witnesses, it was the duty of the trial court to give consideration to the testimony of all witnesses who qualified themselves as expert witnesses in the subject under investigation. In the present action, the trial court having accepted the evidence of the defendants' witnesses upon the question as to whether a turbine pump could be used in the well drilled by the plaintiff, its finding upon that question will not be set aside or disturbed by this court.

The next objection made by plaintiff to finding 3 relates to that portion thereof wherein the court found that the plaintiff in drilling said well excavated large quantities of gravel from the lower levels of said well, which resulted in the earth above such excavations coming in and around the casing of the well, and that such excavations and caving were due to the negligence of said plaintiff. But slight consideration need be given this objection, as plaintiff admits that "said finding its redundant and may be treated as surplusage." We do not attach any great importance to this finding. We think, however, there is found substantial evidence in the record to support it. There is evidence to show that much more sand ordinarily flows or caves into a slanting well than does in the drilling of a well that is straight or plumb. The amount of sand taken by the plaintiff out of the well drilled for the defendants was placed by some of the witnesses as high as 40 cubic yards. A number of witnesses testified that this amount was excessive in the drilling of a 12-inch well to a depth of 214 feet.

[3, 4] The remaining objection made by plaintiff to said finding 3 has to do with that part of said finding wherein the court found that said plaintiff never completed said well, but removed its tools and abandoned the completion of the same. There is evidence which shows that after the well was drilled it was not adequately perforated. Plaintiff claims that the contract for the drilling of the well did not mention anything about perforation. In this plaintiff is correct, but practically the undisputed evidence in the case is that the perforation of a well is considered as an integral and necessary party of its drilling. The plaintiff apparently conceded this to be so, as its foreman testified that after the drilling was completed he perforated the well under the direction of one of the partners of the Chico Well Drilling Company. But there was further evidence that this perforation was not adequate, and defendants, after notifying the plaintiff to complete the well by perforating it, employed another well driller, who, after attempting to make a proper perforation of the pipe in the well, advised the defendants that it was impracticable, and that it would be cheaper to drill a new well. This was done at a depth of 50 feet and in the same pit in which the first well was drilled and only about 7 feet distant from the first well. In the second well a satisfactory supply of water was obtained. The first well was found to be worthless and was abandoned. This disposes of all the objections made to finding 3, and we think it answers the objection to finding 4. In this latter finding the court found that the well drilled by the plaintiff was of no value and could not be used by defendants. The evidence of R. Parkerson, the well driller employed by defendants to perforate the well after the plaintiff had removed the rig and tools from the scene of the well, sufficiently covers the main facts found by the court in finding 4.

[5] As we have seen, plaintiff also sought to recover for the value of its services in drilling the well, even if its work did not show a compliance with the terms of the written contract between the parties. Neither the evidence nor the findings would justify any recovery by plaintiff on its second cause of action. By finding 4, as we have just stated, the court found that the well drilled by the plaintiff could not be used and was of no value to the defendant. This being so, the plaintiff has not shown that it is entitled to recover anything whatever for the value of its services rendered defendants.

Judgment affirmed.

CITY OF LONG BEACH v. STEN et al.

Eminent domain 🔑265(5)—Court properly disallowed attorney's fees to attorney defending in own behalf condemnation proceeding subsequently abandoned (Code Civ. Proc. § 1255a).

Where city passed ordinance abandoning condemnation proceedings after interlocutory judgment for property owners and duly obtained judgment and order dismissing action against property owners, court properly disallowed costs claimed by another defendant who defended action in propria persona, he being an attorney at law, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. § 1255a, providing for attorney's fees on abandonment of condemnation proceedings.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. C. Needham, Judge.

Condemnation proceedings by the City of Long Beach against William Ellis Lady and others. The proceedings were abandoned and on allowance of the city's motion to retax costs, the named defendant's claim to attorney's fees was disallowed, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Superseding former opinion in 272 P. 1088.

William Ellis Lady, of Los Angeles, in pro. per.

William Ellis Lady, of Los Angeles, for defendant Theodore J. Sten.

Frank Karr, R. C. Gortner, E. E. Morris, and C. W. Cornell, all of Los Angeles, for defendants Pacific Electric Railway, Union Trust Co. of San Francisco and United States Mortgage & Trust Co.

Bruce Mason, Geo. W. Trammell, Jr., Fred F. White, John K. Hull, and Nowland M. Reid, all of Long Beach, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment denying to defendant, William Ellis Lady, attorney's fees in a condemnation proceeding against his own property, which proceeding had been defended by him in propria persona.

The plaintiff filed this action in 1923 in the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles to condemn certain property in the city of Long Beach, jointly owned by the defendants Sten and Lady. The latter is an attorney at law and appeared and defended on behalf of his co-owner and for himself, personally. An interlocutory judgment in the sum of $19,620 was obtained in their favor, and subsequent to the entry of judgment the plaintiff city passed an ordinance abandoning the condemnation proceedings and duly obtained a judgment and order dismissing the action against defendants. The appellant Lady, on behalf of himself and Sten, filed separate cost bills, claiming, among other items, $1,500 as attorney's fees under section 1255a of the Code of Civil Procedure. Plaintiff moved to retax the costs claimed as attorney's fees, and also moved to retax and disallow the costs claimed by Lady as attorney's fees, on the ground that the latter was an attorney at law and had appeared and defended in his own behalf. The court granted the motion to retax, fixing the amount of the attorney's fee for Sten at $375, and disallowing the attorney's fees as claimed by the defendant Lady.

Section 1255a of the Code of Civil Procedure, relating to the abandonment of condemnation proceedings, provides, in part, as follows: "Upon such abandonment, express or implied, on motion of defendant, a judgment shall be entered dismissing the proceeding and awarding the defendant his costs and disbursements, which shall include all necessary expenses incurred in preparing for trial and reasonable attorney's fees." It is contended by appellant that, the foregoing section having specifically provided for the allowance of costs and reasonable attorney's fees in connection with the abandonment and dismissal of a cause of action by the party initiating it, the mere fact that an attorney happens to be the owner of the property sought to be taken and defends for himself in his professional capacity should not deprive him of just compensation for the time and legal services rendered. The position of appellant is supported by the English cases and by cases in some jurisdictions in this country. However, regardless of which rule may be the more desirable one, there are authorities in this state which we think are so closely analogous to the problem presented in the instant case as to have established a precedent which requires an affirmance of the judgment of the trial court.

In City of Long Beach v. O'Donnell (Cal. App.) 267 P. 585, attorneys were engaged to defend a condemnation proceeding, on a contingent fee to be effective if the property was taken by the city. The proceedings were abandoned later, and it was held defendant could not recover the reasonable value of attorney's services because he had paid no fee nor incurred any liability to pay one. The earlier case of Patterson v. Donner, 48 Cal. 369, is also pertinent. In that case a mortgage provided for the payment of attorney's fees if foreclosure became necessary. The plaintiff in the foreclosure suit was an attorney and his law firm acted as his attorney in the foreclosure proceeding. No recovery for attorney's fees was allowed.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

CORY v. SMITH et al. (Sac. 4006.)

Supreme Court of California. Feb. 15, 1929.

1. Waters and water courses ⊂⇒33—Judgment, granting water rights to lower riparian owner because of appropriation prior to patent of upper riparian land, held error without finding appropriation was on public domain.

In action between upper and lower riparian owners to determine water rights, judgment for lower riparian owner, based on appropriation of water by predecessor before upper riparian land was patented by United States government, held erroneous, where court did not find that the diversion of water by predecessor of lower riparian owner was on land which then constituted part of public domain of federal government.

2. Waters and water courses ⊂⇒21—Appropriator of water on private land acquires no rights against subsequent purchaser from government of land above diversion.

Diversion or appropriation of water on land held in other ownership than that of United States government gives appropriator no rights as against subsequent purchaser from United States of riparian land situated on stream above point of diversion.

3. Waters and water courses ⊂⇒33—Finding, that plaintiff's predecessor legally appropriated water, involved conclusion not obviating necessity of finding appropriation on public land to sustain priority.

In action to determine water rights, declaration in findings, that predecessor in interest of plaintiff legally appropriated water and used same under honest right to claim same since certain year, involved conclusions of law, and did not obviate necessity of finding public character of land on which diversion was made to sustain priority over owner under subsequent patent from government.

4. Waters and water courses ⚿138—Lower riparian owners, appropriating water on private land, could acquire no rights against upper riparian owner by diversion, however long.

Lower riparian owners, appropriating water on privately owned land, could acquire no rights against an upper riparian owner by diversion and user for period required to give title by prescription, or for any period, however long.

5. Waters and water courses ⚿138—Upper riparian proprietor cannot complain of use of water after it passes his land.

Upper riparian proprietor has no cause for complaint or redress concerning use of water after it has passed his land.

6. Waters and water courses ⚿33—Finding, that diversion of water by plaintiff's predecessor was on public land, could not be made under complaint and evidence.

Where complaint, by lower riparian owner to restrain upper riparian owner from diverting water of creek, did not allege that appropriation of water by plaintiff's predecessor in interest was on public lands, and did not describe point of diversion, but only described lands to which water was conveyed for use by ditch alleged to be owned by plaintiff, but not alleging that such land was public lands at time of appropriation by predecessor in interest, and no proof was introduced to show public character of land at point of appropriation, court would not be warranted in making finding that appropriation by plaintiff's predecessor was on public lands.

7. Waters and water courses ⚿33—Lower riparian owner had burden of proving land on which predecessor appropriated water was public land to restrain diversion by upper riparian owner.

In action, by lower riparian owner against upper riparian owner, to restrain diversion of water of creek, burden of proving, that land on which plaintiff's predecessor in interest diverted water was part of public demand necessary to sustain plaintiff's title, held on plaintiff.

8. Stipulations ⚿14(1)—Oral stipulation, that plaintiff's title to land was deraigned through patents commencing in 1876, did not establish public ownership of land in 1869, when plaintiff's predecessor appropriated water claimed by plaintiff.

In action by lower riparian owner to restrain diversion of water by upper riparian owner, based on claim that lower owner's predecessor in interest appropriated water before patent of upper riparian land to defendants, oral stipulation, that plaintiff's title was deraigned through patents of 1876, 1877, and 1883, did not establish public ownership of lands, at time of appropriation by predecessor in interest, found to have been made in 1869 or 1870.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by Alice G. Cory against John P. Smith and another, in which defendants filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

James M. Allen, of Yreka, for appellants.

B. K. Collier, of Yreka, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J. This action involves a contest between lower and upper riparian owners over the waters of Miner creek, a small stream in Siskiyou county. Defendants and cross-complainants, John P. Smith and Frank Smith, upper riparian proprietors, appeal from a judgment decreeing that plaintiff, Alice G. Cory, is the owner of 50 inches of the water in said Miner creek measured under a 4-inch pressure, and that this right is superior to the interest of defendants, and enjoining and restraining defendants from diverting any of the waters of Miner creek or its tributaries, when there is less than 50 inches measured under a 4-inch pressure flowing to and upon the lands of plaintiff.

[1-3] The judgment of the court below was based on a finding that plaintiff, the lower owner, had a superior right to 50 inches of the water of said stream by reason of an appropriation of such a quantity by plaintiff's predecessor in interest in 1869 or 1870. The court further found that the upper riparian land owned by defendants was patented to their predecessor in interest by the United States government in 1889, which was subsequent to the date the appropriation of water was found to have been made by plaintiff's predecessor in interest on the lower lands. The court did not find, however, that the diversion by plaintiff's predecessor in 1869 or 1870 was upon land which then constituted a part of the public domain of the federal government. The absence of such a finding is fatal to the affirmance of the judgment. A diversion or appropriation of water upon land held in other ownership than that of the United States government gives the appropriator no rights as against a subsequent purchaser from the United States government of riparian land situated upon the stream above the point of diversion. Cave v. Tyler, 133 Cal. 566, 65 P. 1089; Holmes v. Nay, 186 Cal. 231, 199 P. 325; The San Joaquin & Kings River Canal & Irrigation Co., Inc., v. Worswick, 187 Cal. 674, 203 P. 999. The declarations in the findings, that the predecessors in interest of plaintiff "legally" appropriated said water in 1869 or 1870 and have used said waters "under an honest right to claim same and of right so to do ever since the year 1869 or 1870," involve conclusions of law, and do not obviate the necessity of a finding as to the public character of the land upon which the diversion was made.

[6, 7] While in certain cases this court will correct or supply findings with a view to rendering the findings sufficient to support a judgment entered in the lower court, the condition of the pleadings and evidence in the instant case is such that we would not be warranted in making a finding to the effect that the diversion by plaintiff's predecessor in interest was upon public land. The complaint fails to state facts showing a right in plaintiff to 50 inches of the waters of Miner creek by virtue of an appropriation in 1869 or 1870, for the reason that it is not alleged that the diversion was made upon public lands. In fact the point of diversion is not described in the complaint. The only lands described therein are the lands to which the water was conveyed for use by the ditch alleged to be owned by plaintiff, and said lands are not alleged to have been public lands at the time the appropriation was made in 1869 or 1870, or at any time. It appears from the evidence, including the maps introduced as exhibits, that the point of diversion from Miner creek was not located upon the lands of plaintiff and her predecessors in interest, but upon other lands to the south thereof, from which the water was carried by the Miner creek ditch to plaintiff's lands. The location of the point of diversion was not definitely fixed by the evidence, and no proof whatever was introduced to show the public character of the land at said point of diversion. The burden of offering such proof was upon plaintiff. Cave v. Tyler, supra.

[8] The oral stipulation made at the opening of the trial, as to plaintiff's title having been deraigned through patents of 1876, 1877, and 1883, related to the lands owned by plaintiff and her predecessors, not to the lands south thereof upon which the point of diversion was located. However, we do not regard said stipulation as satisfactorily establishing the public ownership even of plaintiff's said lands at the time of the appropriation, found by the court to have been made in 1869 or 1870, and there is no other evidence in the record on this point. The "patents" referred to in said stipulation may have been railroad patents, as was the patent through which defendants claimed title to a portion of their lands. Even if plaintiff's lands were patented to plaintiff's predecessor in interest in 1876, 1877, and 1883 by the federal government, and were at the dates of the issuance of said patents in the ownership of the federal government, it was not shown that they were so owned on the earlier date when the appropriation was found to have been made.

BATE v. JOLIN et al. (L. A. 8673.)

Supreme Court of California. Feb. 15, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⚿1046(5)—Trial judge's conduct in making sarcastic comments during trial and in denouncing defendants held not as matter of law to deny fair trial.

Conduct of trial judge, sitting without a jury, in making sarcastic comments and questions addressed to defendants when testifying, plainly showing that he entirely discredited their testimony, and when evidence was all in and cause submitted in denouncing defendants personally and ridiculing their testimony, though unjustifiable and shocking to sense of propriety, held not as a matter of law to deprive defendants of a fair trial, where he ruled fairly and impartially on admission of evidence offered.

2. Appeal and error ⚿295—Objection that damages are excessive cannot be raised for first time on appeal.

Objection that damages awarded by trial court sitting without a jury are excessive cannot be raised for first time on appeal, but must be presented to the lower court on motion for new trial.

3. Assault and battery ⚿40—False imprisonment ⚿36—$2,515 damages for assault and battery and false imprisonment committed by police officers held not so excessive as to raise presumption of passion and prejudice.

In action for damages against police officers for assault and battery and false imprisonment, in which trial court found that defendants, without provocation, assaulted, violently choked, kicked, struck, and beat plaintiff, and struck him about the head, temple, and eyes with a blackjack, and unlawfully placed him under arrest, judgment awarding plaintiff $2,515 as damages held not so grossly disproportionate to compensation reasonably warranted by facts as to shock sense of justice and raise presumption that it was result of passion and prejudice, though it was for total sum prayed for by plaintiff.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by James H. Bate against William J. Jolin and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., and Chas. B. MacCoy and Jerrell Babb, Deputy City Attys., all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Kemp, Mitchell, Silberberg & Davis and Pierce Works, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. The defendants, five police officers of the city of Los Angeles, appeal from a judgment against them, rendered by the court sitting without a jury, in an action for alleged assault and battery and false imprisonment. The lower court found that the defendants, without cause or provocation, wrongfully and unlawfully, and with great force and violence, set upon and assaulted plaintiff, and violently choked, kicked, struck, and beat plaintiff and struck him about the head, temple, and eyes with a blackjack, and unlawfully placed him under arrest, all to his damage in the sum of $2,515. Judgment for that amount was entered in plaintiff's favor and against all the defendants.

On this appeal three contentions are urged: First, that the evidence is insufficient to justify the findings and decision of the court; second, that excessive damages appear to have been allowed under the influence of passion and prejudice; and, third, irregularities in the proceedings of the court occurring during the trial, which, appellants contend, show such an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court as to prevent the defendants from having had a fair and impartial trial. The third and last specification of error is addressed to the alleged "personal misconduct on the part of the judge during the trial."

At the time of the assault, which was committed when the five police officers arrested the plaintiff, the latter was a regularly employed janitor at the Los Angeles county courthouse, and a deputy sheriff, under due appointment. He had on his person a regularly numbered deputy sheriff's badge and another similar badge presented by the board of supervisors of the county in appreciation of faithful service. He was on his way home, at 11 o'clock at night, after attending a meeting of a lodge of which he was a member. The record contains an abundance of evidence from which it appears, as was held by the trial court, that "an unwarranted, inexcusable and cowardly" assault was committed on him. The defendants were at the time part of a large detail of the Los Angeles police department known as "crime crushers," specially assigned, during the prevalence of a "crime wave," for duty in plain clothes for the purpose, among other things, of picking up all suspicious characters on the streets at night. Two of the defendants accosted the plaintiff, who, because of their lack of uniforms and badges, supposed they were robbers or highwaymen, and attempted to get away from them. No warrant had been issued for the arrest of the plaintiff, but he was seized and beaten by the five policemen—three having joined the two who first accosted him—forced into an automobile, and taken to the police station, where he was quickly identified by other police officers and allowed to go home. The marks and bruises on his head and face caused by the beating were plainly visible at the time.

The defendants sought by their testimony to place all blame for the assault on the plaintiff by testifying that he resisted being arrested after they had shown him their police badges and had told him who they were. There is a direct conflict in the evidence as to what actually took place. The testimony of the plaintiff is corroborated by the testimony of disinterested bystanders, who were drawn to the spot by the hysterical shouts of the plaintiff, who called loudly for "help."

[1] A careful study of the record discloses a situation in which, while the trial judge during the whole trial was very skeptical of the story of the occurrence as told by the different defendants, he ruled fairly and impartially on the admission and nonadmission of the evidence offered. The record is replete, as charged by the appellants, with sarcastic comments and questions, sometimes bordering on the ridiculous, addressed by the judge to the defendants when testifying, which plainly show that he entirely discredited their testimony. Various remarks addressed to counsel tend the same way. Any doubt in the matter was dispelled by the language of the judge in announcing the judgment of the court when the evidence was all in and the cause submitted. He denounced the defendants personally and ridiculed their testimony. His remarks, as reported, are a vitriolic mixture of correct statements of law relating to arrests and personal abuse of the defendants. Delivered, as they were, by one clothed with and protected by judicial position and authority, they shock the sense of propriety of the members of this court, as they would the sense of fitness of any appellate tribunal called to sit in judgment on this appeal.

While it was to be expected that on appeal complaint would be made of the action of the trial judge, we cannot, as matter of law, say that the defendants were not given a fair trial. It was the duty of the judge of the court below to determine and pass upon the credibility of the parties and other witnesses who testified in the case. The fact that the judge seems to have concluded very early in the case that the defendants were not, in his opinion, telling the truth, and to have so intimated in the unusual manner referred to, does not appear to have influenced the trial of the cause in any other particulars. The issues were fairly presented and well met. There is much evidence in the record to support the findings, and it was believed by the trial court. As already indicated, we may judge from the transcript that all the evidence the parties had, or at least that they deemed necessary to introduce, was presented in due and orderly fashion. The so-called irregularities in the proceedings of the court during the trial do not appear to have prevented a fair and impartial trial.

[2, 3] There remains, therefore, as the final question, whether or not excessive damages were allowed to the plaintiff as the result of passion and prejudice engendered in the mind of the trial judge against the defendants. We deem it unnecessary to consider under what circumstances an officer of the law may arrest a citizen without a warrant. For such a discussion see People v. Kilvington, 104 Cal. 86, 92, 93, 37 P. 799 (43 Am. St. Rep. 73); Michel v. Smith, 188 Cal. 199, 205, 206, 205 P. 113; People v. Gays, 54 Cal. App. 460, 462, 202 P. 43; Murphy v. Murray, 74 Cal. App. 726, 241 P. 938; 3 Cal. Jur. 120, § 6. The point that damages are excessive cannot be raised for the first time on appeal, but must be presented to the lower court on the motion for a new trial. Mohn v. Tingley, 191 Cal. 470, 492, 217 P. 733. While in this case notice of intention to move for a new trial, on the grounds here urged on appeal, was given, there is no record that the motion was ever made. Notwithstanding that fact, while plaintiff was given judgment for the total sum prayed for, the amount of the recovery is not, of itself, so grossly disproportionate to any compensation reasonably warranted by the facts found to be true as to shock the sense of justice and raise at once a presumption that it is the result of passion and prejudice rather than honest and sober judgment. 8 Cal. Jur. 834, § 88.

Despite the unjustifiable conduct of the trial court, we cannot say, in view of the evidence of the severe beating that the plaintiff received, that there was an abuse of the legal discretion lodged in the lower court.

The judgment is affirmed.

1. Appeal and error ⟹1010(1)—Trial court's finding, supported by evidence, that documents, pictures, etc., relied on, were not genuine, is binding on Supreme Court.

Trial court's finding, supported by evidence in record, that documents, pictures, etc., relied on to establish relationship to decedent of one petitioning for recovery of money distributed to state, were not genuine, and that petitioner was not an heir of decedent, is binding on the Supreme Court.

2. Appeal and error ⟹170(2), 203(3)—Petitioner, not attacking constitutionality of act nor qualification of expert witness called thereunder, waived all objections, though she was incompetent represented by guardian (Code Civ. Proc. § 1871, as added by St. 1925, p. 305).

Petitioner, not interposing objection in trial court that Code Civ. Proc. § 1871, as added by St. 1925, p. 305, providing for calling of expert witnesses by court, is unconstitutional, nor that witness, called to give expert opinion on certain questioned documents, was not qualified, waived all objections to such action, though she was an incompetent, appearing by guardian.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Harry A. Hastings, deceased. On a petition by Lucretia Lowhone for recovery of money distributed to the State of California. From a judgment denying the petition, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

Robert W. Jennings and W. Le Roy Brown, both of San Francisco (C. H. Sooy, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

U. S. Webb, of San Francisco, and Thomas H. Christiansen, of Sacramento, for the State.

LANGDON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court in and for the county of Sacramento, denying appellant's petition for the recovery of money distributed to the state of California in the matter of the estate of Harry A. Hastings, deceased. In a trial extending over many days, appellant sought to establish her heirship as a cousin of the deceased, who had died in San Francisco, Cal., in 1918, intestate and unmarried. The estate was administered by the public administrator, and, as no one appeared as heir at law or next of kin, the proceeds were distributed to the state of California.

The record is voluminous, and we shall not discuss it at great length. Petitioner's case falls, logically, into two parts:

[1] First, her proof of the existence of and her relationship to a boy named Harry Hastings, whom she last saw about 30 years ago in Illinois. Conceding that this portion of the case is established without conflict, it is unavailing without the establishment of the controlling fact that this boy and the decedent are one and the same person. Upon that latter point, while there are some circumstances lending color to petitioner's claim, the documents, pictures, etc., which were relied upon by her to establish the connection between herself and decedent developed into the storm center of the case. The record contains many hundreds of pages regarding their authenticity, and the trial court, sitting as a jury, has found against their genuineness and against the claim of petitioner that she was an heir of deceased. That finding is binding upon this court for there is evidence in the record to support it.

[2] The appellant also contends that section 1871, Code of Civil Procedure, as added by St. 1925, p. 305, providing for the calling, by the court, of expert witnesses, is unconstitutional. This point is raised because the trial court called a disinterested witness to give his expert opinion upon certain questioned documents offered in the case. The power of the court to appoint an alienist in a homicide case under this section of the Code of Civil Procedure, was approved by this court in People v. Cornell (Cal. Sup.) 263 P. 216. Furthermore, in the instant case, no objection was interposed either as to the court's right to appoint or that the witness appointed was not qualified, and all objections to such action of the trial court were waived, therefore. While it is contended that such waiver does not occur in the instant case because the petitioner is an incompetent, appearing by guardian, we think such contention is without merit. In the case of Newport v. Hatton, 195 Cal. 132, 231 P. 987, the court said: "An infant is ordinarily bound by acts done in good faith by his guardian ad litem or counsel in the course of his suit to the same extent as a person of full age." To the same effect is the case of Thompson v. Maxwell Land Grant, etc., 168 U. S. 451, 18 S. Ct. 121, 42 L. Ed. 539.

There are no other matters requiring consideration, and the judgment is affirmed.

4. Druggists 🔑1—Medicines are not removed from realm of regulation merely because put in sealed packages with directions for use.

That medicines or remedies are usually put in sealed packages or containers, with directions as to their use, held not alone sufficient to remove them from realm of regulation.

5. Druggists 🔑2—Statute authorizing board of pharmacy to issue permits to general dealers in rural districts having store within three miles of registered pharmacists to sell simple household remedies held valid (St. 1905, p. 542, § 16, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1140).

St. 1905, p. 542, § 16, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1140, authorizing board of pharmacy in its discretion to issue permits to general dealers in rural districts, where store of such general dealer is not less than three miles distant from store of registered pharmacist, to sell certain simple household remedies and drugs, held valid.

Application by William W. Gray for writ of habeas corpus, directed to the Chief of Police of City of Sacramento. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

J. M. Inman and P. G. West, both of Sacramento, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Robert W. Harrison, Chief Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

Neil Cunningham, Deputy Atty. Gen., and W. Bruce Philip, of San Francisco, amicus curiæ, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Petitioner was taken into custody under a warrant of arrest issued out of the justice court of Sacramento township, charging him with the commission of a misdemeanor, to wit, violation of an act regulating the practice of pharmacy. Stats. 1905, c. 406, p. 535, and amendments thereto. The complaint on which the warrant issued charged petitioner more specifically with having dispensed certain household drugs, to wit, tincture of arnica, spirits of camphor, almond oil, distilled extract witch-hazel, syrup of ipecac, syrup of rhubarb, hive syrup, sweet spirits of nitre, tincture of iron, saltpeter, Rochelle salts, senna leaves, carbonate of magnesia, seidlitz powders, quinine, cathartic pills, camomile flowers, caraway seed, chlorate of potash, moth balls, plasters, salves, ointments, peroxide of hydrogen, gum camphor, blue ointment, asafœtida, saffron, anise seed and Epsom salts (in less than ten-pound quantities), contrary to sections 13 and 16 of the act. In this proceeding it is petitioner's contention that said sections 13 and 16 are unconstitutional and void, as granting special privileges and denying the equal protection of the law in a manner not reasonably intended to protect the public health, and therefore violative of sections 11 and 21 of article 1 and section 25 of article 4 of the State Constitution and the Fourteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution.

Petitioner concedes it to be established that, for the preservation of public health and safety, the state may regulate and place proper restrictions upon the practice of pharmacy, and may prescribe qualifications to be possessed by those engaged in that profession, and that in the exercise of its police power it may also regulate the manufacture, compounding and sale of drugs, medicines and poisons, where such regulation in any way reasonably tends to protect the public health, safety or morals. He insists, however, and rightly so, that any such regulation must be of a reasonable nature and calculated in some way to promote such protection. This brings us to a consideration of the pertinent provisions of the act.

Section 13 (as amended by St. 1909, p. 1015, § 4) reads: "Any proprietor of a pharmacy, who shall fail, or neglect to place in charge of such pharmacy a registered pharmacist, or any proprietor, who shall by himself or any other person, permit the compounding of prescriptions, or the vending of drugs, medicines, or poisons, in his or her store, or place of business, except by or in the presence and under the direct, immediate and personal supervision of a registered pharmacist, or any person, not being a registered pharmacist, who shall take charge of, or act as manager, of any pharmacy, or store, or who, not being a registered pharmacist, retails, compounds, or dispenses drugs, medicines, or poisons, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. * * *"

Section 16 (as amended by St. 1927, p. 1140) is as follows: "The Board of Pharmacy shall issue a permit to general dealers in rural districts in which the conditions, in their judgment, do not justify the employment of a registered pharmacist, and where the store of such general dealer is not less than three miles distant from the store of a registered pharmacist; which said permit shall authorize the persons or firm named therein to sell in such locality, but not elsewhere, and under such restrictions and regulations as said board may from time to time adopt, the following simple household remedies and drugs, in such manner and form as may be hereafter authorized by said board, as follows, to wit:

"Tincture of arnica, spirits of camphor, almond oil, distilled extract witch-hazel, syrup of ipecac, syrup of rhubarb, hive syrup, sweet spirits of nitre, tincture of iron, Epsom salts, Rochelle salts, senna leaves, carbonate of magnesia, seidlitz powders, quinine, cathartic pills, camomile flowers, caraway seed, chlorate of potash, moth balls, plasters, salves, ointments, peroxide of hydrogen, gum camphor, blue ointment, asafœtida, saffron, anise seed and saltpeter, and such other remedies or drugs as the board may from time to time designate.

"The board shall charge an annual fee of five dollars in advance for such permit, and it shall be unlawful for any dealer to sell any drugs or ordinary household remedies without complying with the requirements of this section. Whenever a registered pharmacist shall establish a pharmacy within three miles by the shortest road from the place of business of such dealer, no further license shall be granted, and the license already issued shall be void; provided, that the following drugs, medicines and chemicals may be sold by grocers and dealers generally without restriction, viz.:

"Glauber salts, vaseline, turpentine, condition powders, cream of tartar, carbonate of soda, bay rum, essence of Jamaica ginger, essence of peppermint, ammonia, alum, castor oil, bicarbonate of soda, chloride of lime, glycerine, witch-hazel, sheep dip, borax, sulphur, bluestone, copperas, flaxseed, insect powder, fly-paper, ant poison, squirrel poison, gopher poison, and poultry vermifuge; and arsenical poisons used for orchard spraying, when prepared and sold only in original and unbroken packages and labeled with the official poison labels; provided, that this act shall not prevent the sale of Epsom salts in original packages of not less than ten pounds when plainly and properly labeled 'For live stock only and not for medicinal purposes' in letters not less than one-half inch in height."

Gray is not a registered pharmacist, and his place of business is less than three miles distant from the store of a registered pharmacist. Section 12 (as amended by St. 1907, p. 768, § 4) provides that the act is without application to "registered, trade-marked or copyrighted proprietary medicines," and section 11 declares that every proprietor or manager of a pharmacy or drug store is responsible for the quality of all drugs, chemicals and medicines sold or dispensed by him, "except those sold in the original package of the manufacturer and except those articles or preparations known as patent or proprietary medicines."

Petitioner cites State v. Childs (Ariz.) 257 P. 366, 54 A. L. R. 736, in which a statute containing provisions substantially identical with the foregoing sections of the California act was declared unconstitutional in so far as it attempted or purported to restrict to registered pharmacists the sale of patent or proprietary medicines or medicines sold in the original package of the manufacturer. It was there held that the sale of such patent or proprietary medicine or medicines sold in the original package of the manufacturer did not require the exercise of expert skill and, in the absence of responsibility on the seller's part to the buying public, afforded no particular protection or safeguard to the public health. The Arizona court based its conclusion, in the main, on the reasoning of State v. Donaldson, 41 Minn. 74, 42 N. W. 781, also relied on by petitioner.

[1-4] While there is much that is persuasive in the reasoning of these decisions, we are not prepared to follow them and declare unconstitutional the provisions of our pharmacy statute requiring, with one exception not here involved, all sales of original package medicines, other than patent or proprietary medicines which are expressly excepted from the operation of the act, to be made by or in the presence and under the direct and immediate supervision of a registered pharmacist. A police regulation for the protection of the public health will be sustained if, by any fair construction, it has a tendency to effect its object. All of the authorities recognize that the state has as much right to regulate the sale of domestic remedies in the original package of the manufacturer as it has to regulate the sale of any other kinds of medicines and remedies. The mere fact that such medicines and remedies are usually put in sealed packages or containers, with directions as to their use, should not alone be sufficient to remove them from the realm of regulation. A person purchasing such original package medicines might well rely, as it was intended he should rely, upon such directions and administer the medicine accordingly; and, while the directions upon any particular original package medicine might be, and probably are, correct and safe, medicines of a dangerous character might be put up and sold in the same manner, with directions not safe, and not approved by a pharmacist, and thus the statutory province of the pharmacist be usurped to the detriment of the public. It is our opinion, therefore, that the Legislature, in the exercise of its police power, may properly and reasonably confine and restrict the sale of original package medicines, other than patent or proprietary medicines which are expressly declared to be without the operation of the act, to registered pharmacists.

In State v. Zotalis, 173 Minn. 132, 214 N. W. 766, decided long after State v. Donaldson, supra, the defendant, who conducted a confectionery store, was convicted of illegally selling aspirin. In affirming the judgment of conviction the court declared: "The statute should be sustained if enacted with reasonable reference to public health or welfare. If intended merely to give a monopoly to pharmacists or druggists by restricting sales to them it is not sustainable. It is only sustainable as a police measure.

"The Legislature thought that the dangers incident to its sale justified regulation and that a restriction of sales to pharmacists or to those under their supervision was effective. It is true that no technical skill is required in making a sale. This does not prove the statute invalid. As remarked by the trial court, the pharmacist knows where to procure a pure and genuine article and his prescribing physicians will require him to furnish a pure drug. It is not questioned that the sale of drugs, medicines and poisons may be regulated in the exercise of the police power. State v. Donaldson, 41 Minn. 74, 42 N. W. 781. * * * The restriction of the sale of aspirin as provided by the statute is within the legislative discretion. * * *" Other authorities sustaining the right of the Legislature to restrict the sale of original package medicines and so-called harmless household remedies to registered pharmacists, are: State Board of Pharmacy v. Matthews, 197 N. Y. 353, 90 N. E. 966, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1013; People v. Abraham, 16 App. Div. 58, 44 N. Y. S. 1077; State v. Foutch, 155 Tenn. 476, 295 S. W. 469, 471, 54 A. L. R. 725; Board of Pharmacy v. Abrammoff, 141 A. 587, 6 N. J. Misc. Rep. 437.

[5] Provisions similar to section 16 of our act, wherein the board of pharmacy is authorized in its discretion to issue permits to general dealers in rural districts, where the store of such general dealer is not less than three miles distant from the store of a registered pharmacist, to sell certain so-called simple household remedies and drugs, have been repeatedly upheld. State v. Foutch, supra, page 470 of 295 S. W. (155 Tenn. 476); State Board of Pharmacy v. Matthews, supra, pages 968, 969 of 90 N. E. (197 N. Y. 353);

State v. Donaldson, supra, page 782 of 42 N. W. (41 Minn. 74); State v. Zotalis, supra, page 767 of 214 N. W. (173 Minn. 132). In State v. Donaldson, supra, it is held: "Doubtless, the use of impure medicines or dangerous drugs is just as injurious to those who buy them one mile from a drug store as to those who buy them within that distance; and, if this was the only thing to be taken into the account, the discrimination would be purely arbitrary. But the legislature had to deal with this as a practical question, and had a right to take into consideration the convenience of the public. In sparsely settled districts, frequently there is no pharmacy or drug store near at hand. In case of sickness it is often absolutely necessary to obtain medicinal remedies promptly, in order to save life. The question was, how far was it practicable to protect the public from the sale of impure or dangerous medicines and drugs, and at the same time have due regard to the convenience of those living at a distance from a drug store? To meet the requirements of the situation, the Legislature made an exception so as to allow shopkeepers whose place of business is more than a mile from a drug or apothecary shop to deal in and sell the commonly used medicines and poisons, if put up by a registered pharmacist; thereby protecting the public, especially in the centers of population where they most need it, as far as practically consistent with the convenience and necessities of those living in rural districts. We do not think that such a distinction is either arbitrary or unreasonable."

The writ is discharged, and the petitioner remanded.

206 Cal. 515

BROWN v. HAPPY VALLEY FRUIT GROWERS, Inc., et al. (Sac. 4123.)

Supreme Court of California. Feb. 20, 1929.

1. Venue 🔑66—Averment of third person's residence in affidavit for change of venue is sufficient, though based on information and belief (Pol. Code, § 52, subd. 7, and § 1239, subd. 10).

Averment as to place of residence of third party in affidavit on motion for change of venue is a sufficient averment of fact, though based on information and belief, since question of residence is largely dependent on the intent of the person whose residence is subject of inquiry, under Pol. Code, § 52, subd. 7, and section 1239, subd. 10.

2. Venue 🔑41—Failure of one defendant to consent did not defeat right of others to change of venue, where uncontradicted affidavit alleged on information and belief that none of defendants were residents (Pol. Code, § 52, subd. 7, and § 1239, subd. 10; Code Civ. Proc. § 395).

Under affidavit on motion for change of venue under Code Civ. Proc. § 395, which stated that none of defendants were residents of county in which suit was brought, and that at least two of them were residents of another county, motion for change of venue should have been granted, though one of defendants did not join in, or consent to, the change, where averment of nonresidence of all defendants, though based on information and belief, was not contradicted, in view of Pol. Code, § 52, subd. 7, and section 1239, subd. 10.

3. Venue 🔑41—Right of nonresident defendants to have case transferred is not defeated by consent of other nonresident defendants (Code Civ. Proc. § 395).

Consent of certain defendants residing outside county where the action is brought cannot take away from other nonresident defendants right to have cause transferred to the county of their residence, under Code Civ. Proc. § 395.

4. Venue 🔑5(3)—Action to set aside judgment for fraud and restrain defendants from asserting title to local property sold to satisfy judgment held transitory and not to recover realty (Code Civ. Proc. § 392).

Action against nonresidents to set aside judgment entered in superior court of another county on ground of fraud and collision, and to enjoin defendants from asserting title to real property, located in county in which suit was brought, and sold to satisfy the judgment, held personal and transitory action, triable in county where defendants resided, and not action for the recovery of real estate, under Code Civ. Proc. § 392.

5. Venue 🔑16½—Plaintiff cannot, by uniting local and transitory causes, compel defendants to have both matters tried outside county of their residence (Code Civ. Proc. § 392).

Plaintiff cannot, by uniting by his complaint matters which form the subject of personal action with other matters which form the subject of local action, under Code Civ. Proc. § 392, compel defendants to have both matters tried in county other than that in which defendants reside.

6. Courts 🔑476—One court will not generally interfere with judgment of another court of co-ordinate jurisdiction.

Where courts are given co-ordinate jurisdiction, one court will not interfere with the judgment of another court, unless the exigencies of the situation are so exceptional as to demand summary intervention of equity side.

7. Courts 🔑481—Court will not entertain jurisdiction of suit to set aside earlier judgment entered in court of co-ordinate jurisdiction, where process issued under former judgment had been fully executed.

Court of one county will not, in suit by subsequent judgment creditor, entertain direct attack on former judgment against corporation, entered in court of co-ordinate jurisdiction, where execution sale was had under the former judgment and process had spent its force before filing of present suit.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Shasta County; Walter E. Herzinger, Judge.

Action by J. Harry Brown against the Happy Valley Fruit Growers, Inc., and others. From an order denying motions for change of venue, defendants appeal. Reversed.

R. Lee Chamberlain, of San Francisco, for appellants.

William M. Thornton, in pro. per., and for Lightner.

Carr & Kennedy, of Redding, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J. This appeal is from an order denying motions made by certain defendants in the above-entitled action for an order transferring said cause for trial from the county of Shasta to the county of Alameda, the place of residence of said moving parties. The appellant Happy Valley Fruit Growers, Inc., is a corporation with its principal place of business in the county of Alameda. On and prior to December 31, 1925, said corporation was the owner and holder of certain described parcels or tracts of land situate in the county of Shasta.

On December 31, 1925, Howell Lightner commenced an action in the superior court of the county of Alameda to recover a stated indebtedness against said corporation in the sum of $22,363.29. Said corporation offered no defense to said action and judgment accordingly went against it for the gross sum of $24,699.38. Pursuant to an execution issued upon said judgment, the sheriff of the county of Shasta sold at judicial sale on June 19, 1926, said parcels of land owned by said corporation, situate in Shasta county, to Howell Lightner for the sum of $10,000, which sum was applied as a credit upon said judgment. A sheriff's deed of said real property was, on June 21, 1927, executed and delivered to said Lightner.

The complaint alleges that on and prior to December 31, 1925, said corporation was indebted to plaintiff and respondent J. Harry Brown upon an assigned promissory note, dated October 3, 1923, in the principal sum of $5,802.08, together with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum; that at a time not stated in the complaint said respondent Brown commenced a suit in the superior court of the county of Butte against said corporation upon said note and obtained judgment on October 19, 1926, for the gross sum of $7,088.90; that upon the filing of said action plaintiff Brown procured a writ of attachment to be issued out of the superior court of the county of Butte, directed to the sheriff of the county of Shasta, and said officer by virtue thereof, on April 10, 1926, levied upon and attached all of the interest which said corporation owned in said real property situate in the county of Shasta.

The foregoing facts, taken from the complaint, are sufficient to illustrate the order in which the adversary parties proceeded in their respective efforts to reduce the property of said corporation to satisfaction of their asserted claims.

We now come to the gravamen of the complaint, which is essential in order to determine the nature of the action with reference to the place of trial. The complaint in the present action, filed in the superior court of the county of Shasta, is an attack upon a judgment obtained in the county of Alameda, valid upon its face, charging fraud and collusion were practiced by said plaintiff in said action, Howell Lightner, and defendant corporation, with the purpose and design of enabling said Lightner, upon a fraudulent and fictitious cause of action, to obtain said judgment against said corporation to the prejudice and damage of plaintiff herein and other creditors. The prayer of the complaint is for a decree of annulment of said attachment issued out of said superior court of the county of Alameda and the judgment entered thereon on May 20, 1926, in favor of defendant Howell Lightner and against said corporation, and the voidance of all the subsequent proceedings had and acts done pursuant thereto, on the ground that said judgment was procured by the fraud and collusion of the parties to said action, acting in concert, with the intent and design of defrauding said plaintiff and other creditors of said corporation; further, that defendants Lightner, Thornton, and all persons claiming through or under them be restrained from asserting any right, title, interest, or claim in or to said Shasta county property by reason of the judgment, or the execution or sale arising out of said judgment; further, that the writ of attachment issued out of the superior court of the county of Butte on April 10, 1926, and levied upon said corporation's Shasta county real property be declared a lien upon said real property prior in time and superior in right to any claim of said defendants herein.

The motion made by appellants at the time this cause was before us for hearing for diminution of the record by including certain matters which were omitted therefrom and which are before us in supplemental form, properly authenticated, is granted.

Defendant Thornton appeared in propria persona and as attorney for defendant Lightner, and demurred to the complaint on behalf of both of said defendants. At the same time he gave notice of motion for change of the place of trial, assigning as the grounds therefor that he was at the time of the commencement of the action, and had since continued to be, a resident of the county of Alameda. In said notice he subscribed himself as attorney in propria persona and also attorney for Lightner, but did not move in the latter's behalf. The demand for change of venue was signed, "Wm. Thornton, defendant," and the affidavit of merits was signed merely in his personal capacity, but the affidavit sets forth his appearance as defendant in propria persona. Said corporation likewise appeared by demurring to the complaint and complied with all the provisions of the statute requisite to the right of obtaining a change of venue. In its affidavit of merits said corporation, through its vice president, Goss, averred its place of residence at the time of the commencement of said action and since to be the county of Alameda, and further averred, upon information and belief, that none of defendants named in said complaint were, at the time of the filing of said complaint, or have since been, residents of the county of Shasta. No counter affidavits were filed by respondent. The minute order appearing in the record is: "Motion for change of venue denied."

Defendant Lightner, who joined in the demurrer with his attorney and codefendant Thornton, was not joined with him in said notice of motion for change of venue or in the demand or affidavit of merits, nor did he appear separately in said matters. Attorney Thornton, who was a codefendant in the action, was unquestionably the attorney and representative of Lightner, as shown by the joint demurrer filed. The corporation was represented by Attorney Chamberlain. There is no doubt, however, that all of the defendants acted in concert on the motion to change the place of trial. The trial court apparently considered the motions as jointly made, as the entry in the record is: "Motion for change of venue is denied."

[1-3] It is respondent's claim that, inasmuch as Lightner did not in the venue proceeding file an affidavit showing his place of residence to be in a county other than Shasta, it must be presumed that he was a resident of said county. But it does appear by uncontradicted averment that none of the defendants were residents of said county of Shasta and that at least two of them were residents of the county of Alameda. It is further objected that the affidavit made by the vice president of the defendant corporation as to the fact that none of said defendants were residents of the county of Shasta was made upon information and belief. It may be said in passing that, as the question of residence is largely dependent upon the intent of the person whose residence is the subject of inquiry (section 52, subd. 7, and section 1239, subd. 10, Pol. Code), an averment based upon information and belief as to the place of residence of a third party should be accepted as a sufficient averment of fact, although such an averment may not be regarded as sufficient in that class of cases where the ultimate fact is susceptible of direct and positive averment. Such an averment is prima facie proof of the fact in the absence of any denial or contrary proof whatsoever. "Whenever the statute, either in express terms or by implication, requires a person to make a statement which from the very nature of things can only be made on information and belief, an affidavit in that form meets the demands of the statute. It is impossible for anyone to swear positively that a particular person is a nonresident of this state, or to say that a nonresident resides at a particular place. In requiring these facts to be stated, the statute does not demand the impossible. * * * It does intend that the person making the affidavit * * * shall state these facts upon information and belief —the only possible ground upon which they can be made." Smith v. Collis, 42 Mont. 350, 363, 112 P. 1070, 1073 (Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1158), Leigh v. Green, 64 Neb. 533, 90 N. W. 255, 101 Am. St. Rep. 592. If none of the defendants were residents of Shasta county, the motions for the change of place of trial to Alameda county should have been granted, even though Lightner, who more than likely believed, and whose attorney, Thornton, no doubt likewise believed, Lightner was represented in all the proceedings for the change of venue by his said attorney, Thornton, did not join in or consent to the change, provided he was not a resident of Shasta county.

In Wood, Curtis & Co. v. Herman Min. Co., 139 Cal. 713, 73 P. 588, the rule is thus stated: "In the present case the defendants who had been served made the demand, but other defendants appeared voluntarily, and answered and opposed the demand, and requested that the trial proceed in Sacramento county. It appeared, however, from the affidavit of the moving defendants, and is uncontradicted, 'that none of the defendants named in the complaint on file herein did at the commencement of the action, or since, or now, reside in said county of Sacramento.' This was a compliance with section 395 in that regard (Greenleaf v. Jacks, 133 Cal. 506 [65 P. 1039]). The language of section 395 requires the action to be tried in the county in which the defendants, or some of them, reside, not where they do not reside. The consent of certain defendants not residing in the county where the action is brought could not take away from the defendants who did not reside there the right to have the cause transferred to the county of their residence. To hold otherwise would be a violation of the provisions of section 395."

The right of a defendant to have an action brought against him tried in the county in which he has his residence is an ancient and valuable right, which has always been safeguarded by statute and is supported by a long line of judicial decisions. "The right of a plaintiff to have an action tried in another county than that in which the defendant has his residence is exceptional, and, if the plaintiff would claim such right, he must bring himself within the terms of the exception." Brady v. Times-Mirror, 106 Cal. 56, 39 P. 209.

[4, 5] Appellants insist that the action is personal and transitory and no phase of it can properly be included within section 392, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that causes must be tried in the county in which the subject of the action or some part thereof is situated, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial, to wit: "For the recovery of real property, or of an estate or interest therein, or for the determination in any form, of such right or interest, and for injuries to real property; for partition of real property; for the foreclosures of all liens and mortgages on real property. * * *"

Unquestionably neither the Alameda county action nor Butte county action involved or in any way affected an injury to, interest in, or right to real property or the foreclosure of a mortgage or lien thereon. The present action is a direct attack upon a judgment entered in the superior court of Alameda county, valid upon its face, upon the grounds of fraud and collusion. Fraud and collusion constitute the crux of the action. It is true that relief incidental to the main question and which follows it as a matter of course is unnecessarily included in the prayer of the complaint. Plaintiff's lien as an incident of the Butte county judgment would remain in full force and effect in the event that the Alameda county judgment should be annulled upon the ground of fraud. There would be absolutely nothing left, so far as the condemned judgment is concerned, to hinder or impede the plaintiff in the full enjoyment of the fruits of the Butte county judgment. That portion of the prayer of the complaint which prays that defendants be enjoined and restrained from asserting any right, title, interest, or claim in said real property by reason of the Alameda county judgment, execution, and sale arising thereon, and that plaintiff's lien be declared to be prior in right to the claim of said defendants, is merely surplusage matter. No claim is made that the action is one to foreclose a lien, nor is the enforcement of execution or any other immediate threatened action on the part of defendants sought to be stayed. The validity of an existing judgment, valid on its face, is recognized by plaintiff as the pivot point which controls all other questions; but, if it could be said that an action to quiet title is joined with matter which forms the subject of a personal action, the answer to that question is that a plaintiff cannot, by uniting in his complaint matters which form the subject of a personal action, such as fraud and collusion, with matters which form the subject of a local action, compel the defendants to have both matters tried in a county other than that in which said defendants reside. Sheeley v. Jones, 192 Cal. 256, 219 P. 744; Warner v. Warner, 100 Cal. 11, 34 P. 523; Smith v. Smith, 88 Cal. 572, 26 P. 356; Nason v. Feldhusen, 34 Cal. App. 789, 168 P. 1162.

[6, 7] Under a system where courts are given co-ordinate jurisdiction, one court will not interfere with the judgment of another court of co-ordinate jurisdiction except where the exigencies of the situation are so exceptionally pressing as to demand the summary intervention of the equity side of said court of co-ordinate jurisdiction. The facts as pleaded present no reason why the instant action should have been commenced in Shasta county. Months before the Butte county judgment was obtained and probably before said Butte county action was filed, a writ of attachment was caused by Lightner to be levied upon said Shasta county real property. Said property was sold at execution sale almost four months before the Butte county judgment was obtained. No injunctive relief was sought. The complaint herein was filed months after the process set in motion by the Alameda county judgment had spent its force. The court that rendered the judgment assailed could, upon application made to it, have granted the same adequate relief that any other court in the state could have granted. This being so, the rule is that one court will not interfere with the judgments of another court of co-ordinate jurisdiction. Crowley v. Davis, 37 Cal. 268.

We are of the view that the proper place of trial of said cause was the county of Alameda upon both of the grounds considered herein; certainly upon the ground that the action was personal and transitory and none of the defendants resided in the county of Shasta.

The order is reversed.

We concur: CURTIS, J.; PRESTON, J.

In populous and metropolitan area, interests of public outweigh claim of railroad to exclusive use of its right of way unobstructed, and the measure of ordinary care will be applied where trains are operated through such district in a way likely to inflict injury on persons whom railroad should expect may be on or near its right of way.

3. Railroads 🔑400(5)—Whether object, improperly projecting from train in manner likely to injure persons on or near tracks, constituted breach of care, is jury question.

Whether operation of a train, with an arm, timber, or other object, not a proper and permanent portion of the train, which employés knew or should have known was projecting in a manner likely to injure persons whom company should expect to be on or near its tracks, amounts to a breach of care, is a question for the jury.

4. Railroads 🔑359(1)—Railroad's duty to trespasser on right of way is not to recklessly injure him.

Trespasser on railroad tracks is contributorily negligent in being on the tracks or right of way where he has no right to be, and must expect only that railroad will not recklessly injure him.

5. Railroads 🔑358(1)—Railroad owes to implied licensee on tracks higher degree of care than merely not to recklessly injure him.

One on railroad tracks under implied license or invitation from railroad is not necessarily negligent in being there, and railroad owes him a higher degree of care than merely not to recklessly injure him.

6. Railroads 🔑400(2)—On conflicting evidence, it is for jury to decide whether plaintiff injured on railroad tracks is licensee or trespasser and degree of care owed him.

Where evidence is conflicting, it is for jury to determine whether plaintiff injured by train on or near right of way is licensee or trespasser, and whether under particular circumstances railroad owed him duty of care which it failed to exercise, by reason whereof plaintiff was injured without fault on his part.

7. Railroads 🔑364—Infancy of person struck by projection on moving train would be material only on question of contributory negligence.

In action for injuries to 4½ year old boy struck by projection extending from freight car, whether injured plaintiff was infant or adult was immaterial, if jury could find from evidence that railroad should have expected his presence at place of injury and could also find that railroad employés were negligent in operation of trains, and was material only on question of contributory negligence.

8. Railroads 🔑398(1)—Evidence that 4½ year old boy was struck by object projecting from train held to make case of negligence proximately causing injury.

In action for injury to 4½ year old boy, evidence that he was struck by object projecting from moving train held to make out a case of negligence proximately causing injury.

9. Railroads 🔑398(1)—Testimony that witnesses found no projection alleged to have injured pedestrian held not to overcome inferential finding of negligence in inspection.

In action for injuries to boy struck by object projecting from moving freight train, testimony of railroad's witnesses that they inspected train and found no projection held not to overcome inferential finding of negligence in matter of inspection.

10. Railroads 🔑401(7)—Instruction that railroad owed no duty to discover boy near tracks, and, if discovered, only not knowingly to permit object to extend beyond car, held properly refused.

In action for injuries to boy struck by projection from side of car while walking near railroad tracks, defendant's requested instruction that it owed no duty to discover plaintiff, and no duty if he was discovered except not knowingly to permit beam or other object to extend outside of car, held properly refused.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Action by Marion R. Smithwick, a minor, by his guardian ad litem, Marion A. Smithwick, and another, against the Pacific Electric Railway Company. From an adverse judgment, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank Karr, E. E. Morris, and C. W. Cornell, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Geo. W. Rochester and Frank P. Doherty, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHENK, J. This action was brought by Marion R. Smithwick, a minor, by Marion A. Smithwick, his father, as his guardian ad litem, and by Marion A. Smithwick in his personal capacity, for damages resulting from an accident wherein the minor plaintiff was injured by a freight train of the defendant company. The jury returned two verdicts, one for the minor in the sum of $6,000 on account of the personal injuries suffered by him, and one for $735 in favor of the father on account of medical and surgical attention and hospital care. From the judgments entered pursuant to said verdicts, the defendant has appealed.

The minor plaintiff was about 4½ years of age at the time of the accident. He suffered an injury by which his leg was cut off by the wheels of the defendant's moving train. The injury occurred about noontime on March 19, 1925, on the defendant's private right of way running in a straight line east and west between Grand avenue and Hope street in the city of Los Angeles. A vacant lot, contiguous to the northern boundary of the right of way and bounded on the west by Hope street, on the north by Thirty-Fifth street, and on the east by a spur track running from the right of way to the May Company's warehouse, had been used by children as a playground for five or six years continuously next preceding the time of the accident. Employés of the Birch-Smith Company, whose warehouse joined the southerly boundary of the defendant's right of way at Grand avenue, also used the playground during the noon hour for the game of baseball. To get to the playground the employés crossed over the private right of way at a point about equidistant between Grand avenue and Hope street. It was in evidence that children often crossed and came upon the private right of way for the purpose of recovering balls; that each year there was at least one well-defined footpath crossing the right of way, but that its location might not be the same in every year; that a well-defined footpath extending from the playground and crossing the right of way existed at the time of the accident; that several other but less defined paths were made through the weeds and across the tracks; that there were well-worn footpaths parallel to the tracks along the right of way on the north and on the south sides of the tracks; and that children and adults had crossed the right of way over these paths daily for about six years.

On the day of the accident, a freight train of 23 cars, comprising flat cars, "gondolas," and box cars, attached to a motor which was at the head end, was operated by defendant's employés from Culver Junction east-bound for the Butte street yards of the defendant. As the train was crossing Hope street from the west and approaching Grand avenue, and going at a rate of 10 miles an hour, the minor plaintiff and another boy about the same age were seen coming from the playground and running toward the train. After the motor had passed the minor plaintiff, he changed his course and ran along and parallel with the train and in the same direction in which it was moving. He was picked up with one of his legs cut off and with other minor injuries. The foregoing was established by practically undisputed evidence. There was additional evidence that the minor plaintiff was struck from the back by a rod, truss, beam, or other object which protruded several feet from one of the cars, which, as it passed near the boy, hit him on the back of the head and knocked him under the wheels. One witness testified that he was in his automobile on Grand avenue on the north side of the passing train waiting to cross the right of way when he saw the two children near the tracks; that they were far enough from it for safe clearance; that he saw something "hit the smaller boy on the head and turned him around and knocked him under the train"; that he looked at the train as it continued to pass to see what had struck the boy and saw that "something was hanging," protruding about 4 feet from the car and downward; that he could not make out exactly what the object was; but that he thereupon immediately ran to the child's assistance. The minor plaintiff himself testified that something struck him on the back of the head. It was in evidence that the boy was about 15 feet east of the cross-path and 4 or 5 feet north of the track when he was picked up. The defendant's train crew testified that the train was examined at Culver Junction and no truss or beam or other object was sticking out from the side of the car; that when they arrived at the Butte street yards, which was about 15 or 20 minutes after they passed Grand avenue, they received a telephone message concerning the accident; that they examined every car carefully to find any protruding object, but found none; that at the time of the accident the conductor and all the crew except the rear brakeman were forward; and that the rear brakeman was in a "gondola"—a box car without a roof—which was next to the rear car. The trainmen testified that they did not see the boy at any time and did not know of the accident until they received the telephone message on arriving at the Butte street yards.

The defendant assigns as error the refusal of the trial court to grant its motions for a nonsuit and for a directed verdict; also, the giving of certain instructions and the refusal to give certain requested instructions. The defendant contends that as a matter of law the defendant was not negligent, because at the most the minor plaintiff was a mere licensee and the duty of care owed to a licensee by the owner of private premises is no greater than that owed to a trespasser, viz., a duty not wantonly or willfully to injure him. It is insisted that this court has refused to recognize any distinction between a mere licensee and a trespasser, citing, Means v. Southern California Railway Co., 144 Cal. 473, 77 P. 1001, 1 Ann. Cas. 206; that the duty owed a licensee on defendant's right of way is the same as that owed a trespasser; and that there is no duty therefore to discover the plaintiff, but the duty arises only after discovery to use due care to avoid injuring him (see Green v. South S. F. R., etc., Co., 181 Cal. 392, 184 P. 669; Toomey v. S. P. R. R. Co., 86 Cal. 374, 24 P. 1074, 10 L. R. A. 139; Tennenbrock v. S. P. C. R. Co., 59 Cal. 269, 271, citing Maumus v. Champion, 40 Cal. 121); and that the defendant owes no greater duty to discover infant trespassers than it does to discover adult trespassers, citing mainly Felton v. Aubrey (C. C. A.) 74 F. 350, and Palmer v. Oregon Short Line, 34 Utah, 466, 98 P. 689, 16 Ann. Cas. 229. It is also contended by the defendant that there was no negligence shown in the operation or maintenance of the train, because it did not appear that there was anything out of the ordinary in its operation nor did defendant know that any beam projected from one of its cars.

On the other hand, the plaintiffs rely on Hansen v. Southern Pacific Co., 105 Cal. 379, 38 P. 957, as determinative of the issues presented on this appeal and as an authority for instructions Nos. I and IV given by the trial court in the present case and objected to as erroneous by the defendant.

In the Hansen Case a boy of seven years had his foot caught in a defective cattle guard while he was crossing the tracks on a footpath when the defendant's train ran over his foot, necessitating amputation. The engineer testified that he saw the boy on the track in sufficient time to have stopped the train, but did not realize his inability to remove himself from the tracks until too late to avoid the injury. The trial court left two issues to the jury: (1) That if the "defendants permitted and consented to the use of their tracks and right of way by the public for the purpose of travel along and across the same at the place where the cattleguard was maintained and that the plaintiff was so using the track * * * at the time the injury occurred, then * * * the plaintiff was not a trespasser and the defendant owed him a duty not to obstruct the track and right of way with a dangerous contrivance; and if you further find that the cattleguard was a dangerous trap, and the defendant knew or ought to have known that it was dangerous," the plaintiff was entitled to recover on the first cause of action if he was without fault on his part; and (2) on the second cause of action, if "plaintiff was upon the track by the consent and permission of defendants, then they were bound to exercise reasonable care in keeping a proper lookout and otherwise, and if they failed therein, and by reason of their negligence and without the fault of plaintiff he was injured, the jury should find for plaintiff, and that if plaintiff was not on the track or road by permission of the defendants, he was a trespasser, and the defendants owed him no duty except to use ordinary care to avoid injuring him when they discovered him on the track, and if, under such circumstances they exercised such care the verdict should be for the defendants." On appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in that case, the court held that the issues by reason of the conflicting evidence were properly for the jury and approved the law stated in the instructions.

In the present case the defendant charges error in the refusal of the trial court to instruct the jury in effect that the defendant owed no duty to discover the minor plaintiff and no duty if he was not discovered except not knowingly to permit a beam or other object to extend beyond the side of the car; and in giving instead the following two instructions:

"I. If you find from a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant permitted and consented to the use of its tracks and right of way by the public for the purpose of travel along and across the same at the place where the alleged accident occurred and that the minor plaintiff was so using the tracks and right of way at the time the alleged accident and injury occurred, then I charge you that the minor plaintiff was not a trespasser and the defendant owed him a duty not to have or maintain any dangerous contrivance upon said right of way which would be likely to injure the minor plaintiff. I further instruct you that if you find from a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant's right of way and tracks had for a long period been used by the public as a footpath for travel with the knowledge of the defendant and without protest or objection from it, then you have a right to infer that such use of the tracks and right of way was with the acquiescence and permission of the defendant."

"IV. The railroad company has the right to the exclusive use of its railroad tracks and right of way, free and clear of any use by others. It may relinquish such right of exclusive use, however, to the public, or to any class of persons, either by giving its express permission to such use by the public or other persons or by its tacit or implied permission which may be established by circumstances such as knowledge of and acquiescence in its long continued use as a public passageway. If from a preponderance of the evidence you believe that the railroad company gave its permissive consent, directly or impliedly, or acquiesced in the use of its premises by the public or children, then the persons who entered upon said premises, if any, were not trespassers, but were licensees. The defendant did not owe to plaintiff the duty to be free from negligence but did owe plaintiff the duty not to knowingly maintain hidden traps or dangerous instrumentalities."

The defendant urges that the principles stated in the instructions quoted have been rejected by the case of Means v. Southern California Railway Co., supra, and that the present rule in this state is that the defendant owes no greater duty to licensees than it does toward trespassers.

In the Means Case it appeared that while the plaintiff was on the defendant's warehouse premises as a licensee for his own purposes and without invitation, he was injured by the bursting of a tank of sulphuric acid. The appeal was from an order granting a nonsuit. The court held applicable the general rule that a mere licensee takes the premises as he finds them, and that there exists no duty on the part of the owner of private premises toward him except, as variously quoted from the cases cited in its opinion, to refrain from willful or affirmative acts which are injurious, or which wantonly or recklessly expose him to danger, or not to maintain a trap which would include any very dangerous construction or condition designedly arranged to do injury (see, also, Giannini v. Campodonico, 176 Cal. 548, 169 P. 80; Powers v. Raymond, 197 Cal. 126, 239 P. 1069; Lindholm v. Northwestern Pac. R. Co., 79 Cal. App. 34, 248 P. 1033; Herzog v. Hemphill, 7 Cal. App. 116, 93 P. 899); and held as a matter of law that the record did not show a breach of the duty toward the plaintiff in keeping on the warehouse premises a tank of sulphuric acid in the condition in which it was shown to be at the time of the injury, and which did not appear to be in its nature essentially and inherently a dangerous agency.

[1] There would seem to be no essential difference between the definition of the duty toward licensees by permission stated in the instruction covering the first cause of action in the Hansen Case and the definition respecting the same duty stated by the court in the Means Case. It will be noted that the instructions I and IV in the present case are predicated on the first instruction quoted from the Hansen Case. We cannot agree with the defendant's contention that the instructions here complained of incorporated the "attractive nuisance" doctrine of the turntable cases. The plaintiffs concede that the doctrine of attractive nuisances is not involved in this case, and the defendant's contention that the case was tried on that theory because of the form of the instructions is without merit on the record herein.

Research discloses that the rule of the Means Case is uniformly accepted as the general rule defining the duty of the owner of private premises to mere licensees, who are sometimes called "licensees by permission" as distinguished from licensees by invitation (see Holstine v. Director General of Railroads, 77 Ind. App. 582, 134 N. E. 303), and that the rule with reference to mere licensees is substantially the same as the rule respecting the duty which the proprietor owes to trespassers (see 45 C. J. p. 796 et seq.). But whether the duty is any greater toward persons who use, for their own convenience or purposes, the private right of way of a railroad company by its express or implied permission is a question on which the authorities are divided. We find that the rule suggested by the second instruction quoted from the Hansen Case, sometimes called the "intermediate rule" (see Palmer v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 34 Utah, 466, at page 480, 98 P. 689 [16 Ann. Cas. 229] citing Hansen v. Southern Pac. Co., supra, and cases from other jurisdictions), and within which the members of the class are sometimes called "licensees by invitation," has been adopted in a number of jurisdictions. It is, in fact, an exception to the general rule of the Means Case and is the application of the measure of ordinary care to persons entering private rights of way by permission, express or implied—a special class of licensees. The doctrine as to this class of licensees is stated generally by Mr. Thompson in his Commentaries on the Law of Negligence as follows: "Where the public for years have been accustomed to cross the track of a railway company upon a well-defined path, with the acquiescence of the company, although without its express license, a license to do so will be presumed, and persons so crossing to and fro are not, in a strict sense, trespassers, but are licensees, and the company is bound to take reasonable precautions to avoid injuring them. * * * We have seen that toward ordinary trespassers on railway tracks, the general doctrine is that the railway company owes no duty to keep a lookout, though judicial opinion is not uniform on this question; but where persons are upon a railway track with the license or invitation of the company, express or implied, it is under a duty to keep a lookout for them and to exercise ordinary care to discover them on the track, no less than to avoid injuring them after so discovering them. The doctrine applies to bridges, as well as to paths across or upon the railway tracks at other places." Thompson, Neg. vol. 2, § 1725.

A clear statement of the doctrine appears in St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Hodge, 53 Okl. 427, 157 P. 60, wherein many cases adopting the rule are cited and reviewed. It is there said: "Admittedly a railroad company has, as against trespassers, an exclusive right to the occupation and use of its tracks within its yards, as well as of its tracks at other points, and to persons trespassing it owes no duty except to avoid injuring them unnecessarily after they are discovered upon the premises. This right is essential to the operations of the company in carrying on its business, and no other or higher duty arises unless the facts show that the person injured is upon the tracks with the express or implied consent of the railroad company. If the person is a licensee, the company is obliged to use reasonable care to avoid injury to one sustaining that relation; the reason of the doctrine being that, where the company has the exclusive right to the use of its tracks, and has neither impliedly nor expressly licensed persons to be there, it has no reason to anticipate their presence, and consequently is under no obligation to be on the lookout, or to avoid injury to such persons. But, where they may be expected to be, and where an implied license has arisen from the conduct of the company, it is bound to use care commensurate with the circumstances to avoid injury to such persons. In such cases the company has imposed upon itself a precautionary duty which it is bound to discharge, or suffer the consequences. Whether the circumstances are such in a particular case as to give rise to this implied license is a question to be decided upon the facts as they may arise in each instance. Where it is claimed that no such license has been extended, and but one inference can be reasonably drawn from the circumstances, and that showing the person to be a trespasser, the question becomes one of law. Where, however, there is testimony showing that a license, either expressed or implied, arises from the circumstances, the question becomes one of fact, to be submitted under proper instructions to the jury; and the question therefore is: Was there such a situation shown as made it clear, as a matter of law, that the boy at the time of his injury was a trespasser, or had the circumstances given rise to such an implied license as made the question one to be submitted to the jury?"

A case often cited as the leading case in support of the doctrine is Barry v. New York Central, 92 N. Y. 289, 44 Am. Rep. 377. Many other cases are to the same effect. See, also, Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Austin, 63 Okl. 169, 163 P. 517, L. R. A. 1917D, 666; Byrne v. New York Central, 104 N. Y. 362, 10 N. E. 539, 58 Am. Rep. 512; Pomponio v. N. Y., New Haven & Hartford R. R. Co., 66 Conn. 528, 34 A. 491, 32 L. R. A. 530, 50 Am. St. Rep. 124; Grauer v. Alabama Great Southern R. Co., 209 Ala. 568, 96 So. 915; Hooker v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 76 Wis. 542, 44 N. W. 1085; Troy v. Cape Fear & Y. V. R. Co., 99 N. C. 298, 6 S. E. 77, 6 Am. St. Rep. 521; Lewis v. Rio Grande Western Ry. Co., 40 Utah, 483, 123 P. 97; Midland Valley R. Co. v. Kellogg, 106 Okl. 237, 233 P. 716; Taylor v. President, etc., of Delaware & H. Canal Co., 113 Pa. 162, 8 A. 43, 57 Am. Rep. 446; Keim v. Gilmore & P. R. Co., 23 Idaho, 511, 131 P. 656; 33 Cyc. p. 767, as in accord with the general doctrine stated; and Palmer v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 34 Utah, 466, 98 P. 689, 16 Ann. Cas. 229, for a discussion of the various doctrines governing the measure of care owed to trespassers and licensees.

The case of Felton v. Aubrey (C. C. A.) 74 F. 350, relied upon by the defendant, cites and reviews some of the cases adhering to the doctrine that there is no distinction between trespassers and implied licensees upon the railroad's right of way, and points out that these cases rest on the doctrine of the English cases touching the liability of the owner to those whom he suffers or permits to go upon or across his premises. Nevertheless, the rule which is approved in the case of Felton v. Aubrey is the rule to be deduced from Barry v. N. Y. Central Railroad Co., supra, and which is stated to be the following: "Nonliability to trespassers is predicated upon the right of the company to a clear track, upon which it is not bound to anticipate the presence of trespassers. It therefore comes under no duty to a trespasser until his presence and danger are observed. But if it has permitted the public for a long period of time to habitually and openly cross its track at a particular place, or use the track as a pathway between particular localities, it cannot say that it was not bound to anticipate the presence of such persons on its track, and was therefore not under obligation to operate its trains with any regard to the safety of those there by its license. * * * The rule we deduce from the cases best reasoned and most consistent with sound public policy is this: If the evidence shows that the public had for a long period of time, customarily and constantly, openly and notoriously, crossed a railway track at a place not a public highway, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the company, a license or permission by the company to all persons to cross the track at that point may be presumed." Felton v. Aubrey, supra, pages 359, 360 of 74 F., citing Barry v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 92 N. Y. 289, 44 Am. Rep. 377, and other cases.

Cases which go to the extreme of holding that a lookout is required at all times and places are cited in Palmer v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., supra, at pages 482, 483 of 34 Utah (98 P. 689).

[2] Whatever doubt may be indulged with reference to the propriety of imposing liability on a railroad company for a breach of ordinary care toward persons using without objection its private right of way for their own purposes in thinly populated districts at points which are not established public crossings, unless the user is so open, notorious, and continuous as required by the rule announced in Felton v. Aubrey and Barry v. N. Y. Central Railroad Co., supra, we are convinced that in a populous and metropolitan area, as in the case before us, the interests of the public have uniformly outweighed the claim of railroad companies to the exclusive use of their rights of way unobstructed. Within city limits and other populous districts the courts have applied the measure of ordinary care in situations where trains are operated through such districts in a way calculated or likely to inflict injury on persons whom the company should expect may be on or near its right of way. The case of Imler v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 89 Wash. 527, 154 P. 1086, L. R. A. 1916D, 702, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 933, is an instance where the court refused to apply the rule of ordinary care to a licensee walking on a footpath along the railroad's right of way in the country, and wherein cases which imposed the higher duty of ordinary care toward licensees were distinguished in the following language: "These cases, like many that might be cited, are either crossing cases or cases from cities and towns where population is congested and the public have been accustomed to cross the tracks or to use them as a thoroughfare. Recoveries are allowed in such cases because a higher duty rests upon a railroad company under such circumstances." In Palmer v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., supra, at pages 480, 481 of 34 Utah (98 P. 695), is this language: "It is not necessary, however, that the track must be used so extensively and for such a length of time as to establish a license by implication before a railroad company may be required to keep a reasonable lookout for persons on the track. In this regard much depends upon the place and surrounding conditions and circumstances. It may be that in a populous city, or in smaller towns and villages where persons habitually have recourse to and pass over or along the railroad tracks in considerable numbers and at a particular place or places for a much shorter time than is required to establish a license, the railroad company may still be required to exercise reasonable care for their safety and warn them of the approach of trains, although they are trespassers. But in such cases the use must be such as to apprise the railroad company through its employees that the track is being used for such purposes and by a considerable number of persons continuously (not occasionally merely), and with some degree of regularity and habitually. In this latter class of cases it is a question of fact for the jury to say whether, under all the circumstances, the company has exercised ordinary care in view of the facts and conditions prevailing. It does not follow, however, that because a few persons once or twice a week walk on the railroad track in a sparsely settled country district it is for the jury to say whether or not the railroad company discharged its legal duty in keeping a lookout for trespassers. It does not follow that because there is an occasional trespass it will be repeated." For other cases following this rule generally, see Alabama Great So. R. Co. v. Guest, 136 Ala. 348, 34 So. 968; Savannah & W. R. Co. v. Meadors, 95 Ala. 137, 10 So. 141; Doyle v. Portland Ry., Light & Power Co., 71 Or. 576, 143 P. 623; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Marlow, 169 Ky. 140, 183 S. W. 470; also Thompson, Negligence, vol. 2. § 1726.

[3] Unquestionably, whether the operation of a train, with an arm, timber, or other object not a proper and permanent portion of the train which the employés knew or should have known was projecting in a manner likely to injure persons whom the company should expect to be on or near its tracks, amounts to a breach of care, is properly a question for the jury. In the following cases it was so held, and the evidence was deemed sufficient to sustain the jury's finding of negligence: St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. of Texas v. Balthrop (Tex. Civ. App.) 167 S. W. 246; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas v. Scarborough, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 194, 68 S. W. 196, and Chesapeake & O. Co. v. Davis (Ky.) 58 S. W. 698; Id., 119 Ky. 641, 60 S. W. 14, wherein the court stated: "To run a train through a populous city, with an iron swinging in and out, as this was shown to be, was necessarily to endanger those on the highway along which it passed, and was evidence from which the jury might properly infer negligence." Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v Shadden (Tex. Civ App.) 185 S. W. 629; Pruitt v. Southern R. Co., 167 N. C. 246, 83 S. E. 350; Brown-Scott v. Davis, 216 Mo. App. 530, 270 S. W. 433; Chapman v. Davis (Mo. App.) 287 S. W. 832.

[4-6] As a conclusion from the various rules and doctrines discussed by the cases, it is important to discover whether the plaintiff is a trespasser or a licensee as bearing on the question of his contributory negligence. See Illinois Cent. R. Co. v Eicher, 100 Ill. App. at page 601. If he is a trespasser, he is contributorily negligent in being on the tracks or right of way where he has no right to be, and must expect only that the defendant will not recklessly injure him. If he is on or near the tracks by what the courts have termed an implied license or invitation, he is not necessarily negligent in being there, and the railroad company owes him a higher degree of care. In cases where the evidence is conflicting, it is for the jury to decide whether the plaintiff is a licensee or a trespasser, and whether under the particular circumstances the defendant owed him a duty of care which it failed to exercise by reason whereof plaintiff was injured without fault on his part.

[7-9] It was therefore immaterial here whether the injured plaintiff was an infant or an adult, if the jury could find from the evidence that the defendant should have expected his presence at the place where he was at the time of the injury and could also find that the defendant's employés were negligent in the operation of its train over the portion of the right of way in question. Infancy would be material only on the question of contributory negligence. See Felton v. Aubrey, supra; Palmer v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., supra. The evidence on behalf of the plaintiffs, if taken as true, makes out a case of negligence on the part of the defendant which was the proximate cause of the injury. The fact that defendant's witnesses testified that they inspected the train before leaving Culver Junction and found no projection cannot overcome the inferential finding of negligence in the matter of inspection. See Pruitt v. Southern Ry. Co., 167 N. C. 246, 83 S. E. 350; Brown-Scott v. Davis, 216 Mo. App. 530, 270 S. W. 433; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Carr, 94 Ark. 246, 126 S. W. 850.

[10] The instructions, the rejection of which is complained of by the defendant, were not in accord with the principles herein concluded to be applicable and were properly refused by the trial court.

The cases cited by the defendant are not controlling. In Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Wade (Ky.) 36 S. W. 1125, on which the defendant specially relies, it was held that there was no evidence of a license or permission to the 14-year old plaintiff to be between the rails of a switch when he was struck by a projecting timber which was not shown to have been there through any gross negligence of the defendant. In Carr v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 195 Mo. 214, 92 S. W. 874, the questions whether the plaintiff was a licensee or a trespasser and whether he was injured by a flying brakeshoe from a passing train through defendant's negligence were left to the jury, which found for the defendant, although the Supreme Court of Missouri indicated that it would apply to mere licensees on a commonly used footpath the same rule as applied to trespassers. In Thomas v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co., 127 Ky. 159, 105 S. W. 379, the plaintiff, who was standing near the defendant's tracks in the country, was struck by a coalgate which fell off the train as it passed her. The Court of Appeals of Kentucky pointed out that the defendant was not under the duty to anticipate plaintiff's presence at the place where she was at the time of the injury and the defendant was not recklessly or wantonly negligent. In Toomey v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 86 Cal. 374, 24 P. 1074, 10 L. R. A. 139, the deceased was a trespasser without any right to be where he was when struck.

The instructions given and objected to by the defendant involved only one theory of the case. The record shows that the instructions as a whole were not unfavorable to the defendant on the proper theory of the case, and, as no error appears, the judgment is affirmed.

SYMONS et al. v. WOODEN et al. (Civ. 3590.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 19, 1929.

1. Evidence 🔑222(2)—Defendant's statement to plaintiffs, after automobile collision, regarding insurance, and that surety company would pay repair bill, was material as admission against interest.

Defendant's statement to plaintiffs, after automobile collision, "Don't pay any of the damages, we are carrying insurance, we are fully protected, don't pay the repair bill, present your bill to the surety company, it will be paid," was material as an admission against interest.

2. Appeal and error 🔑201(2)—In automobile collision case, court's remarks, regarding plenty of room for automobiles to pass, not objected to, held not prejudicial.

In automobile collision case, court's remark, while defendants were endeavoring to prove width of wagon tires on side of highway, and distance which hub caps protruded into highway as follows, "Of course, I don't know—on the testimony, you never have shown but what there was plenty of room for automobiles to pass there. I don't know what it is all about, plenty of room for automobiles to pass, you all agree," to which no objection was made at time, held not prejudicial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action for damages resulting from an automobile collision by Fred Symons and another against J. H. Wooden and another. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Everts, Ewing, Wild & Everts, A. W. Carlson, Frederick W. Docker, all of Fresno, and H. K. Landram, of Merced, for appellants.

F. W. Henderson, of Merced, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. The complaint alleges damages sustained in an automobile collision caused by the negligence of the defendants as follows: Damage to plaintiffs' automobile $573.15; loss of use of the automobile for 16 days, $80, and damage to a tire and tube, $20.85. Verdict and judgment went for the plaintiffs for the total amount demanded, and the defendants have appealed.

[1] In his opening statement to the jury counsel for the plaintiffs stated that at a time subsequent to the collision the plaintiffs informed defendant Hanby of the amount of the damage to their automobile, and that Hanby replied: "Don't pay any of the damages, we are carrying insurance, we are fully protected, don't pay the repair bill, present your bill to the surety company, it will be paid." Evidence to the same effect was introduced. Defendants made no objection to the opening statement or to the evidence referred to when it was offered. Objection was first made when counsel for the plaintiffs commented on such evidence in his argument to the jury. The court instructed the jury: "That you are not concerned with the matter or fact of whether the defendants did or did not carry liability insurance, * * * and it is your duty to determine the liability of the defendants in this case independently of and without consideration of, their being insured, or not being insured." In his argument to the jury, counsel for plaintiffs stated that Hanby's statement was material as an admission against interest. The decisions support this contention. Lahti v. McMenamin (Cal. Sup.) 268 P. 644; Dullanty v. Smith (Cal. Sup.) 265 P. 814; McPhee v. Lavin, 183 Cal. 264, 191 P. 23.

[2] At the place where the collision occurred there was a water wagon on one side of the highway, the wheels of which on one side thereof extended a few inches inside the edge of the pavement, and another obstruction covered a few inches of the other side of the pavement, the space through which the two automobiles had to pass being narrowed accordingly, although such space was somewhat greater than the combined widths of the two automobiles. While defendants were endeavoring to prove the width of the wagon tires and the distance which the hub caps protruded into the highway, the court said: "Of course, I don't know—on the testimony, you never have shown but what there was plenty of room for automobiles to pass there. I don't know what it is all about, plenty of room for automobiles to pass, you all agree?"

Appellants contend that such statement of the court constituted prejudicial misconduct. No objection was made at the time, however. No exception was taken by the defendants, and no request was made for an instruction to the jury to disregard the statement. Under the circumstances stated, it cannot be held that the statement of the court was of such a prejudicial character as to require a reversal of the judgment.

Appellants contend that error was committed in the manner of proving that the plaintiffs suffered damage in the sum of $80 on account of the loss of the use of their automobile during the 16 days required to repair it. It is further urged that the evidence does not show liability on the part of defendant Wooden, who was driving the automobile in which both of the defendants were riding at the time of the collision. Both of these contentions are so obviously without merit that no discussion thereof is considered necessary. The implied findings of the jury on these issues are amply supported by competent evidence, and, if there was any technical error in the introduction of evidence, the defendants suffered no possible prejudice on account thereof.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. POST. (Cr. 1745.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 14, 1929.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court March 14, 1929.

1. Homicide 🔑342—Defendant cannot complain of manslaughter verdict on evidence warranting conviction of murder.

Where the evidence is sufficient to sustain a conviction of murder, defendant has no grounds for complaining that jury returned a verdict of manslaughter.

2. Criminal law 🔑823(15)—Instruction to decide whether circumstances are sufficiently consistent with innocence to raise reasonable doubt held harmless, in view of other instructions.

In murder trial, instruction that jury must decide whether circumstances are reasonably consistent with any other conclusion than defendant's guilt and sufficiently so to raise reasonable doubt held harmless, if erroneous as requiring that circumstances be of sufficient weight to raise reasonable doubt of guilt before he could be acquitted because of facts or circumstances apparently consistent with innocence, where other instructions emphasized law that accused should be acquitted unless his guilt were proven beyond every reasonable doubt, exclusive of every reasonable hypothesis of innocence.

3. Criminal law 🔑814(8, 9)—Instruction that when killing is proved, defendant must show circumstances in mitigation, excuse, or justification held erroneous as inapplicable (Pen. Code, § 1105).

In murder trial, instruction, based on Pen. Code, § 1105, that when killing is proved, it devolves on defendant to show any circumstances in mitigation, excuse, or justification by preponderance of evidence held erroneous as inapplicable to situation presented by evidence supporting defendant's contention that he was not responsible for decedent's death, but that she caused her own death by grabbing steering wheel of automobile being driven by defendant.

4. Criminal law 🔑1172(6)—Instruction that when killing is proved, defendant must show circumstances in mitigation, excuse, or justification held harmless, though inapplicable.

Instruction in murder trial that, when killing is proved, it devolves on defendant to show circumstances in mitigation, excuse, or justification by preponderance of evidence, held not prejudicial to defendant, though inapplicable to situation presented by evidence in support of his contention that he was not responsible for killing.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Shelley J. Higgins, Judge.

Ralph N. Post was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Edgar B. Hervey, of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and John D. Richer, of Los Angeles, for the People.

HOUSER, J. On a charge of the commission by him of the crime of murder, defendant was convicted of the crime of manslaughter. He appeals from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

From the evidence the jury would have been justified in concluding that, among other things, the following facts were established: Some time prior to the date on which the tragedy occurred which resulted in her death, the deceased and defendant (who was a married man) were illicitly living together as husband and wife. Although up to the time of her death defendant was frequently in the company of the deceased, the inference is strong that the deceased was endeavoring to discontinue her relationship with defendant, and that by reason thereof defendant was jealous of her and made various statements concerning her, such as, "She is trying to get away from me, but I will kill her. If I can't have her, nobody else will." The evidence shows that on the day on which the homicide occurred, beginning as early as 10 o'clock a. m. thereof, and almost continuously thereafter until about 8 o'clock p. m. of that day, at which latter time the deceased met her death, the deceased and defendant were in each other's company, during a considerable portion of which time they were riding together in an automobile operated by defendant; that while so engaged with defendant, and on at least two different occasions, the deceased indicated to third persons that she was being mistreated by defendant, and shouted, "Help! help! he is killing me." At that time blood was seen by such persons on the left side of the face and on the bare legs of the deceased. Within a few minutes thereafter defendant drove the automobile onto a pier in San Diego bay, the lights of the automobile were "switched off," and the automobile went over the side of the pier into about 35 or 40 feet of water. Defendant was rescued, but the body of his woman companion was not recovered until some 45 minutes later, at which time life was extinct. Physical examination of the deceased showed "a severe bruise around the left eye * * * about four inches in diameter; * * * laceration on the back of the scalp and more marked bruises on the body; * * * slight blood clot under dura mater; and fine pinpoint hemorrhages throughout brain." The lungs were completely filled with water. In the opinion of three doctors the woman was unconscious at the time the automobile went into the bay.

The defense consisted of a specific denial of each of the foregoing incriminating facts. Defendant testified that immediately preceding the accident, as the auto approached the edge of the pier, "it struck something or dropped; and that apparently scared Mrs. Simpson; she frantically grabbed the steering wheel with both hands very forcibly, and before I had time to do anything at all we were going over the edge of the pier."

[1] The first point presented by appellant is that, since "the prosecution's evidence proved murder or nothing," the evidence was insufficient to support a verdict of manslaughter. The authorities of this state are to the contrary, and generally to the effect that where the evidence is sufficient to sustain a conviction of the crime of murder, the defendant has no grounds for complaining that the jury returned a verdict for a lesser offense. People v. Muhlner, 115 Cal. 303, 47 P. 128; People v. Huntington, 8 Cal. App. 612, 97 P. 760; People v. Cyty, 11 Cal. App. 702, 106 P. 257; People v. Herges, 14 Cal. App. 273, 111 P. 624; People v. Cramley, 23 Cal. App. 340, 138 P. 123; People v. Kelley, 24 Cal. App. 54, 140 P. 302; People v. Tugwell, 32 Cal. App. 520, 163 P. 508; People v. Hamilton, 49 Cal. App. 30, 192 P. 467.

[2] Appellant complains of an instruction given by the court to the jury at the request of the prosecution which contained the following statement of the law: "* * * The true rule is that the jury must decide whether or not the circumstances are in fact reasonably consistent with any other conclusion than defendant's guilt and sufficiently so to raise a reasonable doubt of his guilt. * * *"

It is urged that the meaning to be attributed to such language is that before defendant could be acquitted by reason of facts or circumstances which apparently were consistent with his innocence, such facts and circumstances must be of sufficient weight "to raise a reasonable doubt of his guilt."

In other instructions to the jury the law was emphasized that the accused should be found not guilty unless the fact of his guilt were proven beyond every reasonable doubt, exclusive of every reasonable hypothesis of his innocence. In still further instructions the point was repeated that under no circumstances could defendant be convicted unless his guilt were established beyond a reasonable doubt. It is therefore clear that the ambiguity (if any reasonably could be said to exist) in the language of the criticised instruction was corrected so that no possible harm resulted to defendant by reason of the language to which attention has been directed.

[3] Appellant also attacks the following instruction given by the court to the jury: "You are instructed that up to the moment when the killing is proved the prosecution must make out its case beyond any reasonable doubt. When the killing is proved, it devolves upon the defendant to show any circumstances in mitigation to excuse or justify by a preponderance of evidence on his part. That is, the killing being proved, the defendant must make out his case in mitigation to excuse or justify by some proof stronger in some appreciable degree than the proof of the prosecution. The burden of proof changes. It must be in some degree, no matter how small, stronger than the proof of the prosecution on the other side."

On the ground that such an instruction requires the defendant to establish his defense by a preponderance of the evidence and is in opposition to and inconsistent with the general rule of law to the effect that the defendant is entitled to an acquittal if by the evidence a reasonable doubt is raised as to his guilt, it has been condemned and held prejudicially erroneous in each of the following cases: People v. Bushton, 80 Cal. 160, 22 P. 127, 549; People v. Elliott, 80 Cal. 296, 22 P. 207; People v. Roe, 189 Cal. 548, 209 P. 560.

Section 1105 of the Penal Code is the basis for the instruction in question. With the exception that the statute is lacking in any requirement as to the quantum of proof, the principle of law announced in the questioned instruction appears to be similar to that provided by the statute. But on consideration of the instruction it will be noticed that its provision is that "when the killing is proved, it devolves upon the defendant to show any circumstances in mitigation," or which will either "excuse" or "justify" the act. Necessarily, such defenses presuppose either the actual or the inferential admission by the defendant of the fact that he did the killing. If he deny the homicide, nothing is presented upon which the words of the statute may operate so far as the defendant is concerned. As to any act committed by him, there is nothing to "mitigate" or "excuse" or "justify."

In the instant case it will be remembered that the position assumed by defendant was that he was in nowise responsible for the tragedy; that he was neither negligent nor culpable with relation to the death of the woman who was riding with him in the automobile; and that she caused her own death by "frantically" grabbing the steering wheel of the automobile and causing it to run off the pier into the deep water of the bay. It is thus made manifest that the defensive theory advanced by defendant was wholly inconsistent with either "mitigation," by the operation of which a lesser verdict than murder in either the first or the second degree might be anticipated, or with either the statutory "excuse" or "justification" for the homicide—from which it inevitably results that neither the provision of the statute nor the instruction in question had any application to the situation presented by the evidence.

In the case of People v. Miller, 177 Cal. 404, 170 P. 817, where the defendant was accused of the crime of murder, and where he offered no evidence in his defense, an instruction was given to the jury to the effect that: "When the killing is proved it devolves upon the defendant to show any circumstances in mitigation to excuse or justify the homicide by evidence on his part." It was held that: "* * * While inapplicable to the case for the reason that no circumstances of mitigation or excuse are shown or even suggested, the defense being a denial of the killing by the accused, no possible injury therefrom could result to defendant." Likewise, in People v. Tapia, 131 Cal. 647, 63 P. 1001, an instruction similar in many respects to the instruction here under consideration (but also containing additional objectionable matter) was held inapplicable—the court saying that the part thereof taken from section 1105 of the Penal Code, to which reference has been had herein, "is applicable only when a defendant sets up circumstances of mitigation, excuse, or justification of an admitted or proved homicide." To the same effect is People v. Roe, 189 Cal. 548, 209 P. 560.

[4] The inapplicability of the attacked instruction to the situation here presented being thus established, its effect, if any, upon the rights of defendant, remains for consideration. As hereinbefore noted, on the authority of People v. Tapia, 131 Cal. 647, 63 P. 1001, the case of People v. Miller, 177 Cal. 404, 409, 170 P. 817, is direct authority that in such circumstances "no possible injury" could result to defendant from the giving of such instruction.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

WHITE v. WHITE. (Civ. 3733.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 14, 1929.

Divorce ⚷221—Court had no jurisdiction to grant attorney's fees to wife in divorce action after services had been rendered.

Where no counsel fees were asked for by wife during pendency of trial of divorce action, court had no jurisdiction to grant attorney's fees after services had been rendered.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. Walter Hanby, Judge.

Action by Homer H. White against Henrietta White. From that portion of an interlocutory decree awarding counsel fees and alimony in divorce action, plaintiff appeals. Modified and affirmed.

E. C. Jennings, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Eugene A. Tucker, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from that portion of an interlocutory decree of divorce awarding the respondent counsel fees and alimony upon her cross-complaint. The interlocutory decree granted the respondent a divorce, alimony and counsel fees in the sum of $100. The record shows that no counsel fees were asked for during the pendency of the trial, and not until after the termination thereof, when the court in its findings found that $100 was a reasonable amount to be paid by the plaintiff to the defendant as and for her counsel fees, and the same was written into the interlocutory decree of divorce. So far as the award of alimony or maintenance is concerned, we will pass that by with the simple statement that the court had jurisdiction to award the same. As to the allowance of counsel fees, the respondent relies upon the case of Newlands v. Superior Court of Los Angeles, 171 Cal. 741, 154 P. 829. The facts set out in the opinion in that case show, however, that it is wholly inapplicable to the case at bar. In the Newlands Case a stipulation was entered into to the effect that the court might, upon final determination of the cause, fix the amount of attorney's fees. In the case at bar, as we have said, no application was made during the pendency of the action, and the allowance appears to have been made after the services were rendered. In such cases it has been uniformly held that the court has no jurisdiction to grant attorney's fees; in other words, that the court has no jurisdiction to make an allowance for attorney's fees after the services have been rendered. Lacey v. Lacey, 108 Cal. 45, 40 P. 1056; Stampfli v. Stampfli, 53 Cal. App. 126, 199 P. 829; Loveren v. Loveren, 100 Cal. 494, 35 P. 87; Wickland v. Wickland, 19 Cal. App. 562, 126 P. 507; Sheppard v. Sheppard, 15 Cal. App. 619, 115 P. 751; Smith v. Superior Court in and for Yuba County (Cal. App.) 264 P. 573. The question presented in the case at bar relative to attorney's fees is precisely similar to the question passed upon by this court in Stampfli v. Stampfli, supra.

The judgment of the trial court is modified by striking therefrom the allowance of $100 as and for attorney's fees. In other respects the judgment is affirmed. Costs awarded the respondent.

In re GREGSON'S ESTATE. (Civ. 3713.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 14, 1929.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 15, 1929.

1. Descent and distribution ⇐82—Contract between widow and children of intestate for division of his property held void for want of consideration, where entire estate consisted of community property (Civ. Code, §§ 1401, 1550).

Where entire estate of husband dying intestate consisted of community property, to which title was vested in widow, under Civ. Code, § 1401, contract between widow and surviving children, entered into after husband's death, whereby widow was to have certain real estate and residue of property was to be equally divided between widow and children, held void for want of consideration, under section 1550.

2. Executors and administrators ⇐303(2)—Distribution to assignees of heirs or legatees is authorized only where assignment is admitted and validity thereof not disputed (Code Civ. Proc. § 1678).

Distribution of share of estate to assignee is authorized under Code Civ. Proc. § 1678, only where assignments or conveyances of interests of heirs or legatees are admitted and there is no dispute as to their validity, but, where validity of conveyance or assignment is contested, resort must be had to the courts.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; D. M. Young, Judge.

Proceeding for the distribution of the estate of William F. Gregson, deceased. From a decree of distribution awarding all the property to the surviving wife, Mary A. Gregson, the surviving children of deceased appeal. Affirmed.

A. H. Carpenter, of Stockton, for appellant.

George E. Frioux, of Stockton, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. This is an appeal from a decree of distribution awarding all the property of the deceased to Mary A. Gregson, the surviving wife.

The record shows that William F. Gregson died intestate in the county of San Joaquin, on or about December 3, 1926, leaving as his widow Mary A. Gregson, and the following children by a former marriage: Mary Alice Gann, J. Henry Gregson, William A. Gregson, and Carrie Katberg. The record likewise shows that the estate left by the deceased was all community property of himself and his surviving wife, and was of a value less than $10,000. The widow, declining to act as administratrix, nominated D. F. Mackey, who was thereupon appointed by the court to act as administrator.

[1, 2] The record shows that some time after the death of William F. Gregson, deceased, a writing relative to the distribution of the property of the estate of said deceased was signed by the widow and the children of the deceased herein named. After certain preliminary recitals, which are not necessary to set forth herein, the agreement provides that there shall be distributed "to Mary A. Gregson, surviving wife of said deceased, that certain lot, piece or parcel of land situate in the City of Stockton, County of San Joaquin, State of California, bounded and particularly described as follows, to-wit:" (Here follows description of the real estate.) The writing then provides the further distribution as follows: "All the residue of said estate, of whatever kind and nature, shall be distributed, one-half to Mary A. Gregson, and the other half, in equal shares, to Mary Alice Gann, J. Henry Gregson, William A. Gregson and Carrie Katberg, surviving children of said deceased." Upon petition of the administrator of the estate, the whole thereof was distributed to Mary A. Gregson, the surviving wife. From this decree of distribution, the children appeal.

The record shows, without controversy, that the whole of the estate consisted of community property of the said William F. Gregson, deceased, and his surviving wife, Mary A. Gregson, and that, under the provisions of section 1401 of the Civil Code, vested in the surviving wife.

The controversy in the trial court arose over the validity of the writing to which we have referred. The respondent admits that the authorities cited by the appellants relative to contracts, agreements, and conveyances between heirs correctly state the law, but contends that none of them are pertinent to this case. With this contention we must agree. The contract shows upon its face that no consideration passed from the children to Mary A. Gregson; the record likewise shows that no consideration was paid by the children or given by the children to Mary A. Gregson, as a basis for the transfer of any part of her interest in said estate to the appellants. Section 1550 of the Civil Code requires that every contract must be supported by a consideration. In the case at bar, the writing has for its support neither a good nor a valuable consideration. It may be further added that, while section 1678 of the Code of Civil Procedure authorized distribution to assignees, this section applies only when the assignments or conveyances are admitted, and there is no dispute as to their validity. The record shows that the validity of the writing in this case was disputed in the court below. In such case resort must be had to the proper tribunal. 12 Cal. Juris. 191; Est. of Howe, 161 Cal. 152, 118 P. 515; 24 Cal. Juris. 524; 12 Cal. Juris. 206. That a want of consideration renders a contract unenforceable, see 6 Cal. Juris. 166, § 115.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

HOWE et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR SACRAMENTO COUNTY et al. (Civ. 3745.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 15, 1929.

1. Certiorari ⚷33(2)—Witnesses, who are not parties to action, were not entitled to review order requiring answers to interrogatories (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1069, 1991).

Witnesses, who were not parties to action in which testimony was to be used, were not entitled, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1069, in subsequent proceeding in certiorari, to review order of trial court directing them to answer interrogatories, pursuant to section 1991.

2. Certiorari ⚷16—Certiorari will not lie, except from final determination.

Petition for certiorari will not lie, except from final determination of proceeding involved.

3. Certiorari ⚷16—Order requiring parties to answer questions propounded in taking of depositions was not final disposition warranting writ of review (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2031, 2032).

Order requiring parties to action to answer questions propounded to them, in taking of depositions incident to litigation in accordance with provisions of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2031, 2032, is not such final disposition of competency or relevancy of the evidence as to warrant the issuing of a writ of review, in that, where objections to evidence are preserved during taking of deposition, it will not be assumed that trial judge will improperly rule thereon when evidence is offered at trial.

4. Certiorari ⚷9—Certiorari is extraordinary remedy, issuing of which rests in sound discretion of court.

Writ of certiorari is an extraordinary remedy equitable in its nature, the issuing of which rests in sound discretion of the court.

Original application for certiorari by S. Luke Howe and others against the Superior Court in and for the County of Sacramento, and Hon. Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge of such court. Writ denied.

Howe, Hibbitt & Johnston and O. F. Meldon, all of Sacramento, for petitioners.

Reisner & Deming, of San Francisco, McLaughlin & McLaughlin, of Sacramento, and J. J. Posner and Louis Ferrari, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

THOMPSON, J. This is an application for a writ of certiorari to review the order of the trial judge directing certain witnesses to answer interrogatories which were propounded upon the taking of depositions before a notary public.

The petition alleges that an action for money had and received was pending in the superior court of the county of Sacramento. The complaint in that action was couched in the simple form of assumpsit. No specific fund was described in the complaint, or sought to be recovered. All of the defendants in that action appear as petitioners in this proceeding. Certain other witnesses, who are not parties to that action, also join as petitioners herein. Prior to the trial of that case a notice to take the depositions of these petitioners before a notary public was given. In the taking of these depositions, on the advice of counsel, each of these witnesses refused to answer questions which sought to elicit information regarding the existence and disposition of a joint bank account, assumed to be owned and held by Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Parker, and which the questions infer was transferred or disposed of by them to the defendants. These questions were objected to on the ground that they were incompetent. The relevancy of this bank account to the issues of the suit in assumpsit does not appear. Subsequently, upon notice of such refusal to answer the interrogatories, pursuant to section 1991 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the trial judge directed the witnesses to answer the questions. Thereupon this petition for a writ of review was presented to this court.

[1] It appears that the petitioners Mary Helen Parker and Jack W. Parker, her husband, were not parties to the action for money had and received, incident to which the depositions were being taken; they were strangers to that record, and are therefore not entitled to review the order of the trial court in this proceeding of certiorari. Section 1069, Code Civ. Proc.; Elliott v. Superior Court, 144 Cal. 501, 508, 77 P. 1109 (103 Am. St. Rep. 102); Tingley v. Superior Court, 8 Cal. App. 47, 96 P. 20.

[2, 3] A petition for certiorari will not lie, except from the final determination of the proceeding involved. 4 Cal. Jur. 1041, § 16. An order requiring parties to an action to answer questions propounded to them in the taking of a deposition incident to the litigation pending is not such final disposition of the competency or relevancy of the evidence as to warrant the issuing of a writ of review. The taking of depositions as provided by sections 2031 and 2032 of the Code of Civil Procedure is for the purpose of preserving and using the evidence at the trial "subject to all legal exceptions." The preliminary rulings respecting the competency of the evidence, rendered upon the taking of the deposition, are in no sense final or conclusive. Where the objections to the evidence are preserved at the taking of the deposition, it will not be assumed the trial judge will improperly rule upon the objections when the evidence is offered at the trial. Moreover, there is no assurance that the depositions will ever be presented or used at the trial. In the event that the depositions are offered at the trial, and that the court should erroneously and adversely rule against the plaintiffs with respect to the admission of the evidence, they have their remedy by appeal. No contempt proceedings have been threatened. Assuming, however, that the petitioners might be cited to appear before the trial court for persistent refusal to answer the challenged interrogatories, they would then have their remedy. Commercial Bank v. Superior Court, 192 Cal. 395, 220 P. 422; Drew v. Superior Court, 43 Cal. App. 651, 185 P. 680. At the present stage of these proceedings, a writ of certiorari is premature. The case of Commercial Bank v. Superior Court, supra, relied upon by the petitioners, was a writ of prohibition. One of the reasons that writ was granted was because an order to produce correspondence was "too general in its terms to be capable of enforcement." That case is not authority for the issuing of a writ of certiorari under circumstances similar to the present proceeding.

[4] The writ of certiorari is an extraordinary remedy, equitable in its nature, the issuing of which rests in the sound discretion of the court. 2 Spelling on Extraordinary Remedies, 1646, § 1906; 5 R. C. L. 254, § 6; 11 C. J. 128, § 78; Keys v. Marin County, 42 Cal. 252; Birch v. Board of Supervisors, 191 Cal. 235, 215 P. 903. To authorize one to resort to this extraordinary remedy to correct mere errors in the admission of evidence in the taking of a deposition would lead to untold mischief, and would obstruct the usual course of procedure.

It is apparent that the order complained of is not final or conclusive, and that the writ should therefore be denied.

It is so ordered.

GROFF et al. v. RECLAMATION DISTRICT NO. 108. MYERS v. SAME. BROWNING v. SAME. (Civ. 3594–3596.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 16, 1929.

Rehearing Denied in Civ. 3595 March 16, 1929.

1. Eminent domain 🔑280—Landowner, granting right of way for irrigation canal cannot recover damages for natural injury from seepage.

Landowner, granting right of way, as for irrigation canal, estops himself to sue for past, present, or future damages, occurring or reasonably to be expected, by reason of necessary, natural, and ordinary use of utility or public service for which granted, including natural, reasonably to be anticipated, and ordinary injury to adjacent land from seepage.

2. Waters and water courses 🔑263—Instruction to find for defendant held proper, in absence of evidence that toe ditch was contemplated before conveyance of right of way or would have prevented damage to crops by seepage.

In absence of evidence that any plans for toe drainage ditch were adopted or contemplated at time of or before conveyance of right of way for irrigation canal, or that such ditch would have prevented damages to crops from seepage, court properly instructed jury to find for defendant in actions for such damages as alleged result of failure to construct such ditch before suits were commenced.

3. Waters and water courses 🔑263—Plaintiff, testifying that toe ditch increased seepage complained of, could not recover damages for delay in constructing it.

Plaintiff, testifying, in action for damages to land by seepage from irrigation canal, that toe drainage ditch, built after commencement of action, did not stop seepage, but made it greater, could not recover damages because of defend-

4. Eminent domain ⚿271—Landowner, granting right of way for irrigation canal, cannot recover damages for harmless departures from contemplated plan.

Landowner, granting right of way for irrigation canal, on understanding that particular type of ditch shall be installed, can sue for any damage caused by subsequent change of construction, but cannot recover for any departure from contemplated plan which caused no damage.

Appeal from Superior Court, Colusa County; Ernest Weyand, Judge.

Actions by W. R. Groff and another, Earl Myers, and J. W. Browning, respectively, against Reclamation District No. 108. Judgments for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Seth Millington, of Gridley, for appellants.
Huston, Huston & Huston, of Sacramento, and Thomas Rutledge, of Colusa, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The first two of the above-entitled actions were tried together, and, at the close of the evidence, the court instructed the jury to return verdicts in both cases in favor of the defendant. On the return of such verdicts, judgments were entered thereon in favor of the defendant. The last of the three actions was tried before the court without a jury, but upon the evidence introduced in the other cases and additional evidence taken after the rendition of such verdicts. Findings and judgment went in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiffs in all three actions have appealed on a single record, and the appeals have been argued together.

Plaintiff Browning is the owner of agricultural lands within the defendant district, and the other plaintiffs are his tenants. In the year 1918 an irrigation canal was constructed by the defendant through Browning's land, and water has been conducted through the canal for irrigation during every season since 1919. Browning, who was a trustee of the defendant at the time the plans for the canal were adopted, and had theretofore had extensive experience in reclamation work, executed deeds, after the construction of the canal, conveying to the defendant "an easement and right of way for the construction, repair, improvement and maintenance of a canal and banks, for conducting and flowing water therein, with the right to flow and have flow water therein from whatever source and whether naturally flowing therein or artificially conducted or brought thereto, and whether drainage, seepage, rain, flood water, or water for or from irrigation, over, along and across the following tract, strip or parcel of land." This is followed by a particular description of the right of way. The lands involved in these actions lie adjacent to the canal.

Plaintiffs Groff sue for alleged damages to their crops during the seasons of 1923, 1924, and 1925, caused by seepage water from the canal. Plaintiff Myers sues for damages similarly caused to his crops of 1924 and 1925. They held under yearly leases executed during the years mentioned. Plaintiff Browning sues for alleged damages to the land itself caused by the seepage, and for an injunction.

[1] Browning testified that most of the land is "tule land; used to be tule land, and of course that is porous soil and had high tule there, very high. * * * Allows the water to pass along it sometimes for o[illegible] miles." Under such circumstances, [illegible] seepage of water from the canal m[illegible] been foreseen by all experienced pers[illegible] were familiar with the facts.

"Whenever a grant of a right of w[illegible]ecuted by a landowner he thereby e[illegible]self from afterward prosecuting a[illegible] for the past, present, or future da[illegible] may have occurred, or reasonably [illegible] to occur, by reason of the necess[illegible] and ordinary use of the utility or [illegible]ice for which the right of wa[illegible]d. And this includes the natural, [illegible]y to be anticipated, and ordinary in[illegible] resulting to adjacent land from seepage, [illegible] land is of a character that admits of [illegible]y be reasonably expected to admit of [illegible] action of the waters taking place." St[illegible]rnes v. Sutter Butte Canal Co., 61 Cal. App. 737, 743, 216 P. 66. See, also, Yolo Water & Power Co. v. Hudson, 182 Cal. 48, 52, 186 P. 77.

[2] Appellants contend, however, that the foregoing rule is not applicable where the damage results from failure to follow the plans adopted which were [illegible]n the contemplation of the parties to the conveyance at the time of its execution, and that, in this case, the plans provided for a toe drainage ditch below the bank of the canal, which ditch was not constructed until after these suits were commenced.

The evidence in the Groff and Myers cases does not show that any plans for such drainage ditch were adopted or contemplated at or prior to the conveyance of the right of way to the defendant, or that, if such a ditch had been constructed, it w[illegible] prevented the damage of which com[illegible]ade. It was not error, therefore, to [illegible] the jury to find for the defendant in [illegible]ses.

[3] In the Browning [illegible] after the verdicts had been returned in the other cases, oral evidence was introduced to the effect that the construction of a toe drainage ditch was a part of the defendant's plans at the time the right of way was granted. In addition to this testimony, a letter, dated October 7, 1925, from the engineer of the defendant to Browning, was admitted in evidence. This letter states:

"Mr. Poundstone has instructed me to in- ire whether you wish us to proceed at once ith construction of remedial measures in- ded to prevent a repetition of damage from page from the district's main irrigation ls to your lands. * * * The district's s contemplate the construction of seep- litches at the toe of the irrigation canal s as follows: (Here follows a descrip- of the ditches as 4 feet deep, 3 feet wide e bottom and 15 feet wide at the top.) * It is possible that a small amount of additional right of way will be required for their construction. We understand the district stands ready to pay for this additional right of way at the price for which it has heretofore acquired rights of way from you and others."

The president of the board of trustees of the defendant testified that Browning first complained of seepage from the canal two or three years before the toe ditch was constructed; that this complaint was made during a meeting of the trustees; that the witness "asked him if he would give his permission to [illegible] that ditch in to see if it would correct the condition. * * * At that time he refused his permission. * * * It occurs to me [illegible] must have been two years after that, Mr. Millington (attorney for Browning) finally said Mr. Browning would permit this ditch to [illegible]; he didn't believe the ditch would correct the fault and didn't want to release any rights he had to sue the district, but he would permit us to go ahead and do the work. We passed a resolution at that meeting of the board and ordered the work done and the work was done shortly after that resolution was passed." Written permission to construct the toe ditch was given October 13, 1925, [illegible] letter replying to the engineer's letter of October 7. The toe ditch was completed in the spring of 1926. This case was tried in October, 1927, after the toe ditch had been in operation for two seasons. The plaintiff testified:

"Mr. Millington: Now, you say after the institution of this action they built a toe ditch along that levee? A. Yes.

"Q. Has that had [illegible] effect in stopping the seepage? A. No [illegible] made more seepage —yes, sir. Th[illegible] it down the county road on my [illegible] two miles. * * *

"Mr. Hust[illegible] it he hasn't answered the question.

"Mr. Mill[illegible] He answered the question; he said [illegible] hadn't, and explained why it hadn't."

On cross-examination the plaintiff testified:

"Q. What was the first year you noticed this water on your land? A. More or less from the first year they ever ran it out there. * * * It is getting greater all the time. * * * It has got so now it is ruining my land entirely."

It cannot be held that the trial court was not justified in accepting plaintiff's foregoing testimony at its face value. If the drainage ditch which was within the contemplation of the parties when the right of way was granted is ineffective to prevent seepage through the loose, porous tule land, then the plaintiff suffered no damage from the defendant's failure to construct it prior to 1926.

[4] "The condemnor may bind itself to a specified plan of construction * * * and have the damages assessed upon that basis. In that case an action can be maintained for any damage caused by a subsequent change in the works or use. So if the damages were in fact assessed on the basis of a certain mode of construction by the procurement or acquiescence of the parties, it has been held that this fact may be shown and relief obtained in case of a change of construction." Lewis on Eminent Domain (3d Ed.) § 830. Of course, the same rule applies where there has been a voluntary grant of a right of way procured on the understanding that a particular type of construction was to be installed. But it is axiomatic that no damage can be recovered on account of any departure from the contemplated plan which has caused no damage.

It may be stated further that, while the plaintiff testified that the maintenance of the defendant's irrigation system had greatly depreciated the value of his land, the president of the board of trustees testified directly to the contrary.

The judgments in all the three cases are affirmed.

3. Brokers ⚷4—Surety on stockbroker's bond held not liable, where broker's false representations induced buyer to purchase worthless stock (Corporate Securities Act, §§ 5, 6).

Surety on stockbroker's bond, given under terms of Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673, as amended) §§ 5, 6, held not liable, where broker made false representations knowing them to be false, inducing buyer to enter into contracts for purchase of corporate stock, and buyer believed and relied on such representations to his injury, stock being practically worthless.

4. Appeal and error ⚷1173(2)—Finding showing liability of broker's surety, which was wholly without issues and unsupported by evidence, was not ground for reversal of decree for surety not appealing or attaching finding (Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583).

In action against broker and surety to rescind contracts for sale of corporate stock in which surety was held not liable, finding showing surety's liability to effect that broker exhibited to buyer a letter regarding financial condition of corporation, stating that company was fine going concern, which finding was wholly without issues and admittedly unsupported by evidence, was not ground for reversal of judgment for surety because surety did not appeal or otherwise attack finding, but under Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583, appellate court had authority to make finding contrary to that of trial court.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action to rescind contracts for the sale of shares of corporate stock by Emil Hogberg against P. E. Landfield, doing business as an individual, and also under the fictitious name of Edward Marvin Company, and also under the name and style of P. E. Landfield Company, and another. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed in part, and in part reversed, with directions.

Everette C. McKeage, of San Francisco, for appellant.

John Ralph Wilson, of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued to rescind two separate contracts for the sale of shares of corporate stock. A separate judgment was asked against the defendant Maryland Casualty Company as the surety upon Landfield's bond as a stockbroker. Each contract was pleaded in a separate cause of action. Judgment went for plaintiff and against defendant Landfield on his first cause of action only and judgment went for the surety company in both causes. The plaintiff has appealed from the portions of the judgment denying him relief on his second cause of action and denying any relief against the surety company. The appeal is presented on typewritten transcripts.

On August 15, 1924, plaintiff paid Landfield $2,650 under the first contract for shares of stock of the New Dominion Copper Company, and on October 24, 1924, paid him $960 f[illegible] additional shares in the same compan[illegible] Both sales were made by Landfield while ac[illegible]ing as a duly licensed stockbroker, and bo[illegible] sales were accomplished through the false and fraudulent representations of Landfield. The bond of the surety company was given under the terms of sections 5 and 6 of the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673, as amended), and was in full force during the time when the acts complained of were done.

[1] The trial court found that all the representations pleaded in the complaint were made by Landfield, that they were false, that said defendant knew them to be false, that he made the representations for the purpose of inducing plaintiff to enter into the contracts, that he knew plaintiff believed and relied on said representations, and that plaintiff did so rely to his injury. It was also found that the stock was practically worthless, and that, within due time, plaintiff gave notice of rescission of both contracts on the grounds of fraud and failure of consideration. Upon these findings the trial court made the conclusion of law that plaintiff was not justified in relying upon these representations when the second contract was made, and recited in the judgment that this second contract had not been rescinded. This recital is directly contrary to the finding that notice of election to rescind in due form was given. When such notice is served the rescission is complete and the court should so find. American Type Founders' Co. v. Packer, 130 Cal. 459, 62 P. 744; Prewitt v. Sunnymead Orchard Co., 189 Cal. 723, 732, 209 P. 995.

[2] The conclusion that appellant was not justified in relying upon the representations is contrary to the findings of fact and to the settled rule of law that a party is justified in relying upon representations concerning existing facts not within his knowledge or his means of knowledge, but within the knowledge of the party making the representations. For these reasons this part of the judgment must be reversed.

[3] The appeal from the judgment in favor of the surety is controlled by Blumenthal v. Larson, 79 Cal. App. 726, 248 P. 681, and Mitchell v. Smith (Cal. Sup.) 267 P. 540. In the Blumenthal Case it was held that a similar bond given by a broker under the Corporate Securities Act, conditioned upon the faithful compliance "with the provisions of law," bound the surety upon the broker's noncompliance with the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act only. The case was affirmed in the Mitchell Case. There the brokers were charged with fraudulently inducing an owner to part with stock which the brokers falsely promised to sell for him. They then absconded with the stock, and the owner sought to hold the surety for his loss, but the Supreme Court held that this was not a violation of the Corporate Securities Act, and denied relief. There is no essential difference between the act of a broker in fraudulently obtaining stock from an owner for purposes of sale to another, and in fraudulently obtaining money from a party in the purchase of worthless stock. Immediately following the Blumenthal decision the Legislature amended the Corporate Securities Act so as to include cases of this nature, but the amendment came too late to afford this appellant any relief. We are impressed with the able argument of appellant in his endeavor to distinguish the two cases cited, but we must treat them as determinative of the liability of the surety in cases arising prior to this amendment.

[4] It is also argued that, notwithstanding the rule of those cases, the surety here is liable because of the trial court's finding that at the time of the sale Landfield "did exhibit to the plaintiff a typewritten letter purporting to be a statement of the financial condition of the New Dominion Copper Company signed by some person in the city of New York," and stating that the company was a fine, going concern. The respondent points out that this finding has no support in the evidence. This is conceded by the appellant, but he argues that, as the respondent has not appealed, he cannot attack the finding. There is no competent evidence in the record to support this finding. The appellant testified that some one purporting to have come from Mr. Landfield's office showed him "a paper, evidently from New York, showing that the stock had been up to four dollars"; and "they showed me a little letter—a typewritten letter * * * it was that the New Dominion Copper Company was a fine going concern, from somebody in New York." The paper or letter was not produced, and no further effort was made to offer competent testimony of its contents. No evidence was offered to prove that the contents of the letter were untrue, and neither the exhibition of the letter nor the falsity of its contents were pleaded in the complaint or made an issue in any manner. As this finding is wholly without the issues and is admittedly unsupported by evidence, it would be a miscarriage of justice to reverse the judgment merely because the surety company did not appeal or otherwise attack the finding. We feel that this is a case such as contemplated by section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure (added by St. 1927, p. 583), authorizing an appellate court to make findings contrary to those made by the trial court "based on the evidence adduced before the trial court either with or without the taking of evidence by the court of appellate jurisdiction." Therefore, upon the undisputed evidence adduced before the trial court in this record, we find that there is no proof that defendant Landfield issued, circulated, or published any false or misleading advertisement, pamphlet, prospectus, or circular, concerning the securities sold, within the meaning of section 14 of the Corporate Securities Act.

The portion of the judgment in favor of the Maryland Casualty Company is affirmed. The portion of the judgment in favor of Landfield on the second cause of action is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter judgment on the findings in favor of appellant and against Landfield on that cause.

NOURSE, J. Five separate appeals are herein presented by stipulation upon one transcript, an appeal from the final judgment, an appeal from an order denying the appellants' motion to reinstate the cause for a new trial, an appeal from an order denying the application of appellants to file a complaint in intervention, and an appeal from an order that a former judgment heretofore rendered in the cause, and annulled by order of the court, be again entered as the judgment in the case.

The action was commenced by five stockholders of the National Radio Company, an Arizona corporation, which was named as the sole defendant. The complaint alleged that this corporation was operating in violation of law and without a permit to do business from the corporate commission of Arizona; that it was dominated by one Golden, who caused the organization of the corporation in May, 1916; that no stockholders' meeting had ever been held, but that directors had been chosen subservient to him; that he had continuously speculated in the stock of said corporation on the market; that he had caused nine separate assessments to be levied upon the outstanding stock of the corporation through false representations as to the business which the corporation was doing and the assets which it had acquired; that the plaintiffs herein had paid their proportionate shares of each of said assessments; that the money derived therefrom had been dissipated by Golden and those subservient to him; that they had caused to be erected from said moneys a building in the city and county of San Francisco at a cost to the corporation of $84,000, save and except the sum of $8,000 paid therefor with the stock of said corporation; that said building was erected and acquired on the pretense that it was needed as a laboratory for the business of the corporation, whereas, in fact it was merely a garage and used as such; that it was acquired through the fraud and deceit of said Golden and at a large financial gain to him against the interests of the corporation; that the construction of said pretended laboratory was widely advertised as a valuable asset of the corporation wherein valuable wireless telephone instruments would be manufactured, to the great profit of the corporation; that because of these false claims on the part of the corporation said Golden was enabled to and did speculate in the stock of the said corporation upon the market, and, through the directors subservient to him, was enabled to and did levy and collect nine separate assessments upon the stock of said corporation amounting to $20,000 each; that on June 13, 1921, said Golden and said directors levied assessment No. 10, which assessment said plaintiffs have refused to pay; that on May 10, 1919, said directors sold to one Barker 279,742 shares of said corporation at 2.6 cents a share, though there was then a market for said shares at 14 cents, and in September, 1919, said Golden sold to said corporation 20,000 shares of said stock at 30 cents a share; that neither of said sales was made with permission of the commissioner of corporations of the state of California; that on January 31, 1921, said corporation was $80,000 in debt, having as its only available asset the lot and building hereinbefore mentioned, which was valued at about $70,000; that said corporation is and always has been insolvent.

Upon these allegations the plaintiffs prayed for a perpetual injunction restraining the corporation and its agents from selling or attempting to sell any of the stock of the plaintiffs and enjoining the said corporation from doing any business until it shall have first secured from the corporation commission of the state of Arizona a permit to do so, and enjoining said corporation from receiving or collecting any moneys under assessment No. 10 or from levying any further assessments upon the stock of said corporation, that a decree be entered against the corporation and in favor of plaintiffs for and in behalf of themselves and the other stockholders of said company for the sum of $180,000, the proceeds of such illegal assessments, and that all shares of capital stock of said corporation theretofore sold by the company because of nonpayment of any of such illegal assessments be restored to the owners.

After a protracted trial, judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiffs on May 2, 1924, upon findings which substantially followed the allegations of the complaint. In this judgment it was decreed that every certificate of stock issued by the corporation was void; that each and every assessment levied upon said stock by the corporation was void; that the real property located in San Francisco and described in the complaint was owned by the plaintiffs herein and the other holders of certificates of stock issued by the corporation similarly situated and whose moneys were used in the purchase thereof, and that said corporation merely holds the naked record title thereto in trust for such persons, and that a referee be appointed to take an account and ascertain and report the names of the persons who held certificates of stock in said corporation, and who paid one or more of said assessments, the amounts of such payments, and the amounts of moneys expended by the corporation in the purchase of said property. On May 31, 1924, the trial court, on motion of the corporation, granted a new trial.

Thereafter a change in the personnel of the board of directors of the corporation was made and on July 7, 1924, the board passed a resolution discharging the attorneys then representing the corporation and employing as attorneys for the corporation Mr. Benson and Mr. Soto, who were soon thereafter substituted as attorneys for the corporation in these proceedings. On September 26, 1924, these attorneys, acting under the authorization of the board of directors of the corporation, entered into a stipulation with the attorneys for the plaintiffs in this litigation that the order theretofore made on May 31, 1924, granting a new trial, be vacated and set aside. On September 29, 1924, the trial court, acting upon this stipulation, entered its order setting aside and vacating its previous order granting a new trial. On October 16, 1924, 145 persons, claiming to be stockholders of the corporation, appeared in said proceedings and on October 27, 1924, joined with 147 other persons who also claimed to be stockholders in a motion for an order to vacate and set aside the order of September 29 last referred to and for an order setting said cause at large and at issue upon the pleadings and reinstating the same for a new trial, for an order allowing these parties to intervene in said cause, and for an order permitting said parties to assume charge of the defense of said action on the part of the corporation and to vacate the stipulation of the attorneys for said corporation filed September 30, 1924, waiving the corporation's right of appeal from the judgment entered therein. These motions were supported by an affidavit alleging that the vacation order of September 29, 1924, was illegal, improvident, collusive, would result in a dissolution of the corporation without consent of the stockholders or of a majority, would strip the corporation of its assets and was taken through inadvertence, mistake, surprise, and excusable neglect. The motion to set aside the order of September 29, 1924, was heard upon affidavits and oral testimony and as a result of the hearing the trial court on April 13, 1925, granted the motion to vacate that order, but at the same time denied the appellants' motion to reinstate the cause for a new trial. The latter part of the order was based upon the stipulation of the attorneys for the corporation that the former judgment might be entered against the corporation as the judgment of the court.

Thereafter and on April 13, 1925, these appellants presented their motion for permission to intervene and tendered a complaint in intervention. On April 27, 1925, the trial court denied their motion for permission to intervene and to file a complaint in intervention. Prior thereto and on April 15, 1925, it was stipulated between the attorneys for the plaintiffs in the litigation and the attorneys for the corporation that judgment should be given in favor of the plaintiffs and against the corporation upon the findings which had theretofore been made and signed. The new judgment in the terms of the former judgment was ordered to be entered by the court on May 7, 1925, and at the same time the trial court ordered that the motion of Golden and others claiming to be stockholders of the corporation that the cause be set at issue for a new trial be denied. On May 22, 1925, a new judgment in the terms of the former judgment was accordingly entered carrying the stipulation and consent of the attorneys for the corporation, and on May 28 the same attorneys filed a stipulation on behalf of the corporation waiving its right to appeal from said judgment.

On this appeal the appellants make five assignments of error, the first four of which may be considered under the single head of the right of the appellants to intervene and take such course as they deem necessary in the defense of the litigation. The fifth assignment is that the judgment is erroneous on the face of the roll.

The respondents insist that the appeal from the judgment should be dismissed upon the grounds that the appellants are not aggrieved parties entitled to appeal under section 938, Code of Civil Procedure. The appellants answer that though they were not parties to the proceedings resulting in the judgment they became parties to the record and as such entitled to appeal from the judgment within the rule announced in Luckenbach v. Laer, 190 Cal. 395, 398, 212 P. 918. The same case, however, points out the weakness of appellants' position, where, as here, those seeking to make themselves "aggrieved parties" are stockholders in a corporation which was a real party to the litigation and which under the well-accepted rule in Baines v. Babcock, 95 Cal. 581, 592, 27 P. 674, 30 P. 776, 29 Am. St. Rep. 158, and similar cases, is deemed to have full power to represent and bind the stockholders in all litigation to which it is a party (except where the directors of the corporation refuse to act or are guilty of fraud in the maintenance of the defense of the action as pointed out in Difani v. Riverside County Oil Co., 201 Cal. 210, 215, 256 P. 210). Because of the views which we have reached upon the merits of the appeal from the judgment it is not necessary to determine the motion to dismiss that appeal.

[1] The attack upon the judgment is based upon the ground that the attorneys for the corporation were without power to enter into the stipulation with the plaintiffs for setting aside the order granting a new trial and for the entry of a new judgment, first, upon the ground that the directors could not authorize the attorneys for the corporation to make such stipulation; and, secondly, because the attorneys could not exercise the authority under the resolution of the board because the end accomplished was the practical dissolution of the corporation. No facts or evidence of any character are cited in support of the contention made, but on the other hand respondents point out that the judgment appealed from merely directs a sale of the garage premises which the court found did not belong to the corporation; that this property cost the corporation something over $76,000 and was incumbered by mortgages and deeds of trust aggregating $55,000, whereas the appellants in printed circulars and by their answer which they sought to file herein alleged and contended that the corporation possessed assets of a value in excess of $2,000,000. Manifestly, if the corporation had assets of that value we cannot assume that the disposal of the realty mentioned in the complaint would work a dissolution of the entire corporation, and in the absence of pleading or proof that such would be the effect of the judgment, we may not depend upon statements of counsel that this was known to the directors or the attorneys employed by the corporation and that their purpose in consenting to the judgment was to effect a dissolution.

The authority of the directors of a corporation to control the litigation in which the corporation is engaged has been determined by an unbroken line of decisions (Baines v. Babcock, 95 Cal. 581, 592, 27 P. 674, 30 P. 776, 29 Am. St. Rep. 158; Luckenbach v. Laer, supra; Difani v. Riverside County Oil Co., supra), while the authority of counsel to stipulate and consent to the entry of judgment is found in section 283, Code of Civil Procedure.

[2] The directors of the corporation having the full control over the conduct of the litigation, and the attorneys, by reason of their employment as such, having the authority to stipulate and consent to the judgment, the only course of a stockholder is to appear and show either that the directors have refused to act in behalf of the interests of the corporation or that they were guilty of fraud in the defense of the action. See cases just cited. But a stockholder cannot assume to act on behalf of the corporation until he has exhausted the means within his reach to obtain redress from the directors. Difani v. Riverside County Oil Co., supra. When this has not been done, and when fraud on the part of the directors has not been alleged or shown, it is manifest that a stockholder will not be permitted, by appeal or by motion, to attack or delay the enforcement of a judgment entered against a corporation in any legal proceeding unless it be by a direct attack upon the judgment on the equity side of the court after demand upon the directors and refusal by them in bad faith to follow the necessary proceedings.

This question, however, does not arise here. The sole question on this branch of the case is whether a member or stockholder may by motion inject himself into a case against the corporation which is defended by the duly elected directors thereof, without a showing that he first sought to obtain redress from them or that they are acting fraudulently or in bad faith. Here the appellants have not attempted to show that the directors acted fraudulently or in bad faith in permitting the recovery of the judgment against the corporation. They have made no attempt to show that the recovery of the judgment was not for the best interests of the corporation or for the best interests of its stockholders. They do allege that the stipulations made by the attorneys of the corporation were collusive, inadvertent, and made through mistake or excusable neglect. They did not, however, attempt to prove any of these statements and the trial court impliedly found them to be untrue. In view of the cases just cited the trial court properly denied the various motions of appellants to intervene and to participate in the proceedings of the trial.

The rule is frequently stated as we find it in the Difani Case at page 215 of 201 Cal. (256 P. 212), where it is said: "With the right of the corporation to sue and be sued concerning corporate rights or liabilities the stockholders cannot interfere, except when the governing directors or trustees refuse to act or are guilty of fraud in the maintenance or defense of an action." The appellants take comfort from that part of the statement which gives a stockholder a right to interfere when the directors "refuse to act." They urge that the consent to the judgment in this case was such a refusal to act as would permit a stockholder to intervene. But the language does not refer to every refusal of the directors to act in the manner which each stockholder believes they should act. What is meant is a refusal to act legally and in a manner which is fair and right in the interests of the corporation. This is made clear by a restatement of the rule which follows this language in the Difani Case: "It is the general rule that where a corporation defendant refuses to defend an action, or, having begun a defense, it is made to appear that the corporation will not press it in good faith, a stockholder may, upon a proper application showing the facts, be allowed to become a party and defend on behalf of the corporation, but he must show that he cannot induce those in control to do that which is fair and right."

[3] Thus, before a stockholder can inject himself into a proceeding in which the corporation is a party, either plaintiff or defendant, he must, upon proper application, show that the managing body failed to take the necessary and proper steps or will not press the litigation in good faith, and he must also show that he has endeavored to induce the directors to take the proper steps and that they refuse to do what is fair and right in the premises. Where, therefore, the corporation is a party defendant the stockholder must show that the corporation has a good and valid defense, which the directors wrongfully or fraudulently refuse to make.

[4-8] On the appeal from the judgment the appellants are confronted with these well-settled rules. A corporation, like any individual party defendant, may stipulate to waive trial of the issues of any cause pending against it and may also stipulate to the entry of a judgment against it. When a judgment is thus entered with consent of the parties there is no appeal (Reed v. Murphy, 196 Cal. 395, 399, 238 P. 78), and when the consent is given by the duly acting attorney for the party it will be presumed that he had authority to do so (Strand Improvement Co. v. Long Beach, 173 Cal. 765, 799, 161 P. 975). Irrespective of any question as to the time when the application to intervene was made, the record unmistakably discloses that the appellants wholly failed to make any showing which would entitle them to intervene. There is no showing of fraud or bad faith on the part of the directors that the action taken by them was not taken in good faith and for the best interests of the corporation, or that the interests of the corporation or of the stockholders were injuriously affected thereby. These were all questions of fact which the trial court was required to determine upon the application made by the stockholders. The determination was adverse to them, and the burden is upon them in this appeal to show that the trial court committed error in this respect.

If we may assume, because the point has not been raised by either party, that the four orders appealed from are appealable orders, then for the reasons heretofore given such orders must be affirmed. If, however, they are not appealable orders because not mentioned in section 963, Code of Civil Procedure, but are reviewable upon the appeal from the judgment only as provided in section 956, Code of Civil Procedure, the same result follows because the judgment appealed from must be affirmed. Having determined that the appellants failed to show error in the ruling of the trial court in refusing them permission to inject themselves into the litigation, all the other questions raised on this appeal become unimportant and do not require discussion.

Judgment and orders are affirmed.

JOHNSON v. FLETCHER et al. (Civ. 6582.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 21, 1929.

1. Pleading ⚷201—Demurrer is properly sustained, if any attack stated therein is well founded.

Demurrer to complaint is properly sustained, in case any attack stated in demurrer was well founded.

2. Fraud ⚷45, 46—Pleading to warrant recovery for fraudulent misrepresentations must show representations were made knowingly, were false, and were relied on to plaintiff's injury.

Pleading, in order to warrant recovery for fraudulent misrepresentation, must show the representations, and that they were known by defendants to be false, or were made under circumstances not warranted by knowledge, that they were actually false, and were made with intent to deceive plaintiff, and that plaintiff relied on representations believing them to be true and was injured.

3. Pleading 🔑17—All matters of substance must be alleged positively.

All matters of substance must be alleged positively and cannot be stated in the form of recitals.

4. Fraud 🔑43—Any representation made and relied on must be positively alleged as part of cause of action to recover for fraudulent misrepresentation.

Pleading, in action to recover for fraudulent misrepresentations, must, in case any representation was made, or plaintiff relied thereon, positively allege such fact as part of cause of action.

5. Fraud 🔑47—Complaint, in action to recover for fraudulent misrepresentations, must allege precise amount of damage.

Complaint, in action to recover for fraudulent misrepresentations, must allege the precise amount of damages in order to warrant recovery.

6. Pleading 🔑225(2)—Trial court held not, under circumstances, to have abused discretion in not allowing amended pleading after sustaining demurrer thereto.

Trial court held not to have abused discretion in refusing to allow plaintiff to file another amended pleading after sustaining demurrer thereto, in view of record showing that demurrer was sustained on February 4 without any application to amend and judgment entered on February 16.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Action by Jessica A. Johnson against Carl W. Fletcher and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Joseph A. Brown, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Bert Schlesinger and Jerome H. Bayer, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. [1] The plaintiff commenced an action to recover a judgment awarding her damages alleged to have been caused by certain fraudulent misrepresentations. The trial court sustained, without leave to amend, a demurrer to the fourth complaint, that is, the third amended complaint filed by the plaintiff; the plaintiff made no application to amend, and 12 days later the trial court caused a judgment to be entered in favor of the defendants, from which the plaintiff has appealed. If any attack stated in the demurrer was well founded, it follows that the trial court did not err in its ruling on the demurrer. Burke v. Maguire, 154 Cal. 456, 461, 98 P. 21.

[2-4] The complaint and the demurrer are very long. It will serve no useful purpose to recite the entire contents of either or both. Among the numerous attacks made by the demurrer, there were included among others: "(I) That said fourth amended complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against said defendants or either or any of them; (II) that said fourth amended complaint is uncertain in this: (a) that it cannot be ascertained therefrom * * * what if any damages plaintiff is alleged to have sustained; * * * (i) it cannot be ascertained therefrom at what time or times the alleged representations are alleged to have been made." It was apparently the claim of the plaintiff that by reason of the fraudulent acts of the defendants she bought for $30,000 the furniture contained in, and the leasehold interest in, an apartment house known as No. 1007 Sutter street, in San Francisco; that the furniture and the leasehold were valueless; and that her damage was therefore $30,000, the amount which she had paid. To state her case her pleading "must of course show the fraudulent representations; that they were known by the defendant to be false or were made under circumstances not warranted by his knowledge; that they were actually false; that they were made with intent to deceive the plaintiff or with intent to induce him to enter into the transaction; that the plaintiff relied upon the representations believing them to be true; and that he was injured." 12 Cal. Jur. p. 806. Her pleading did not conform to these requirements and was subject to the attacks above quoted. As to some matters she failed to state sufficient facts; as to some other matters her statements are mere recitals and not positive allegations; and as to some other matters her statements are uncertain, ambiguous, and unintelligible. She alleges: "That this plaintiff was induced to purchase the said apartment house and was induced to pay the said moneys hereinbefore specified for the said apartment house, and the maintenance of said house by reason of the defendants, and each of them, having falsely, willfully and untruthfully, and knowingly stated and represented to this plaintiff with the intent, purpose and object of willfully cheating and defrauding plaintiff, and with the full knowledge of defendants that each and all of said statements were false and untrue, the following matters and things concerning the said apartment house and business therein conducted, which statements and representations are and were known to the defendants to be untrue, and, each of them is wholly untrue, and made with the intent to cheat and defraud plaintiff, the same being as follows." The above allegation is a recital of facts and not a positive allegation. All matters of substance should be alleged positively and may not be stated in the form of recitals. Philbrook v. Randall, 195 Cal. 95, 103, 231 P. 739. If any representation was made, the pleader does not state when it was made, whether before or after, or whether at the time plaintiff made her purchase, July 2, 1924; nor does she allege any facts showing that the representations, if any, were made during and as part of the negotiations leading to the making of the contract. A possible exception to this criticism exists regarding the representation that Mrs. Boyd would buy if the plaintiff did not buy, but as to that representation it is not alleged that it was false. If any representation was made and the plaintiff relied thereon, such fact should have been alleged as a part of the plaintiff's cause of action. 12 Cal. Jur. 812; Hallidie v. First Federal Trust Co., 177 Cal. 600, 603, 171 P. 431. But the plaintiff's pleading contains no positive allegation on that subject. There is a parenthetical recital in paragraph IX, but, as stated above, all matters of substance must be made by positive allegations. This is true because the very object of drawing a complaint is to frame it in such manner that the defendant can admit or deny and thus form an issue. The demurrer was properly sustained. St. Clair Denver v. Burton, 28 Cal. 549.

[5] The last attack made by the demurrer which is quoted hereinabove is based on the contention that the complaint does not properly plead damages. Bearing in mind that this is an action as for deceit, and not an action in rescission, the rule applicable is succinctly stated by Mr. Chitty, in volume 1 of his work on Pleading, commencing on page 396, as follows: "But when the law does not necessarily imply that the plaintiff sustained damage by the act complained of, it is essential to the validity of the declaration that the resulting damage should be shown with particularity; * * * and in case of deceit some resulting damage must be alleged and proved." (Italics the authors.) In the case of Harron, Rickard & McCone v. Wilson, Lyon & Co., 4 Cal. App. 488, 88 P. 512, the court was considering a pleading more nearly perfect than the pleading in the instant case. The court quoted and followed the rule as above stated. Moreover, it held that the pleader should have pleaded the elements making up his damage. In Munson v. Fishburn, 183 Cal. 206, at page 216, 190 P. 808, 812, the court said: "It is, of course, well settled that in an action of damages for deceit the plaintiff must allege and prove the precise amount thereof." In drawing her pleading the plaintiff in the instant case inserted an intimation that she paid for the property $30,000, but there is no direct averment to that effect. To show that the lease had no value, the plaintiff attempted to plead that the rental reserved in the lease was as high, or higher, than the market value. 36 C. J. 1282. But she does not attempt to plead what was the market value of the use of the premises. From the pleading as it stands we may not infer nor presume that the plaintiff did not get value received or that the property as purchased was not worth the value which it was represented to have.

[6] If it be claimed that the trial court abused its discretion in not allowing the plaintiff to file another amended pleading, it is sufficient to say that the judgment recites that the demurrer was sustained on the 4th day of February, that no application to amend was presented, and the judgment was entered on the 16th day of February. The appeal is on the judgment roll without a bill of exceptions. Under these cicumstances no abuse of discretion is shown. Philbrook v. Randall, supra.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

Vincent Meile and William Dyer were charged by information with the crime of robbery. Dyer was convicted, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Joseph W. Ryan, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn and Warner I. Praul, Deputy Attys. Gen., for the People.

THOMPSON, J. The defendants were charged by information filed by the district attorney of Los Angeles county with the crime of robbery. The jury returned a verdict of guilty against the defendant William Dyer, who prosecutes this appeal from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The defendant Meile was found not guilty.

[1, 2] That a robbery was committed is not in dispute. On the 2d day of April, 1928, W. L. Rowley and Mr. Donner, employees of the Pan-American Petroleum Company, started to go to the bank for the purpose of depositing the day's receipts. They had just put a suitcase into the rear of a Ford roadster and a smaller bag into the driver's compartment, when they were held up at the point of a revolver by two men who had alighted from an old Cadillac touring car, which had been driven into the yard by a third man. These men made away with somewhere between $10,000 and $12,000 in cash and about $9,000 in checks. Meile was identified by the witness Rowley, the cashier of the oil company, who was a man about 40 years of age. He, however, could not identify the appellant. The other employee, a young man of 20 years, identified the appellant as the one who was on his side of the Ford, and said that the defendant Meile resembled the man who was on the other side, although he only got a fleeting glimpse of the latter robber. On cross-examination this witness testified that, when the appellant approached him, he did so "on a kind of a half run and a half fast walk," crouched, with a tweed cap "flopped down over his face" to about the bridge of his nose, so that he could not see or describe the upper part of his head. Also the witness testified that while he was being held up his back was to Dyer, but that when the latter returned to the Cadillac, which was not over 15 feet away, the latter ran sideways with his head twisted, watching; that he, the witness, observed him during this return. About a month and a half after the robbery, the witness was shown about 20 photographs, among which there were 2 which resembled the appellant, one a front view and the other a profile, and he was not "sure which was the right man." Some time after the witness saw the pictures, the witness picked out the appellant from a group of 9 or 10 men and designated him as one who had participated in the robbery. Evidence was also introduced, that on April 4, 1928, two days after the commission of the crime, the appellant rented a safety deposit box of the Security Trust & Savings Bank under the name of William Harris. The appellant testified that he had had an argument with his wife and "for spite" had rented the box for the purpose of putting into it some papers and insurance policies, using the name of Harris in order to prevent his wife from discovering it. Mrs. Dyer testified that about a week later she found out about the box, at which time she was given the right of entry, and that her husband had told her he rented it on account of their argument.

The defendants presented the testimony of three witnesses, one of whom was a Mrs. De Fillipo, who testified that on April 2, 1928, her husband, who had died before she gave her testimony, her brother-in-law, William O'Brien, and George Costello left her home about 10 o'clock in the morning in a Cadillac automobile, and returned about 3 o'clock in the afternoon with the money taken from the Pan-American Company, which they divided into three parts; her husband getting about $3,300 or $3,400. The other two witnesses, inmates of San Quentin, and sentenced to pay the death penalty for a murder committed in Alameda, testified by depositions. One of them, William O'Brien, stated that he and two other men, the names of whom he would not give, were guilty of the particular crime here charged, and that the defendants on trial were not guilty. The other convict said that he and O'Brien and De Fillipo staged the robbery. The details recited by them agree, in all major circumstances at least, with those recited by the prosecution witnesses. The appellant also sought by his own testimony, that of his wife, and a doctor whom they say was called to attend Mrs. Dyer, to establish that the appellant was at his home at the time of the holdup.

We have recited the testimony at considerable length, for the reason that counsel for appellant argues with all sincerity and earnestness that the testimony is insufficient to support the verdict, and if we were at liberty to weigh the testimony we should be inclined, as we read the record, instead of listening to the witnesses, to agree with him. The very fact, however, that it is not our privilege or our province to view their demeanor, and judge their credibility, is the reason we are not permitted to overturn judgments, where there is substantial evidence to support the verdict. The rule is so well known that all that remains for us to do is to determine whether the testimony concerning the identification is substantial. It is positive and direct. There was nothing unfair or unusual about the manner in which the witness Donner picked the appellant from the group which confronted him at police headquarters, or from the photographs which he was shown. There is nothing inherently improbable in the identification, even under the circumstances, because it is a well-recognized fact that, under the nervous impulse of such an ordeal as the witness underwent during the commission of the offense, impressions are ofttimes made, never to be effaced. The human mind at times is photographic in its accuracy, and at other times, to be sure, it seems almost unimpressionable; but whether in a given instance it is one or the other is for the jury to determine. When we find substantial testimony, and nothing to indicate that the verdict is the result of passion or prejudice, we must rest content with that conclusion.

[3] Appellant also argues that the testimony of the prosecution, which we have already recited, concerning the safety deposit box, was improperly admitted over his objection. But in this we cannot agree. The robbery was committed on the 2d; the rental was two days later, under an assumed name. Both the time and the manner of the rental were circumstances admissible on the same theory as flight or concealment of the person. And as was stated by the court in People v. Cox, 29 Cal. App. 419, 155 P. 1010: "The jury were not compelled to accept the defendant's explanation of why he assumed a false name when traveling with the horse and at the time of the sale and when he was arrested. They were justified in finding, from all of the evidence adduced in the case, that, as the verdict implies, his assumption of a false name was for the purpose of concealing his identity and thereby warding off suspicion. * * *" So here the jury may have believed, although the circumstances may be of no great probative value, that the real reason for renting the box on the second day after the crime was committed was for the purpose of enabling appellant to conceal his ill-gotten gains. That such evidence is admissible, see the additional cases of People v. Cole, 141 Cal. 88, 74 P. 547; People v. Sprague, 52 Cal. App. 363, 198 P. 820, and People v. Frank, 75 Cal. App. 74, 241 P. 924.

PEOPLE v. GRANT. (Cr. 1762.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 19, 1929.

1. Criminal law 🔑1023(12)—Order denying defendant's application to vacate judgment and withdraw plea of guilty is appealable.

Order denying defendant's application to vacate judgment and for leave to withdraw plea of guilty is an appealable order.

2. Criminal law 🔑274—Defendant, denied hearing after plea of guilty and sentenced to prison, held entitled to withdraw plea on showing that no more than minor technical offense was involved.

Trial court's refusal to grant defendant hearing on plea of guilty, for purpose of determining gravity of offense, was abuse of discretion, entitling defendant to withdraw plea on showing that defendant understood penalty would be light, and that defendant, if guilty, was guilty of only a minor technical offense, whereas sentence was for imprisonment in the state prison.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County.

Proceeding by the People against F. L. Grant, in which defendant pleaded guilty and was sentenced. Defendant applied to the court to vacate the judgment and for leave to withdraw his plea of guilty, and, from an order denying the application, he appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Joseph Seymour, of Riverside, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

YORK, J. [1] The only appeal we can consider in this case is the appeal from the order of the court denying the defendant's application to vacate and set aside its judgment, and his application for leave to withdraw his plea of guilty, which applicaton was made by defendant after judgment on his plea of guilty and after the judgment of the trial court sentencing him to serve in the penitentiary. That such an appeal will lie is directly supported by the decision of our Supreme Court in the case of People v. Schwarz and Wallington, dated June 3, 1927, 201 Cal. 309, 257 P. 71.

[2] In support of this application, it appears that defendant contends that his plea of guilty, which application was made by by his counsel, in the presence of and by ostensible authority of a representative of the district attorney's office, that the sentence would be "from one Dollar up." After the plea of guilty, the defendant was sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison by the trial court. This was done by the trial court without any evidence whatsoever as to the gravity of the offense actually committed in order to determine whether the punishment should be by imprisonment in the penitentiary or county jail or by a mere fine, and nothing to found the sentence upon, except only the plea of guilty, as aforesaid, made under the impression that punishment would not be severe. The defendant made a motion to withdraw the plea of guilty on the ground, among others, that it was made without due deliberation and merely from the hope that the punishment would be "litigated," which we interpret as being that the trial court, when imposing sentence, would make due inquiry into the facts of the case, but the punishment was imposed without any due inquiry by the court, unless we can consider that the court considered in this matter the report of a probation officer, which formed no part of the proceedings to set aside the judgment, and, if it had been so offered and received in the form in which it was offered, the larger portion of it would have been merely hearsay evidence.

The defendant did not have an opportunity to investigate the source of the probation officer's inquiry, but he did deny, under oath, the conclusions reached by the probation officer, at least as to anything that would affect the court in deciding the extent of his punishment.

It sufficiently appears by the showing made by the defendant that he had never been charged with a criminal offense before, and it was stipulated before the hearing of this motion that all of the facts stated in defendant's affidavit in support of his motion were true, which facts establish that defendant was not guilty, as charged in the information, and, if guilty at all, he was guilty of only a minor technical offense therein included, on the conviction of which minor offense he would most certainly not have been imprisoned in the penitentiary.

It appears that justice demands that defendant should not, on the face of these proceedings, be subjected to the imprisonment imposed upon him, and that the trial judge abused his discretion in refusing him a hearing after his plea of guilty, for the purpose, at least, of determining the gravity of the offense.

The order denying the defendant leave to withdraw his plea of guilty is reversed, and it is ordered that the defendant, if he be so advised, be allowed to enter a plea of not guilty to the information to which his plea was made.

FIRESTONE v. O'BRIEN et al. (Civ. 5904.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Feb. 19, 1929.

Rehearing Denied March 21, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 18, 1929.

1. Brokers 🔑31—Broker cannot sell land to its employee without first disclosing all surrounding facts to principal.

Real estate broker cannot sell to itself or one of its salesmen or employees without first disclosing all surrounding facts to principal.

2. Brokers 🔑31—Principal's knowledge that purchaser was broker's employee did not preclude him from complaining of broker's sale to employee without first disclosing facts.

Where broker sold land to employee without disclosure of all facts to principal, principal's knowledge that purchaser was salesman of broker did not preclude him from complaining.

3. Brokers 🔑31—Broker held liable to owner, where employee bought land and resold at profit, notwithstanding that broker received none of profits from resale.

Broker held liable to owner, where land was sold to broker's servant, who immediately resold at profit, notwithstanding that broker was uninformed as to actions of servant and that broker did not receive any of profits from resale.

4. Brokers 🔑38(4)—In action against broker whose servant bought and resold plaintiff's land at profit, judgment ordering accounting held erroneous under evidence.

In action against broker whose servant had bought plaintiff's land and resold it at profit, portion of judgment ordering accounting held erroneous, in view of evidence.

5. Appeal and error 🔑1033(9)—On defendant's appeal, any error in judgment allowing less than legal interest held harmless.

On defendant's appeal in action against broker whose servant bought and resold plaintiff's land at profit, any error in judgment for interest on resale profit in that amount allowed was less than legal interest is harmless.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by C. V. Firestone against Kenneth B. O'Brien and another to establish a trust in profits from the sale of real property and for an accounting. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Modified and affirmed.

Keyes & Erskine, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Sherman & Peters and Donovan O. Peters, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

NEEDHAM, Justice pro tem. The salient points alleged by plaintiff in his complaint are that he listed real estate with the defendant Allen & Co., real estate brokers, on June 25, 1924, for sale for the sum of $8,500; that Allen & Co. represented to plaintiff that this amount could not be obtained for the property listed, and, relying thereon, he authorized Allen & Co. to sell same for not less than $7,500; that on July 8, 1924, Allen & Co., as plaintiff's agent sold the property for $7,500 to the defendant O'Brien, who was an employee of Allen & Co.; that defendant O'Brien deposited $250 with Allen & Co., as a part payment upon the purchase price; that on July 21, 1924, plaintiff delivered his deed conveying the property to O'Brien to Allen & Co.; that the defendants have acted with intent to defraud plaintiff and intentionally misled him, by advising him that the best price they could obtain for the property was $7,500, when they knew that a higher price was obtainable; by selling the property for $7,500 without making a reasonable effort to obtain a higher price, and at the time having knowledge of parties who would give a sum in excess of $7,500; by selling the property to O'Brien, who was an employee of Allen & Co., without disclosing such employment to plaintiff, and without such fact being known to plaintiff; by taking unjust advantage of a confidential and fiduciary relationship of defendant with plaintiff in many particulars among others by wrongfully and secretly reselling the property for $8,500, and at a profit concealed from plaintiff, and wrongfully retaining such profit; by demanding and obtaining the plaintiff's promissory note for $375, covering the commission of Allen & Co., for selling the property. Alleges that plaintiff paid $40 to Allen & Co. on account of the $375 promissory note; that Allen & Co. are not entitled to any commission; that plaintiff has suffered damages in the sum of $1,153.50 by reason of defendants' fraud; that the defendants hold the profits derived from the resale of the property in trust for plaintiff.

The defendants in their answer deny the allegations of the complaint, except it is admitted that on July 21, 1924, the plaintiff conveyed the property to O'Brien, and that O'Brien resold the property at a profit of $1,026.25, but that none of the profit was received by Allen & Co. The answer admits that the plaintiff executed a promissory note for $375 as commission in the transaction.

The court found that Allen & Co. was Firestone's agent for the sale of the property; that it was originally listed for $8,500; that O'Brien was an employee of Allen & Co.; that Allen & Co. by its employee Hill, after persuading Firestone to lower his price, made an agreement with O'Brien for the sale of the property; admits the receipt of the $250 as a deposit on account of the purchase price of $7,500; finds that the property was sold to O'Brien by Allen & Co., as the agent for the owner Firestone; finds that "the relationship of O'Brien as an employee of Allen & Company was not disclosed to the plaintiff until after the sale, nor did plaintiff either directly or indirectly learn of that relationship until after the sale, but at the time the said Firestone signed the clause appearing on the reverse side of said deposit sale agreement * * * said Firestone observed the name of O'Brien on a name-plate on the top of the desk at which he was seated in the office of Allen & Company, indicating that O'Brien was connected with Allen & Company, and at that time said Firestone realized there was some connection between O'Brien and Allen & Company, although he did not realize the significance of said connection as it might concern him. * * *"

Further findings may be summarized as follows: That Firestone had been advised by Allen & Co. that his property was sold, that a deposit had been accepted, and that plaintiff was led by defendants to believe that he was bound by said sale, previous to his signing of the formal sale agreement of July 8, 1924; did not at the time realize the significance of O'Brien's relationship with Allen & Co. as indicated by O'Brien's name plate on the desk in the office of Allen & Co., as it might concern said sale until subsequent to the signing of said formal sale agreement of July 8, 1924; that on the date of the sale there was a resale simultaneously by O'Brien to certain parties by the name of Todts, and "that the defendants, particularly O'Brien, derived a secret profit of $1,000.00 from said transaction, which he, O'Brien, kept from plaintiff and for which he and his employer Allen & Company refused to account to the plaintiff."

There was entered upon these findings a judgment that plaintiff recover from the defendants $1,153.50 as damages; that the defendants account to the plaintiff for the profit realized upon the resale to the Todts; that the note for $375 be canceled; and that the $40 paid by plaintiff to Allen & Co. on account of this note be repaid to plaintiff.

The appellants contend, first, admitting that it is elementary that an agent to sell cannot sell to himself without disclosing the fact that he is buying to his principal, but contends this rule has no application to this case where the agent to sell did not sell to itself but to one of its employees; second, the plaintiff, at the time he entered into the agreement to sell the property to O'Brien, knew that O'Brien was an employee of Allen & Co., hence he cannot rescind the transaction and establish a constructive trust of the profits of the resale; third, even though this court holds that O'Brien is liable, Allen & Co., who did not receive any part of the profit realized upon the resale, is under no liability of any sort to the plaintiff; fourth, even, though this court hold that both Allen & Co. and O'Brien are liable, the judgment entered by the trial court is erroneous.

We have summarized quite fully the pleadings, findings, and judgment in the case, as it seems quite necessary so to do for a full understanding of the case.

[1] The first proposition of appellants is that, conceding that a real estate firm cannot sell to itself, without disclosing the fact that it is buying to its principal, yet this rule has no application to a case where the agent did not sell to itself, but to one of its salesmen. We think that an examination of the authorities show that the agent cannot sell to one of its salesmen or employees without first disclosing all the surrounding facts to the principal. One of the leading cases upon this subject is the case of Burke v. Bours, which was before our Supreme Court three times, and this particular phase of the case was quite fully discussed in 92 Cal. 108, 28 P. 57, where the following language is found:

"In Sugden on Vendors, p. 887, it is said: 'Any persons who, by being employed or concerned in the affairs of another, have acquired a knowledge of his property are incapable of purchasing such property themselves.' In Gardner v. Ogden, 22 N. Y. 350, 78 Am. Dec. 192, * * * 'the defendant Smith was the clerk, or assistant, of his principals. * * * Whatever disabilities they labored under equally attached to him. It would work an entire abrogation of the rule to hold the principal subject to the operation of this rule, and exempt his clerks and agents from its effect. It would be opening the door to its evasion, so that it would lose all its vitality and virtue.'" The decision goes on: "I think this is the spirit of all the authorities, and that the honesty and fairness of transactions between principals and their agents demand a firm adherence to these rules, and to bring within their operation, not only the agent himself, but those in his immediate employ, and who are engaged in the transaction of his business, which is, necessarily, the business of the agent's principal." (Italics ours.)

These principles are cited with approval in the cases of Newell-Murdoch Realty Co. v. Wickham, 183 Cal. 39, at page 44, 190 P. 359, and Salisbury v. Yawger, 184 Cal. 783, 195 P. 682.

The rule is to place the burden on the agent to make full disclosure promptly. See the case of McCallum v. Grier, 86 S. C. 162, 68 S. E. 466, 138 Am. St. Rep. 1037, in which the court said in part: "A broker employed to sell goods for his principal cannot buy them for himself, nor can a broker employed to buy, buy his own goods unless the principal, with full knowledge of the facts, assents to the transaction." The decision states: "'It is immaterial that the broker acts in good faith. * * * The reason of the rule is that, if the broker were permitted to buy from or sell to himself, there would be combined in him the incompatible relation of purchaser and seller, and an interest adverse to that of his principal would be created such as would ordinarily lead to a violation of his duty as agent.' 4 Enc. of Law, 966; 19 Cyc. 207." (Italics ours.)

In Curry v. King, 6 Cal. App. 575, 92 P. 665, it is stated: "Therefore, an agent will not be allowed to deal in his own behalf with his principal with reference to the subject matter of the agency, unless he makes full, complete and honest disclosure of the truth of the transaction. He is bound to treat with his principal concerning the property over which he has been vested with authority in the utmost good faith, and so religiously does equity require adherence to this rule that a transaction between them as to the property whereby the agent acquires the ownership thereof, is, upon its face, deemed by the law to be fraudulent." (Italics ours.)

In the case of McCallum v. Grier, supra, it is held that it is the duty of an agent to disclose fully to his principal every step taken by him in the transaction of the principal's business. If it be the sale of real estate he should keep nothing concealed in his efforts to bring the owner and prospective purchaser together. The identity of the purchaser and the true consideration should be instantly disclosed. (Italics ours.)

We have examined the authorities cited by the appellants with much care, but we are unable to see wherein they in any way mitigate or in any way narrow the doctrine contended for by the respondent, which we feel is very clearly upheld by the great weight of authority.

[2] The second contention of the appellants to the effect that the plaintiff at the time he entered into the sales agreement knew that O'Brien was a salesman of Allen & Co., therefore he is not in a position to complain, is without merit, for the reason that the evidence clearly shows that there was not a disclosure of all the facts as required by the authorities hereinbefore cited. It is true that the plaintiff saw the name of O'Brien on the name plate on a desk in the office of Allen & Co., but that was not a full disclosure of all the facts surrounding the sale. Furthermore, the evidence shows, without conflict, that, on the very day that the deed of the plaintiff to O'Brien was in escrow with the escrow agent, O'Brien himself secretly sold the said property to Todts by a deed to Todts through the same escrow company at a profit of $1,000. This clearly shows that all the facts and circumstances concerning which it is the duty of the agent and the agent's salesman to fully disclose to the principal, the plaintiff, was not done. The evidence sustains the findings of the trial court in this regard.

[3] The contention of the appellants that, even though O'Brien is liable, Allen & Co. cannot be held responsible because the latter did not receive any of the profits realized from the resale is without merit from what has heretofore been said. The authorities quoted clearly hold that Allen & Co. is legally liable, and it is not necessary to further cite authorities sustaining this proposition.

To recapitulate the case briefly: The plaintiff listed property with Allen & Co., for sale for not less than $8,500. A salesman in the employ of Allen & Co., by the name of Hill, persuaded plaintiff to lower his price to $7,500, and the property was sold to O'Brien, also a salesman in the employ of Allen & Co.; on the same day, or practically the same day, the property was resold by O'Brien to the Todts at a profit of $1,000, the same escrow agency handling both transactions. The evidence shows that Hill died before the trial, and his testimony was not taken. The appellants earnestly argue that Allen & Co., received nothing from the profits and were ignorant of the transaction; that Allen & Co. are large real estate operators having many branch offices and employing many salesmen; that they have received no profit, and they ought not to be held liable. We think that it is only fair to state that Allen & Co., so far as the evidence shows, were uninformed as to the actions of their salesmen Hill and O'Brien. Allen & Co. received a note covering the commission amounting to $375, upon which the sum of $40 only was paid. Nevertheless, for the reasons which we have herein stated, Allen & Co. must be held legally responsible, however unfortunate it may be.

[4] The judgment entered by the trial court in favor of the respondent and against the appellants O'Brien and Allen & Co. was for the surrender and cancellation of the promissory note of $375; for the return of $40 paid by the plaintiff to Allen & Co.; for damages in the total amount of $1,153.50 against both appellants; and for an accounting as against both Allen & Co. and O'Brien of all the profits in connection with the resale of plaintiff's property.

As the evidence conclusively shows that O'Brien resold the property to the Todts simultaneously with the receipt of the deed from the plaintiff; that O'Brien did not occupy the property or rent the same at all, it is clear that the only profit was that made upon the resale of the property, to wit, the sum of $1,000. Whether the $1,000 be denominated damages or profits would seem to be unimportant, because that sum, together with the cancellation of plaintiff's note of $375, and the return of the $40 paid thereon, is all the relief that the plaintiff is entitled to recover under any theory of the case. Therefore that portion of the judgment ordering an accounting is erroneous, and should be modified by having the same stricken therefrom.

[5] The appellants also complain that the judgment for $1,153.50 is erroneous, and should be reduced to $1,000. But it is apparent, we think, that the $153.50 was intended as interest on the $1,000 resale profit made July 21, 1924, from such date, and, as this is less than the legal interest on such sums from July 21, 1924, to the date of judgment, it is harmless so far as appellants are concerned, and, as plaintiff has not appealed, we are warranted in permitting that part of the judgment to stand.

For the reasons stated, that part of the judgment of the trial court which orders the appellants to account to respondent is stricken from the judgment, the judgment in all other particulars to stand, and the judgment so modified is affirmed; respondent to recover his costs.

LINDBERG v. PANTOLEON et al.

(Civ. 5897.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Feb. 21, 1929.

1. Appeal and error 🔑1002—Finding of jury on conflicting evidence is conclusive.

When there is a conflict in the evidence on the issues, finding of jury is conclusive on appeal.

2. Negligence 🔑126(1)—Evidence showing cranking of automobile by boy injured in so doing was so common as to authorize implied direction to do so was properly admitted.

In determining whether or not there existed an implied instruction for boy, injured in cranking automobile, to so crank machine, it was proper for court to admit evidence showing that cranking thereof on numerous startings was so common an occurrence, and done so often at express request and with implied consent of operator, that boy was entitled to consider that he had an implied instruction so to do.

3. Negligence 🔑108(2)—Complaint in action to recover for injury to boy in cranking automobile, stating facts authorizing conclusion of negligence, stated cause of action.

Complaint in action to recover for injury to boy in cranking automobile, stating facts authorizing conclusion of negligence, held sufficient to state a cause of action, without expressly using the term "negligence" therein.

4. Appeal and error 🔑882(3)—Litigant, adopting certain position on material issue, and giving evidence in support thereof, cannot seek reversal by contradicting his testimony.

A litigant, having adopted certain position on material issue, and having himself given evidence in support of that position, cannot on appeal seek to reverse judgment by contradicting his own testimony, and obtain a benefit from the evidence which he impugned.

5. Master and servant 🔑366—Boy, assisting in making deliveries, without regular salary or fixed duration of period of work, held not "employee" (Workmen's Compensation Act).

Boy, assisting truck driver in making deliveries, without being paid a regular salary or having fixed duration of work or time of payment, or any agreement that truck driver could direct details of the work, held not an "employee," within meaning of Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 279, as amended).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second and Third Series, Employé.]

6. Trial 🔑296(8)—Instruction authorizing recovery in personal injury action in case jury believed plaintiff had established material allegations did not cause miscarriage of justice, in view of other instructions.

Instruction authorizing recovery of damages in personal injury action, in case jury was satisfied that plaintiff had established material allegations of amended complaint, though leaving to jury the duty of determining the material allegations, held not to have caused miscarriage of justice, when considered in conjunction with other instructions, fully and clearly stating the law.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; H. L. Preston, Judge.

Action by Robert Lindberg, a minor, by John Lindberg, his guardian ad litem, against Antonio Pantoleon and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Goldman, Nye & Spicer, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Anthony Devoto and Devoto & Richardson, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

WARD, Justice pro tem. In this action, instituted by plaintiff, guardian ad litem of Robert Lindberg, a minor, to recover damages for personal injuries, a verdict was returned in his favor against defendants for $500. Judgment followed, and defendants appealed.

The defendants were engaged in the retail grocery business, and in connection therewith operated a delivery truck. On the morning of October 6, 1923, defendant Antonio Pantoleon drove out in the truck to solicit business. In front of the residence of one of his customers he parked the car, with its back facing the sidewalk, and started to walk toward the home of the prospective customer. The evidence is somewhat conflicting and uncertain as to whether Pantoleon had reached the house, or was leaving it, when the cry of "Tony!" attracted his attention, and he hurried to the front of the truck, and there saw Robert Lindberg, seemingly in pain, in front of the truck. The boy had broken his forearm in attempting to crank the automobile.

[1] Appellants' first contention is that the judgment is not supported by the evidence, and claim that Antonio Pantoleon did not request Robert Lindberg to crank the car. The testimony does not show that an express request was made just prior to the accident, but that Antonio Pantoleon did make such a request on the morning of the accident. At the time of the injury Robert Lindberg was 10 years of age, and inexperienced in the operation of an automobile. He had cranked the machine some 40 times prior to this date, either upon the request of or with the assent of defendant. From defendant's own testimony the jury were justified in drawing an inference that defendant Antonio Pantoleon knew that the starting crank of the automobile was likely to kick or strike back, and that a young boy was likely to be injured when turning it.

Appellants' argument goes to the weight of the evidence, and plaintiff's credibility as a witness, rather than to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict. When there is a conflict in the evidence upon the issues, the finding of the jury is conclusive on appeal. See Turano v. Bailey (Cal. App.) 260 P. 841. The jury resolved this conflict in favor of plaintiff, finding in effect by their verdict that the boy had repeatedly cranked the machine at the request of defendant, express or implied; that it had become a custom between them for the boy so to do; that the defendant Antonio Pantoleon knew the danger of cranking the machine, because he himself, a year and a half before, had suffered the same injury in a similar operation. It was not necessary for the jury to consider whether or not this machine had a self-starter, or whether the self-starter was working on that day, if, as a matter of fact, it was being cranked on that day by the crank, and not by the self-starter.

[2] Objection has been made that no express direction was given by Antonio Pantoleon to the boy to crank the machine. A direction need not be expressed, to be a direction. It may be determined from circumstantial evidence, or from the circumstances surrounding the relation of the parties. To determine whether or not there existed an implied instruction so to do, it was proper for the court to admit evidence showing that the cranking of the machine upon its numerous startings was so common an occurrence, and done so often at express request and with the implied consent and approbation of the man, that the boy was entitled to consider that he had an implied instruction so to do.

[3] At the beginning of the trial defendants moved for judgment on the pleadings, on the ground that the complaint did not state a cause of action against defendants or either of them. Paragraph VI of the amended complaint reads as follows:

"That at all the times herein mentioned, the starting crank of the motor of said defendants' automobile was accustomed to kick or strike back when one attempted to crank the motor of same; that at all the times herein mentioned, and particularly at the time said plaintiff received the injuries herein mentioned, said defendants and each of them knew that said starting crank of said motor of said machine was accustomed to kick or strike back when one attempted to crank said motor of said machine; that at all the times herein mentioned, and particularly prior to and at the time of receiving the injuries herein mentioned, said plaintiff, Robert Lindberg, did not know that said starting crank of said motor of said machine was accustomed to kick or strike back when one attempted to crank the same; that prior to the time of receiving said injuries herein mentioned, said plaintiff, Robert Lindberg was requested by said defendants to start said crank of said motor, and neither at the time of said request nor at any other time did said defendants or either of them warn said plaintiff, Robert Lindberg, that said starting crank of said motor was accustomed to kick or strike back when one attempted to crank said motor; that at the time and place herein mentioned, when said plaintiff, Robert Lindberg, attempted to crank said motor of said automobile in accordance with the request of said defendants, as aforesaid, and without any fault or negligence on his part, said starting crank kicked or struck back, causing the injuries herein complained of; that said injuries received by said plaintiff, Robert Lindberg, at the time and place herein mentioned, were proximately caused by and resulted from the kicking or striking back of said starting crank of said motor, as said plaintiff, Robert Lindberg, attempted to crank said motor of said automobile in accordance with the request of said defendants at the time and place aforesaid."

The paragraph last quoted states facts showing the duty of defendants and a neglect of that duty. A conclusion of negligence can be drawn from the facts stated. There is no suggestion from any of the pleadings that any act on the part of plaintiff was willful or mischievous, and nothing to indicate that any conclusion could be reached other than that of negligence. When the complaint, as in this case, alleges a series of facts and circumstances establishing the cause of injury from which an inference must be drawn that a defendant was negligent it is not necessary to use the term negligence in the complaint. Silveira v. Iverson, 125 Cal. 266, 57 P. 996. White v. Covell, 66 Cal. App. 732, 227 P. 196. In answering paragraph VI defendants set forth in part as follows: "* * * deny that there was any fault or negligence on the part of defendants or either of them." In any case wherein a defendant treats the issue as one of negligence, he cannot prevail upon a motion for judgment upon the pleadings. Nittler v. Continental Casualty Co. (Cal. App.) 272 P. 309; National Union Co. v. Nason, 21 Cal. App. 297, 131 P. 755; Carroll v. Briggs, 138 Cal. 452, 71 P. 501; Slaughter v. Goldberg, Bowen & Co., 26 Cal. App. 318, 147 P. 90.

That the court erred in denying defendants' motion for nonsuit is appellants' next contention, and such motion was based upon the following grounds: (1) The matter was within the exclusive jurisdiction of the industrial accident commission. Hence, the court was without jurisdiction to try the case. (2) Plaintiff failed to prove the material allegations of his complaint. (3) Plaintiff failed to prove that the accident was caused by the negligence of the defendants, or any of them.

[4, 5] At the outset we call attention to the reporter's transcript of testimony on page 16, which reads in part as follows: "A. Well, what am I going to answer? I remember one day I got stuck, it was kind of a rainy day, he was outside his place; he said, 'I will help you, Tony,' and I was good nature, and I gave two bits. Q. Was that the only time? A. Another time some lady sent him down to get some meat and I give 15 cents more. I never asked the fellow to work for me. Q. Is that the only time? A. Yes. Q. Are you sure that Mr. Lindberg did not help you in delivering packages to your customers more than twice? A. He never delivered more than twice." There can be no doubt that Antonio Pantoleon definitely stated that the Lindberg boy had worked for him but twice, and that he had given him a small sum of money.

On appeal, counsel for appellants call our attention to testimony of the plaintiff and other witnesses, who testified that the boy had worked upon many other occasions, and upon this testimony he claims that the trial court erred in denying the motion, made upon the ground that the Industrial Accident Commission had exclusive jurisdiction of this case. Our first answer must be that, if a litigant adopts a certain position on any material issue and himself gives evidence in support of that position, he cannot upon appeal seek to reverse the judgment by contradicting his own testimony and obtain a benefit from the evidence which he impugned. However, under the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 279, as amended), Lindberg was not an employee.

Counsel cites McLain v. Llewellyn Iron Works, 56 Cal. App. 60, 204 P. 869. The case is not in point. In that case there was no doubt that the deceased was "actually employed." The suit was instituted by the mother, and the sole question involved was the sufficiency of the complaint in an action instituted in the superior court, and the court on appeal held that "where the condition of compensation prescribed by subdivisions 1, 2, and 3 of section 12 of the act [St. 1915, p. 1079] are, as in the instant case, shown to exist, no cause of action is stated by a complaint, in the absence of allegations showing the employment to have been within the excepted classes of labor mentioned in section 14 of the act [St. 1915, p. 913], and that in the absence of such showing we cannot presume the existence of such facts in support of the judgment."

The question here to determine is: Was there an employment? Irrespective of whether Robert Lindberg worked 2 or 60 days, he was not paid a regular salary; he received small sums of money whenever Pantoleon was in the mood to recompense him for making deliveries. There was no fixed duration of the period of work or the time of payment, and no agreement that Pantoleon could direct the details of the work. The boy worked during vacation, and occasionally after school, and was not required to perform services if he was not so disposed. If one party does not intend to give regular employment and the other to accept regular employment, no contract of employment exists, and whatever work is performed becomes irregular, occasional, or merely incidental, as distinguished from regular and continuous. See Diamond Livery v. Industrial Accident Commission et al., 289 Ill. 591, 124 N. E. 609, and cases cited. That Antonio Pantoleon did not have dominion over the boy's time, as a master over a servant, is best shown when upon an occasion the boy's mother, in the presence of Antonio Pantoleon, ordered the boy home for his lunch; the boy obeyed, and Antonio Pantoleon recognized the dominion of another by concurring therein.

Counsel for appellants, in his zeal in behalf of his clients, has taken us back over 2,000 years to the doings of the early Greeks at Athens. We would be content to go back only as far as the memory of every man now existent in these United States. Ever since wheels have been an integral part of vehicles in this country and elsewhere, every active member of boydom has earnestly desired to be in that vehicle and allowed to ride thereon. If not with permission he has contrived to steal rides, or he has wheedled his way into being invited by running his legs off on side errands to save the driver exertion; he has carried things up hill, when the vehicle could not easily go, in order that he might ride down hill or on the level. He has been alert to open gates to permit a passage through and sometimes to close them afterward. Men have accepted these services coincident with their offering, and have invited them by their tacit consent; in fact, as in the case at bar, have held out inducements of small change as encouragement to receive such services, and as an additional lure to increase the locomotion of the boy. The dimes or quarters are, of course, an incentive; but the principal remuneration is the pleasure of transportation. Such an arrangement cannot be dignified by the term "employment," as that word is used in the Workmen's Compensation Act.

On the motion for nonsuit defendants also pressed the point that the material allegations of the complaint had not been proven, laying stress upon the claim that plaintiff failed to prove that the accident was caused by defendant's negligence. In answering the first point made by appellants, namely, that the judgment is not supported by the evidence, we confined ourselves to a discussion of such evidence presented prior to the time that plaintiff rested. It is therefore unnecessary to consider this point further.

[6] Appellants contend that the court erred in giving plaintiff's proposed instruction No 2. This proposed instruction reads: "If you are satisfied from the evidence that the plaintiff has established the material allegations of his amended complaint by a preponderance of the evidence, I instruct you that the plaintiff is entitled to recover such damages as you believe from all the evidence of the case he is entitled to." As a general rule, this instruction leaves to the jury the duty to determine the material allegations of the complaint. In view of the sixth paragraph of plaintiff's complaint, it was necessary that the jury find for the plaintiff upon such allegations. In conjunction with the other instructions, the jury was fully, clearly, and carefully instructed on the law, and could not possibly have been misled. Elsewhere the court covered paragraphs IV and VI, and a miscarriage of justice has not resulted therefrom. Hoffman v. Pacific Electric Co., 45 Cal. App. 751, 188 P. 597. The instruction complained of did not permit the jury to disregard the real issues, if they considered them immaterial, as each material allegation of paragraph VI was incorporated into a separate instruction.

Those instructions of the defendants which were refused were either covered by the instructions given, or they were instructions upon questions of law, and it is not the province of the jury to determine such, but of the court. The trial judge was eminently fair in his rulings upon evidence, and this court cannot perceive how substantial justice has been denied defendants.

Judgment affirmed.

CALIFORNIA FILTER CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. 6489.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 20, 1929.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing March 21, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 18, 1929.

1. Husband and wife ⚷299(4)—In action for separate maintenance, order directing corporation employing husband to pay wife certain sum was void, as beyond court's jurisdiction (Civ. Code, § 137).

In action by wife against husband for separate maintenance, order directing corporation which employed husband to pay wife certain sum was void, as being beyond jurisdiction of court since under Civ. Code, § 137, only interlocutory orders that can be made in action for divorce or separate maintenance in favor of wife are orders against the husband.

2. Husband and wife ⚷299(4)—Where wife, suing for separate maintenance, claimed corporation had money belonging to husband, court could not, in summary proceeding, determine corporation's interest in such money.

Where wife, suing for separate maintenance, claimed corporation had money in its hands belonging to husband, and corporation claimed interest in money adverse to both husband and wife, trial court was without power in summary proceeding to determine issue.

3. Judgment ⚷577(1)—One is not bound by judgment in respect to person or property, unless he has had day in court.

One is not bound or concluded by judgment, either in respect to person or property, unless he has had his day in court, by which is meant until he has been duly cited to appear, and has been afforded an opportunity to be heard, and on such hearing to offer evidence in support of his cause.

★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

4. Husband and wife 🔑299(4)—Order beyond court's jurisdiction in separate maintenance action was not valid, merely because no specific objection to jurisdiction was made.

In action for separate maintenance, it was unnecessary to make specific objection to jurisdiction of court to make order directing husband's employer to pay wife certain sum, since such order was beyond court's jurisdiction and could be collaterally attacked.

Application for writ of prohibition by the California Filter Company against the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and Walter Perry Johnson, Judge of Department No. 14 thereof, to prevent further proceedings on an order to show cause for contempt. Writ issued.

Leo R. Friedman and Robert E. Fitzgerald, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

David Livingston and Livingston & Livingston, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

PRESTON, Justice pro tem. This is a petition for a writ of prohibition. On November 17, 1926, Marion Shibley commenced an action against her husband, Kenneth Shibley, for separate maintenance, and joined as a party defendant the petitioner herein, California Filter Company, a corporation. The original complaint in said action, among other things, alleges:

"Since the marriage of plaintiff and defendant, said defendant Shibley has acquired * * * certain property. * * * Said property is community property. * * * Defendant Shibley is the owner of a large portion of the capital stock of defendant California Filter Company. Plaintiff is unable to state definitely the number of shares of stock in said company owned by defendant Shibley, but is informed and believes, and therefore alleges, that he is the owner of two-thirds of the capital stock of said company. * * * That the remainder of said stock is owned by Paul Bovard, and said Bovard and defendant Shibley are the sole parties interested in said company. * * * Defendant Shibley is in the employ of, and is drawing a large salary from, said company, the amount of which plaintiff is unable definitely to state, and said salary will be paid continuously to defendant Shibley by said company. Plaintiff is informed and believes, and therefore alleges, that defendant California Filter Company is indebted to defendant Shibley, in a large sum of money, the amount of which plaintiff is unable to state. * * *"

Said action is now pending in the superior court of the state of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and no trial upon the merits has ever been had. On March 21, 1927, said respondent superior court made and entered an order requiring said Kenneth Shibley to pay to his wife, Marion Shibley, as temporary maintenance pending the trial of said action, the sum of $600 per month. This order was not complied with by the defendant Kenneth Shibley. On May 13, 1927, said court made an order directing petitioner herein to appear before said court on May 20, 1927, and show cause why an order should not be made in said action of Shibley v. Shibley, directing petitioner to pay to said plaintiff, Marion Shibley, for and on behalf of said defendant, Kenneth Shibley, the sum of $600 per month during the pendency of said action, and charge the same against the account of the said Kenneth Shibley.

On the said 20th of May, 1927, petitioner appeared before said court, through its secretary and attorney, and offered to prove, as a defense to said order to show cause, that it had no money in its possession then due and owing to said Kenneth Shibley, but did admit that there appeared upon the books of petitioner a credit due said defendant Kenneth Shibley, amounting to approximately $4,500, but that there existed between petitioner and said Kenneth Shibley a written agreement to the effect that said sum was not then due or payable from petitioner to said Kenneth Shibley, but was to be retained by petitioner as a working capital of said petitioner until notice was given to said Kenneth Shibley by the board of directors of petitioner that another arrangement was necessary, and that no such notice was ever given said Kenneth Shibley by said board of directors.

Said writing could not at that time be produced, and the attorneys for Marion Shibley objected to the secretary of petitioner testifying as to the contents of said writing, which objection was sustained by the trial court, and the court directed said petitioner to make a search for said writing and produce the same in court on June 27, 1927, to which date said hearing was continued. On June 27, 1927, petitioner, through its secretary, again appeared in said court, and said secretary testified that he had been unable to find said writing, whereupon the court directed said secretary to make further search for said writing, and again continued the hearing until June 29, 1927. Said court, however, did on said June 27, 1927, after the order of continuance had been made, but before said matter was finally submitted for decision, make an order directing the petitioner, California Filter Company, a corporation, to pay within two days to plaintiff, Marion Shibley, the sum of $350, to be applied on the May award of separate maintenance due from Kenneth Shibley.

Thereafter, and on the said 29th day of June, 1927, petitioner, through its secretary, again appeared before said court, and the said secretary testified that he had been unable to find said written agreement. Said court thereupon permitted said secretary to testify as to the contents of said written agreement. Said secretary stated that said agreement was entered into some time during the year 1924, and it provided that any credit balance remaining due said defendant Kenneth Shibley upon the books of said corporation at the end of any fiscal year should remain with said corporation and be undistributed to the sum of at least $6,000; that the books of said corporation showed that the credit balance of said defendant Kenneth Shibley, at the time said order to show cause above referred to was issued, was less than $6,000, and was approximately $4,000, and at the time said order to show cause was issued there was no other cash capital in the business of said corporation, other than said credit balance. Said order to show cause was then further continued from time to time, and an affidavit was filed by the secretary of the petitioner in opposition to said order to show cause, and opposing any payment by petitioner. Thereafter said written agreement was produced and filed with said court. No further evidence was ever presented to or taken by said court upon said order to show cause, and said order to show cause has never been finally submitted to said court for final determination. Petitioner did not pay Marion Shibley the $350, as ordered by the court on June 27, 1927.

Thereafter, and on August 25, 1927, there was served upon petitioner an order, signed by said court, requiring said petitioner to appear before said court on September 2, 1927, and show cause why petitioner should not be adjudged in contempt of said court and punished for failure to obey the said order of June 27, 1927, directing petitioner to pay said plaintiff, Marion Shibley, the sum of $350. Petitioner appeared before said court on September 2, 1927, in response to said order to show cause, and did set up its claim and defense that it had no money in its possession due, owing, or payable to said Kenneth Shibley, and it was also set up as a defense to said order to show cause that on June 27, 1927, said petitioner had levied upon it a garnishment in an action then pending in said superior court, wherein Frank D. Cohen was plaintiff and Kenneth Shibley was defendant, and wherein and whereby petitioner had been commanded by said court to keep and retain in its possession all funds then due and owing by it to said Kenneth Shibley. Thereafter, and on July 17, 1928, said respondent superior court made and entered its order adjudging petitioner guilty of contempt of court and fining petitioner $500 for its failure to obey said order of June 27, 1927; that is, failing to pay said plaintiff, Marion Shibley, $350, and charge the same to the account of Kenneth Shibley.

[1] Petitioner seeks by this proceeding an order requiring the superior court of the state of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and the judge thereof, to refrain from taking any action or proceeding having for its purpose the enforcing of the order of June 27, 1927, or punishing petitioner for contempt under the order of July 17, 1928. Petitioner contends that the order made on June 27, 1927 directing it to pay Marion Shibley $350, is void as being beyond the jurisdiction of said court to make. We think this contention must be sustained. The only interlocutory orders that can be made in an action for divorce or separate maintenance, in favor of a wife, are orders against the husband, as provided in section 137 of the Civil Code of this state. This section measures the power of the court in the matter of allowing suit money and support pendente lite, and was intended to be exclusive and to embrace the entire subject of the allowance of alimony or maintenance pendente lite. Norman v. Superior Court, 75 Cal. App. 705, 243 P. 451; Eisenring v. Superior Court, 34 Cal. App. 749, 168 P. 1062, Sun Insurance Co. v. White, 123 Cal. 196, 55 P. 902; section 4, Civ. Code.

The only proper parties to a divorce or separate maintenance action are generally the husband and wife, but in some instances a third party may also be a proper party; for example, where it is charged that the husband has conveyed the community property, or even his separate property, with intent to defraud the wife of her rights therein, the grantee in such fraudulent conveyance may be made a party so that the property may be kept in statu quo pending the action, and upon a final determination the property rights may be finally adjudicated. Cummings v. Cummings, 75 Cal. 437, 17 P. 442; Weyer v. Weyer, 40 Cal. App. 765, 182 P. 776; Kashaw v. Kashaw et al., 3 Cal. 312, 9 Cal. Jur. 700.

[2, 3] A careful examination of the rather voluminous record convinces us that petitioner claimed, and now claims an interest in the money alleged to be in its hands, adverse to both Kenneth Shibley and Marion Shibley. The trial court was therefore without power in a summary proceeding to determine this issue. Petitioner was entitled to its day in court, with a full opportunity to present its defense and have a full hearing upon the merits. This constitutional right was denied petitioner. "It is a cardinal principle of our jurisprudence that one shall not be bound or concluded by a judgment, either in respect to his person or property, unless he has had his day in court, by which is meant until he has been duly cited to appear and has been afforded an opportunity to be heard, and upon such hearing to offer evidence in support of his cause." 5 Cal. Jur. 875, and cases there cited.

[4] Section 137 of the Civil Code gives the court power to issue an execution upon any order for temporary support and maintenance. Section 717 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that after a return of an execution against property of the judgment debtor, and upon proof, that any person has property of such judgment debtor, the judge may by order require such person to appear and answer concerning the same. Section 719 of the same Code provides that the judge upon such hearing may order any property belonging to the judgment debtor, which is in the hands of any other person, to be applied towards the satisfaction of the judgment, but with this express proviso: "But no such order can be made as to * * * property in the hands of any other person, * * * if such person claims an interest in the property adverse to the judgment debtor.

If we treat the proceeding taken against the petitioner in the court below as a proceeding supplementary to execution, still petitioner's rights could not be adjudicated in a summary proceeding. Colyear v. Superior Court, 40 Cal. App. 462, 181 P. 74.

The attorneys for respondent contend that, as petitioner made no specific or direct objection to the jurisdiction of the court below to make the order of June 27, 1927, said order is valid. This contention is wholly without merit. The order complained of, being beyond the jurisdiction of the court to make, is void, and can be collaterally attacked. Tonningsen v. Odd Fellows' Cem. Ass'n, 60 Cal. App. 568, 213 P 710. We think a further discussion is unnecessary

For the reasons above stated, we think that the alternative writ of prohibition heretofore issued should be made permanent; and it is so ordered.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

MARTIN v. BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF MENLO PARK et al. (Civ. 6776.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Feb. 13, 1929.

1. Municipal corporations ⚷159(1)—Clerk's certificate that recall petition was signed by requisite number of qualified voters was final (St. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 128, § 1).

Certificate of clerk of city of the first class that recall petition was signed by requisite number of qualified voters in accordance with provision of St. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 128, § 1, was final.

2. Municipal corporations ⚷159(1)—Fraud in securing signatures to petition for recall of members of city council is determinable in equity.

In case fraud had been committed in securing signatures to petition for recall of members of city council, a court of equity may be resorted to as the proper forum to determine such question under appropriate proceedings.

3. Mandamus ⚷74(2)—Mandamus will issue to compel city trustees to call special election for purpose of voting on recall petition (St. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 128, § 1).

Writ of mandate will issue to compel city trustees to call special election for purpose of voting on recall petition containing all requirements of St. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 128, § 1, and properly certified to by the clerk, since under the statute no discretion is vested in the trustees in question of calling such election.

Original mandamus by K. L. Martin against the Board of Trustees, known as the City Council, of the City of Menlo Park, and others. Writ granted.

Kincaid & Fitzpatrick, of Redwood City, for petitioner.

George K. Whitworth and Pardini & Scampini, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. Mandamus to compel the trustees of the city of Menlo Park to call a recall election. The petition recites that within three months last past petitioner and other qualified electors prepared and circulated a petition for the recall of Alfred E. Blake and Alexander Walker as trustees and members of the city council of the city of Menlo Park and in said petition demanded the election of a successor to each of said persons sought to be recalled. It is alleged that the petition was signed by qualified voters of said city in excess in number of 25 per cent. of the entire vote cast within such city for all candidates for the office of trustee and member of city council of the city of Menlo Park at the last preceding regular municipal election at which two trustees and members of the city council sought to be recalled were voted for. The petition contained a statement of the grounds on which the recall was sought and alleged that each signer to said petition of recall added to his signature, at the time of signing, his place of residence and occupation, giving street and number, or proper designation of his place of residence so that the same could be readily ascertained, and also added to his signature the date of signing said petition. Each separate paper to the petition had attached thereto an affidavit of the circulator that the signatures thereto were those of qualified electors and that they had signed the same.

On the 4th day of December, 1928, the recall petition was filed with the clerk of the city of Menlo Park, who examined the records of registration and ascertained therefrom that the petition was signed by the requisite number of qualified voters, and she thereupon attached to said petition her certificate showing the result of her examination. It appears therefrom that the petition contained the requisite number of bona fide signatures and qualified electors and was sufficient. Thereafter, on December 26, 1928, she submitted the petition to the board of trustees of said city, at their regular meeting, but the members thereof failed and refused to call a special election or to take any action thereon, and continued the matter to a regular meeting of the legislative body to be held on January 8, 1929. Petitioner, on said last-named date, demanded that the legislative body forthwith call a special election for the purpose of voting on the recall petition. The board refused the demand of petitioner and declined to act in the matter. Other allegations are to the effect that no regular election is to occur within 60 days or at any other time prior to the regular municipal election in April, 1930. An alternative writ of mandate was heretofore issued by this court.

[1-3] Respondents demurred to the petition upon various grounds, including insufficiency of facts, ambiguity, unintelligibility, and uncertainty. The demurrer was overruled and respondents answering set up, among other defenses, that they had properly performed their duties and the circulators of the recall petition had procured the names of the signers upon false representations, and that a sufficient number of signers so imposed upon had requested that their names be withdrawn; that when the number of signers so induced to sign the petition is deducted from the total number of signers there remains on said recall petition less than the number required by law. It is then alleged that the acts of the circulators constituted a palpable fraud on the signers, the trustees sought to be recalled, and the inhabitants generally of the city. The answer raises no issue of merit.

The city of Menlo Park is organized under the general law as a city of the sixth class. The provision relating to the recall of elective officers of incorporated cities and towns (Stats. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 128) provides that within ten days from the filing of the recall petition "the clerk shall examine and from the records of registration ascertain whether or not said petition is signed by the requisite number of qualified voters, and he shall attach to said petition his certificate showing the result of said examination." Section 1. The petition here shows that this has been done and the answer does not deny this fact. Having so certified, the determination upon the subject is final. Watts v. Superior Court, 36 Cal. App. 692, 173 P. 183; Ratfo v. Board of Trustees, 75 Cal. App. 724, 243 P. 466. In the case last cited it is held that the duty of the clerk is not judicial; he is not clothed with authority to receive extraneous evidence of the contents of the petition other than to ascertain from the records of registration whether or not the petition is properly signed by the requisite number of voters. If fraud has been committed, a court of equity may be resorted to as the proper forum to determine such questions under appropriate proceedings. Williams v. Gill, 65 Cal. App. 129, 223 P. 559.

The statute further provides that, "if the petition shall be found to be sufficient, the clerk shall submit the same to the legislative body of the city or town without delay, whereupon, that body shall forthwith cause a special election to be held," etc. Under the statute no discretion is vested in the trustees in the question of calling such election (Good v. Common Council, 5 Cal. App. 265, 90 P. 44), provided the petition contains the statement required by the statute. Here the petition contains all the requirements of the statute and is properly certified to by the clerk. This being so, it is the duty of the board to call the election.

It is therefore ordered that a writ of mandate issue from this court commanding respondents to forthwith cause a special election to be held in the city of Menlo Park within not less than 35 nor more than 40 days from the order calling such election, to determine whether the voters shall recall the officers involved.

WELLNITZ v. SACRAMENTO SUBURBAN FRUIT LANDS CO. (Civ. 3610.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 19, 1929.

Rehearing Denied March 21, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 18, 1929.

1. Fraud ⚷55—False representations to others, in selling other parcels in same tract made two years before agreement, held admissible in purchaser's action for fraud.

In purchaser's action to recover damages for fraudulent representations in sale of land, evidence of similar false representations made to others, in effort to sell other parcels of land in colony, was properly admitted, though evidence related to more or less distant parcels of land in tract which defendant was colonizing, and some of the representations were made two years before agreement involved in case, where all representations were made in connection with colonization scheme.

2. Fraud ⚷55—Similar representations to those made in purchaser's action for fraud are admissible, if showing they were parts of single scheme.

In action by purchaser to recover damages for fraudulent representations in sale of lands, similar false representations are admissible, if there is such connection between them as to warrant inference that they were all part of single scheme in which same motive was operative.

★For opinion on rehearing, see 276 P. 154.

Action by John E. Wellnitz against the Sacramento Suburban Fruit Lands Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Butler, Van Dyke & Desmond, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Ralph H. Lewis and George E. McCutchen, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for damages on account of defendant's fraudulent representations in the sale to the plaintiff of lands in this state. The agreement out of which the controversy arose was executed by the parties in the state of Minnesota, in which state the defendant was incorporated and has its principal offices and in which the plaintiff resided at the time of the execution of the agreement. The land in question consists of 5 acres, for which the plaintiff agreed to pay $2,000. In part payment thereof he conveyed to the defendant property in Minnesota of the agreed value of $1,200. Thereafter he became entitled to a credit of $400 additional, leaving unpaid on the purchase price of the five acres the sum of $400. The principal false representation upon which the plaintiff relies for a recovery is the defendant's statement that the land "was of the fair and reasonable market value of $2,000," whereas it was not "of any value in excess of $50." Judgment was demanded for the difference, or $1,950. Two grounds only are urged for a reversal: (1) That the court erred in instructing the jury as to the measure of damages, and (2) that evidence was erroneously admitted of similar false representations made by the defendant to other purchasers of its land in the same colony. The court instructed the jury as follows: "The measure of damages which a plaintiff is entitled to recover in an action for deceit in the sale of property, where the facts justify a finding in favor of a plaintiff is the difference between the value of the property purchased by plaintiff, at the time of the purchase, and its value had the property been as represented."

While conceding that the instruction correctly states the California rule as to the measure of damages in such a case, the appellant contends that, since the false representations were made in Minnesota and the agreement was executed in that state, the measure of damages is that provided by the laws of Minnesota. Appellant cites Knight v. Leighton, 110 Minn. 254, 124 N. W. 1090, in which it is held, quoting from the syllabus: "In an action for deceit and fraud in the purchase of lands, the measure of damages is the difference in the value of that with which the plaintiff parted and that which he received in exchange." In the later case of Townsend v. Jahr, 147 Minn. 30, 179 N. W. 486, the court said: "The one general principle of universal application is that the party guilty of the fraud is liable to respond in such damages as naturally and proximately resulted from the fraud. * * * This loss will ordinarily be the 'difference between what he parted with and what he got.' [Citing Knight v. Leighton, supra, and other cases.] * * * Where the transaction is a sale and the price has been paid, the rule adopted by the trial court, namely, the difference between the actual value and the purchase price, will ordinarily prove the correct one and will amount to the same thing as 'the difference between what he parted with and what he got.' * * * We do not wish to be understood as holding that this may not be the rule even though the purchase price has not been paid, if the vendee remains liable for the unpaid balance of the price."

In the instant case the court instructed the jury on the theory that the plaintiff remained "liable for the unpaid balance of the price." The verdict of the jury states the total damages suffered by the plaintiff and the unpaid balance of the purchase price, and then deducts the latter sum from the former, returning a net verdict for the difference.

It is apparent from what has been said that, in this case, the result is the same, whether the California rule or the Minnesota rule as to the measure of damages be followed. In either case one factor is the value of the property purchased. Under the California rule the other factor is what the property would have been worth if it had been what it was represented to be. But the false representation was that the property was worth what the plaintiff agreed to pay for it, the sum which the plaintiff became liable to pay, and the sum with which he was charged by the method followed in arriving at a verdict. Applying the Minnesota rule as stated in Townsend v. Jahr, supra, the result is exactly the same. It is unnecessary, therefore, to determine which rule is applicable to the facts of this case.

[1, 2] Evidence of similar false representations made to others in an effort to sell other parcels of land in the colony was properly admitted. Butler-Veitch, Inc., v. Barnard, 77 Cal. App. 709, 247 P. 597; J. B. Colt Co. v. Freitas, 76 Cal. App. 278, 244 P. 916. Appellants contend that such similar representations were too remote in time and place to be admissible; that they related to more or less distant parcels of land in the 12,000-acre tract which the defendant was colonizing; that the soil of some of such parcels was not the same as that of the parcel in suit, and that some of the representations were made as much as two years prior to the execution of the agreement involved herein. While 40 pages of testimony, selected from the 1,100 pages of the reporter's transcript, are printed in appellant's opening brief, the evidence relied upon to support the foregoing contention is not pointed out, except that the names of some of the witnesses, who testified that the representations were made, are given. Taking appellant's statement as accurate, however, it appears that the evidence was properly admitted. The various representations were all made in connection with the defendant's colonization scheme and as parts of its selling campaign, which continued through several years. Remoteness in time or place is a relative term. It is sufficient if there is such a connection between the representations as to warrant the inference that they are all parts of a single scheme or plan, in which the same motive is operative. Seimer v. James Dickinson Farm Mortg. Co. (D. C.) 299 F. 651; Hoxie v. Home Insurance Co., 32 Conn. 21, 85 Am. Dec. 240, 242. Appellant made the same contention in Sacramento Suburban Fruit Lands Co. v. Elm (C. C. A.) 29 F.(2d) 233. The similar representations in that case, however, were more remote in time than those in this case. The opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals overruling the contention is particularly in point here.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. CLENSEY et al. (Cr. 1738.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 20, 1929.

1. Criminal law 🔑200(6)—Dismissal of count for conspiracy to commit robbery will not bar further prosecution of count for aiding and abetting robbery.

Dismissal of count for conspiracy to commit robbery will not bar further prosecution of count for aiding and abetting robbery, since offenses are not identical; one involving element of conspiracy which is entirely lacking in the other.

2. Conspiracy 🔑47—Robbery 🔑24(1)—Evidence held to support conviction of conspiracy to commit robbery and robbery (Pen. Code, § 971).

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit robbery and robbery evidence showing that part of stolen property was recovered from each of defendants, together with their admissions, held sufficient to support conviction, especially under Pen. Code, § 971.

3. Criminal law 🔑1175—Defendants cannot complain of conviction of second degree robbery, though first degree robbery was in fact committed.

Defendants, charged with first degree robbery, cannot complain that they were convicted of second degree robbery under showing that first degree robbery was in fact committed.

4. Criminal law 🔑409—Proof of commission of robbery and possession of stolen property warranted admission and consideration of defendant's admissions.

Proof of actual commission of robbery, together with possession of stolen property by defendants, was sufficient to warrant admission and consideration by jury of admissions made by defendants.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Douglas L. Edmonds, Judge.

Arthur Clensey and others were convicted of conspiracy to commit robbery and robbery, and they appeal. Affirmed.

Buel R. Wood, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

THOMPSON, J. An indictment was returned by the grand jury of Los Angeles county, charging the defendants Arthur Clensey, William Woods, Horace Miles, Walter Bucan, Carol Morris, Stewart Jones, Malcolm Jones, Julius Becker, H. L. Cokes, and Charles Swafford, in count 1 thereof, with the crime of criminal conspiracy to commit robbery, and in count 2 with the offense of robbery. The defendants Bucan, Morris, and Stewart Jones were not apprehended. During the trial, count 1 of the indictment was dismissed as to the defendants Cokes and Swafford. Count 2 was dismissed as to the defendant Malcolm Jones at the conclusion of the taking of evidence. The jury found the defendant Julius Becker not guilty, but returned a verdict of guilty against the defendants Arthur Clensey, Horace Miles, and William Woods. These last-named defendants prosecute this appeal from the judgments pronounced upon the verdict and from the order denying their motions for a new trial.

[1] The first contention urged by appellants is that by count 1 of the indictment and its dismissal during the trial of the cause the appellants were placed once in jeopardy, and hence they could not be prosecuted or convicted of the crime of robbery. In its essence, the argument amounts to this: That, since the offense of criminal conspiracy to commit robbery involves elements the same, or nearly so, as are involved when two or more persons aid and abet the commission of robbery, the dismissal of the former ought to stand as a bar to the further prosecution of the latter. The position of appellants cannot be upheld. The standpoint from which we shall discuss the problem will probably be less free from doubt if we assume, solely for the purposes hereof, that the situation brought about by the dismissal is the same as though the jury had returned a verdict of not guilty on the first count. A reason for indulging this presumption is that all the rules relating to a plea of former jeopardy cannot be applied to this case because the appellants were tried but once upon an indictment containing two counts. People v. McDaniels, 137 Cal. 192, 69 P. 1006, 59 L. R. A. 578, 92 Am. St. Rep. 81; People v. Day, 199 Cal. 78, 248 P. 250; People v. Degnen, 70 Cal. App. 567, 234 P. 129. However, it cannot possibly be argued that they were prejudiced to any greater degree than they would have been had an acquittal resulted on the first count. The question can then be stated in this way: Were the offenses stated in the two counts identical? In People v. Day, 199 Cal. 78, 248 P. 250, People v. Vanderbilt, 199 Cal. 461, 249 P. 867, and People v. Kimmerle (Cal. App.) 265 P. 525, it is said that the test by which we may determine whether an acquittal of one count is tantamount to an acquittal on the other is whether there is an essential element involved in the first which is not necessary in the second; i. e., whether the offenses are in fact identical or whether the verdicts would be necessarily inconsistent. It is too apparent for argument that the offenses here charged are not identical. The crime charged in the first count, that of a criminal conspiracy to commit robbery, is by its very name distinguished from the offense of robbery. The one involves the element of conspiracy, entirely lacking in the other. And to say that a person may not aid and abet without entering into a conspiracy with the other participants is to premise the argument upon a self-evident fallacy. This disposition of the argument upon the question also makes it unnecessary for us to comment further upon appellants' last assignment of error to the effect that the jury were not permitted to pass upon their "claim of former jeopardy indicated in the record." Inasmuch as in law no such plea could be interposed, there was no question of fact upon which the jury could possibly pass.

[2] We now approach the claim of appellants that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdicts, and it becomes necessary to jot down the testimony supporting the conclusion of the jury. The evidence establishes beyond any question that a bank messenger and the driver of a Ford roadster employed by the Pacific National Bank were held up and robbed of at least $59,475 by three men in a Packard sedan on March 2, 1928, between 12:30 and 1 p. m. in the 600 block on Chicago street, Los Angeles. About 2 o'clock in the afternoon of the same day, Mrs. Della Nila, who was outside her residence at 1157 South Mott street, saw three men drive up in a Packard sedan, and change from the Packard to a Hupmobile sedan. As they were in the act of changing cars, they dropped some papers, which they immediately picked up and drove away. On March 2, Mrs Margery La Vernon, residing at 1344 North Harvard, one unit of a bungalow court, saw some new tenants (consisting of three men and two girls) occupy a bungalow across the drive from her, another unit in the same court. Two of the men identified by her were the appellant Clensey and the defendant H. L. Cokes. This witness also testified that she saw about the premises occupied by Clensey and the others a Hupmobile, a Cadillac, and a Lincoln sedan, and noted that the Lincoln sedan came on a Friday or Saturday afternoon or evening, remaining there until about 6 p. m., when some bags or sacks were unloaded and taken into the kitchen. (We insert parenthetically that March 2 was a Friday.) Police officers testified to a conversation had with the appellant Miles in which he is said to have stated that he had known about the intended robbery for six months and had taken the matter up with the defendant Stewart Jones, and that he had received $3,000 out of the proceeds, from which he had given Stewart Jones $1,500, paying some bills of his own with a part of the other $1,500, concealing $1,000 thereof in his automobile, and when the officers were about to arrest him, carelessly throwing the remainder into a closet in his apartment. Officer O'Connor testified that he found and recovered from among some old clothes in a closet at the apartment of appellant Miles fifty-five $5 bills and one hundred sixteen $1 bills, and also $1,000 in Pacific National Bank notes of $10 denominations from the automobile of this appellant. Officer Cahill testified to a conversation with the appellant Miles in which the latter is said to have admitted that he talked to the appellant Clensey about the proposed holdup after Miles had talked to him, and that he had received in the neighborhood of $13,000 in currency from the appellant Clensey, of which amount he had given the appellant Miles $3,000, intrusting the remainder contained in a grip with a friend of his named Christie. This officer also testified that Christie accompanied him to the Hotel Carleton and there turned over to him a package containing $3,000, a part of $9,618 left with him by the appellant Woods. Testimony was also introduced covering a conversation with the appellant Clensey in which he is related to have said that the appellant Woods' version of the affair was correct, except that he (Clensey) did not burn a suit of clothes as Woods is quoted to have said. The officers further testified that they went with the appellant Clensey to Santa Barbara, where, directed by him, they located $17,535 in currency and silver contained in a trunk bearing the initials "H. L. C."; that, on the way to Santa Barbara, Clensey said that Walter Bucan and Carol Morris were the men who actually committed the robbery. It was also testified that on March 14, 1928, the officers, accompanied by Clensey, went to 1342 North

Harvard boulevard, and opened the door with a key obtained from Clensey, and that, while there, the last-named appellant stated that the money had been divided at this house, although he was not present at the time; that two packages had been left for him, one of which he had given to the appellant Woods. It should be observed here that Mrs. La Vernon, who identified appellant, lived at 1344 North Harvard. It will also be noted that a part of the stolen money was recovered from each one of the appellants, although that recovered from the appellant Woods had been by him intrusted to a third party. A teller of the Pacific National Bank was put on the stand and identified by number bills recovered from the trunk of the appellant Clensey and from the package of the appellant Woods. It cannot be seriously questioned that the testimony amply supports the determination of the jury, when we bear in mind the oft-stated rule prevailing in California, codified in section 971 of the Penal Code, that there is no distinction between an accessory before the fact and a principal. Here the actual robbery is not in dispute, nor can it be successfully argued that the appellants were not found to be in possession of the stolen property, which, together with their admissions, renders almost impossible any other conclusion than that they were instrumental in plotting and bringing about the commission of the crime, although they may not have actually participated in the physical acts of the robbery.

[3] Appellants also assert that the verdicts rendered are without support either in law or in the facts, for the reason that appellants were charged with first degree robbery and that a first degree robbery was in fact committed, and therefore the appellants, as aiders and abettors, could not be convicted, as they were by the verdicts, of second degree robbery. We may concede, as we have already indicated, that the evidence was sufficient to support verdicts against the appellants of first degree robbery, but the fact that they were found guilty of a lesser offense is now no reason why they should be altogether absolved. We know of no better way to express our opinion than to quote from People v. Edwards, 72 Cal. App. 102, 236 P. 944, as follows: "If the jurors paltered with their oaths and with the law they must make their own peace with conscience. If appellant was wrongfully acquitted on the first and second counts the error was in his favor, and he cannot be heard to complain. The fact that the jurors relieved him on two counts does not oblige this court to relieve him on the third." To the same effect, see People v. Stovall (Cal. App.) 271 P. 576, and People v. Vanderbilt, supra. In this last-cited case, we find a statement that is also very much to the point. It says: "If there be evidence sufficient to support a verdict finding an accused person guilty of a lesser offense which is included within the offense charged against him, he may be found guilty of such lesser and included offense, notwithstanding the evidence shows that (he is guilty of the greater and including offense instead of the lesser offense)."

[4] The only assignment of error we have not formally discussed is that the corpus delicti was not established, and yet what has been said concerning the sufficiency of the evidence fully answers appellants' contention. It cannot be doubted under the rule declared in People v. Selby, 198 Cal. 426, 245 P. 426, and many earlier California authorities there mentioned, that proof of the actual commission of the robbery, together with possession of the stolen property by appellants, was sufficient to warrant the admission and consideration by the jury of the admissions made by the appellants.

Judgments and order affirmed.

MAYS v. WANN et al. (Civ. 3347.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 13, 1929.

Rehearing Denied March 15, 1929.

1. Contracts 🔑354—Finding that defendant lessees contracted for baling of hay held not to preclude finding that codefendant lessor did so, in view of allegation that "defendants" agreed to pay therefor.

Trial court's findings that defendant lessees entered into contract with plaintiff to bale hay held not to preclude finding that codefendant lessor entered into such contract; allegation of amended complaint that "defendants" agreed to pay plaintiff for hay baled entitling him to prove that agreement was made with one or all of them.

2. Pleading 🔑237(6)—Amendment of complaint to conform to evidence that defendants' lessor agreed to pay for hay baled held properly permitted.

In action against lessees for amount due for baling hay on leased land, court did not err in permitting amendment of complaint to conform to evidence that codefendant owner of land agreed to pay plaintiff for hay baled.

3. Pleading 🔑229—Amendments are liberally allowed.

5. Appeal and error 🔑959(1)—Pleading 🔑236(1)—Allowance of amendments to pleadings is in discretion of trial court, whose action will not be disturbed unless discretion was abused (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Allowance of amendments to pleadings in interest of justice, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, is within discretion of trial court, whose action will not be disturbed by appellate court unless abuse of such discretion is shown.

6. Pleading 🔑237(8)—Pleading may be amended to conform to proof, if cause of action is not changed.

An amendment of a pleading to conform to the proof may always be made, if the cause of action is not thereby changed.

7. Pleading 🔑249(4)—Amendment changing count on express contract to one on quantum meruit does not change cause of action.

An amendment of a pleading which changes a count from one on an express contract to one on quantum meruit does not substitute a new cause of action.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Rolfe L. Thompson, Judge.

Action by J. B. Mays against Emerson Wann, the Tubbs Island Land Company, a corporation, and others. From a judgment against defendant Land Company and orders denying its motions to strike out an amendment to plaintiff's amended complaint and vacate the judgment, it appeals. Affirmed.

F. A. Meyer, of Petaluma, Wheeler & Wheeler, for appellant.

A. W. Hollingsworth, W. N. Vallandigham, and W. F. Cowan, all of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

JAMISON, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff brought this action to recover from defendants a balance of $1,332.23, which he claimed they owed him for baling hay, and for fuel furnished to the amount of $45.

In his original complaint he named as defendants only defendants Wann, Towel, and Chase and the copartnership of which they were members. In his amended complaint filed April 9, 1926, some six months before the trial of this case, he joined the Golden Eagle Milling Company, a corporation, the Tubbs Island Land Company, a corporation, and Howard C. Price, as defendants. This amended complaint set forth that during the year 1925, at the instance and request of the defendants, plaintiff performed work, labor, and service upon the land of the Tubbs Island Land Company in baling hay for said defendants, and at their instance and request did bale 1,945 tons of hay, and that as consideration therefor it was agreed by defendants that they would pay to plaintiff $2.50 per ton for baling said hay and to furnish plaintiff with fuel. The case was tried by the court, without a jury, and the judgment was in favor of the Golden Eagle Milling Company and Howard C. Price for their costs, and against Wann, Towel, and Chase, on their default, in the sum of $1,332.23, and against the Tubbs Island Land Company after the trial of the case for $746.09.

The Tubbs Island Land Company, hereinafter referred to as the appellant, owned a tract of land consisting of some 3,000 acres, and in the fore part of January, 1925, leased said land, farm implements, and machinery to defendants Wann, Towel, and Chase from January 6, 1925, to October 1, 1925. The crop raised thereon was hay, and by the terms of the lease appellant was to receive one-half of same as rental. The expense of harvesting and baling said hay was to be borne by the lessees. The said lessees entered into a contract with respondent to bale the said hay, agreeing to pay him therefor $2.50 per ton and to furnish him fuel for cooking. The lessees were without sufficient funds to carry on their operations under the lease and in the beginning were financed by appellant. About the 1st of July, 1925, the lessees arranged with defendant Golden Eagle Milling Company to aid them financially. This the said Milling Company did until about September 21, 1925, when it ceased to do so.

According to the evidence produced by respondent, when the Milling Company ceased to finance the lessees the appellant, through its secretary, Howard C. Price, in order to keep respondent and his employees on the job of baling the hay, promised respondent that if he would continue baling the hay appellant would pay him for his work in so doing, and that, relying upon this promise, respondent continued to bale said hay up to and including October 17, 1925.

The court found that on or about the 21st day of September, 1925, appellant promised and agreed to pay respondent for all hay baled by him after that date at the rate of $2.50 per ton, and that under said agreement respondent baled 549.343 tons of hay, appellant paying to respondent on account thereof $635.27, leaving a balance owing to respondent by appellant of $746.09.

On March 7, 1927, pursuant to an order of the court, and prior to signing and filing the findings of fact, respondent filed an amendment to said amended complaint reciting the facts regarding the agreement with appellant of September 21, 1925, as aforesaid, the said amendment having been directed by the court to be filed to conform to the evidence adduced at the trial.

Appellant filed a motion to strike out the amendment to the amended complaint and also a motion to vacate the judgment, both of which motions were denied by the court. Thereupon appellant appealed from the judgment of the court rendered against it, and from the orders of the court denying its motion to strike and its motion to vacate the judgment. In his opening brief appellant specifies several errors of the trial court, but states that they may be argued under two heads, namely: That the judgment is not supported by the findings, and that the amendment to the amended complaint should have been stricken out.

[1] There is ample evidence to support the findings of the court that appellant, through its secretary and general manager, Howard C. Price, agreed to pay respondent for his services in baling said hay from and after September, 1925, at a compensation of $2.50 per ton for each ton baled. Nor is the fact disputed that after that sale respondent did bale 549.343 tons of hay and that the sum of $746.09 is still owing and unpaid to him for said service.

[2-4] Appellant contends that, because of the fact that the trial court found that on June 25, 1925, defendants Wann, Towel, and Chase entered into a contract with respondent to bale the said hay, that ipso facto the court is precluded from afterwards finding that appellant entered into such contract with respondent. We see no merit in this contention. Reference to the amended complaint will show that therein respondent alleged that during the year 1925 the defendants (including appellant) agreed to pay respondent $2.50 per ton for the hay he baled. Under this allegation he undoubtedly had the right to prove that the agreement was made with one or all of the defendants. The amended complaint appears to have been sufficient to have justified the introduction of evidence as to appellant's agreement with respondent, but whether that be true or not there was no error in permitting the amendment.

[5-7] Amendments under our practice are liberally allowed. Stoops v. Pistachio, 70 Cal. App. 772, 234 P. 423. Such amendments may be made to a complaint either during the trial or after the evidence is all in. Lee v. Murphy, 119 Cal. 365, 51 P. 549, 955; Brown v. Hurst, 1 Cal. App. 752, 82 P. 1056. The power given under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure to allow amendments in the interest of justice is uniformly held to be in the discretion of the trial court, and this court will not disturb the action of the trial court except where an abuse of that discretion is shown. Gartlan v. Hooper Co., 177 Cal. 422, 170 P. 1115; Lee v. Murphy, supra; Stoops v. Pistachio, supra. An amendment to conform to the proof may always be made provided the cause of action is not thereby changed. Koch v. Wilcoxon, 30 Cal. App. 520, 158 P. 1048; Hancock v. Board of Education, 140 Cal. 554, 74 P. 44. An amendment which changes the count from one upon an express contract to one upon a quantum meruit does not substitute a new cause of action. Wardrobe v. Miller, 53 Cal. App. 370, 200 P. 77; Turner & Dahnken v. Bauer, 28 Cal. App. 312, 152 P. 308; Cox v. McLaughlin, 76 Cal. 60, 18 P. 100, 9 Am. St. Rep. 164.

We think that the evidence supports the findings and that the findings support the judgment.

The order denying the motion to strike out the amendment to the amended complaint and the motion to vacate the judgment and the judgment of the court is each affirmed.

In re STOCKTON'S ESTATE. (Civ. 6642.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 21, 1929.

Appeal and error ⚷909(5)—Appellate court must assume in support of decree that contract construed was unambiguous, or, if ambiguous, that ambiguity was properly removed (Civ. Code, § 1635 et seq.).

Where decree of distribution recited that heirs employed attorneys to secure to them their rights as heirs of deceased, and agreed that attorneys should receive 50 per cent. of whatever might be recovered, appellate court must assume, in absence of evidence, that contract between heirs and attorneys was not ambiguous, or, if ambiguous, that ambiguity was removed by ordinary and legal aids admissible for interpreting written instruments, under Civ. Code, § 1635 et seq., and that showing was made and was satisfactory to trial court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; E. C. Robinson, Judge.

Proceeding between Alice C. Chase and others, heirs at law, and Milton T. Farmer and others, in the matter of the estate of Lemuel D. Stockton, also known as L. D. Stockton, deceased. From the decree of distribution, Alice C. Chase and other heirs appeal. Affirmed.

Paul A. McCarthy, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Athearn, Chandler & Farmer and Walter Hoffman, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. From the decree of distribution rendered in the matter of the estate of Lemuel D. Stockton, certain of his heirs have appealed and have brought up the judgment roll. There is no bill of exceptions. The appellants present only one point, and that is that the trial court erroneously construed the contract of employment of the firm of Athearn, Chandler & Farmer as attorneys at law.

The deceased left a document purporting to be his last will and testament. His heirs at law were Emma Stockton, Frank I. Stockton, William J. Stockton, Robert B. Stockton, Alice P. Chase, all of whom were brothers and sisters, and Cornelia Sullivan and Jefferson Stockton, respectively a niece and nephew, being the children of Thomas J. Stockton, a predeceased brother of the testator. By the terms of the purported will, the decedent devised to Emma Stockton $2,000; to William J. Stockton, Robert B. Stockton, Frank I. Stockton, Emma Stockton, Alice P. Chase, and to the children of Thomas J. Stockton, deceased, the purported will contained a devise of an undivided one-half interest in and to a tract of 40 acres located in Mariposa county. After probate, certain of the heirs employed the law firm of Athearn, Chandler & Farmer to contest the will. That firm did so, and the will was held invalid, and thereafter the estate was administered upon under the theory that the decedent had died intestate. The decree recites the names of the persons signing the contract of employment and that they executed "an agreement in writing with Messrs. Athearn, Chandler and Farmer, attorneys at law, wherein and whereby said heirs at law employed said attorneys to take such action as said attorneys might deem advisable and proper for the purpose of securing to them their rights as heirs at law of said deceased, and agreed that said attorneys, as their compensation, should receive 50% of whatever might be recovered for said heirs at law, said attorneys, however, to advance all costs and expenses in said matter. * * *" It should be stated in passing that during the controversy over the will, etc., a compromise was entered into whereby certain purported specific bequests were compromised and $2,000 was paid to the legatees thereunder. The appellants call to our attention that, in construing the contract of employment of the attorneys above mentioned, the trial court deducted from the total value of the estate $2,000, and thereafter the trial court distributed one-half of the remainder to the heirs of the deceased and one-half to the attorneys in accordance with its construction of the contract. The appellants claim that the trial court should have deducted the $2,000 above mentioned, and then that it should have deducted the sums which would have passed to said heirs under the will, and then, and not until then, should the residue have been divided fifty-fifty between the heirs and the attorneys. This contention is based on the expression "might be recovered" as used in the decree above quoted. Appellants say those words mean "to win back"; that at best the contract is ambiguous; and, being between attorney and client, the ambiguity will be resolved in favor of the client. If this were a presentation in the trial court and a written contract was offered, all of these arguments would have due weight. However, no contract is before us, but a passage contained in the decree. It does not purport to contain the written contract, and does not purport to quote the provisions in hæc verba. In support of the judgment of the trial court, this court is bound to presume that the word "recover" is the language of the trial court and was selected for its ordinary meaning at law as distinguished from its lay meaning. See 34 Cyc. 763; Cent. Dict. "Recover," subd. 7. In other words, we are bound to assume, in the absence of the evidence, that the contract was not ambiguous, or, if ambiguous, that the ambiguity was removed by the ordinary and legal aids admissible for interpreting written instruments (Civ. Code, § 1635 et seq.), and that the showing was made and was satisfactory to the trial court.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

GILBERT v. UNITED STATES FIDELITY & GUARANTY CO. (Civ. 6151.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 19, 1929.

Appeal and error 🔑773(2)—Appellant's inexcusable failure to tender opening brief for filing until over six months after transcript was filed requires dismissal of appeal.

Appellant, not tendering its opening brief for filing until over six months after filing of transcript, is in default, so as to require dismissal of appeal on appellee's motion; neglect not being excusable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Guy F. Bush, Judge.

Action by Charles L. Gilbert against the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company, a corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. On notice of motion to dismiss the appeal. Appellant's motion for leave to file a brief denied, and motion to dismiss the appeal granted.

James E. Fenton, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Julius Patrosso and C. C. Mishler, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

YORK, J. This matter comes up on a notice of motion to dismiss appeal. The record discloses the fact that the transcript herein was filed on July 19, 1928, that the notice to dismiss the appeal and the affidavit supporting the motion were filed on January 16, 1929, and thereafter, on January 24, 1929, the appellant tendered to the court his so-called appellant's opening brief for filing, which was not filed by the clerk, but was held by him and was presented to this court at the time that the notice of motion to dismiss the appeal was heard. It was referred to in the affidavit of James E. Fenton, attorney for appellant, as stating the correct and true basis of his appeal, and is practically used by him in lieu of an affidavit of merits to support the motion for leave to file such brief of appellant, which motion was heard at the same time that the motion to dismiss the appeal came on for hearing.

In accordance with the rules of this court, the appellant is in default in failing to file the brief on time. The neglect shown cannot be considered as excusable.

The motion for leave to file brief is denied, and the motion to dismiss appeal is granted.

PRAY et al. v. ANTHONY. (Civ. 6522.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Feb. 15, 1929.

Rehearing Denied March 16, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 15, 1929.

1. Brokers 🔑43(3)—Written authorization to broker to sell defendant's house, without describing location, held sufficient, where defendant owned no other house in state (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6).

Written authorization to broker to sell defendant's house, without describing location, held properly admitted in evidence in action for broker's commission, where there was evidence that defendant owned no other house in state; authorization being sufficient under statute of frauds (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6), since property could be identified.

2. Brokers 🔑43(3)—Broker's contracts cannot be declared void for uncertainty in description of property, which can be cured by proof of extrinsic facts (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6).

Broker's contracts cannot be declared void under statute of frauds (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6), merely because of defect, uncertainty, or ambiguity in description of property to be sold, when such defect can be cured by allegations and proof of extrinsic facts and circumstances.

3. Evidence 🔑594—Uncontradicted testimony that defendant owned no other house in state than one he authorized broker to sell prima facie established fact.

Where broker's evidence, showing that at time authorization was signed defendant owned no other house in state than one he authorized broker to sell, was uncontradicted and unimpeached, such evidence was legally sufficient to establish prima facie fact sought to be proved thereby, in broker's action for commission.

4. Brokers 🔑53—Where owner and purchaser were brought together through broker's efforts while broker's contract was in force, and owner consummated sale, broker was entitled to commissions.

Where vendor and purchaser were brought together through efforts of broker, who had been duly employed as such while contract of employment was still in force, and sale was consummated by vendor with purchaser the broker had procured on terms and for price acceptable to vendor, broker was entitled to payment of full commissions.

5. Brokers 🔑44—Authorization to sell house was not terminated by lapse of five years, where it contained cancellation clause, but no notice of cancellation was given.

Authorization to broker to sell house was not terminated by lapse of five years between time it was given and date of sale, where authorization contained cancellation clause granting owner right to cancel agency on giving two weeks' notice, but such notice was never given.

6. Estoppel 🔑92(3)—Acceptance of benefit of broker's services, by selling to purchaser procured by broker, estopped owner to claim authorization had lapsed.

Sale by owner to purchaser whom broker procured amounts to acceptance by him of benefit of broker's services in initiating and carrying on negotiations, which estopped him from claiming that authorization to broker to sell property had lapsed.

7. Brokers 🔑86(7)—Evidence held to show broker was not purchaser's agent.

In action for broker's commissions, facts and circumstances held to show that broker was not agent of purchaser of house.

8. Brokers 🔑85(6, 7)—Letter from owner's agent and conversations between agent and broker held admissible to show broker's performance, though agent's authority was not in writing.

In action for broker's commission for selling real property, letter from owner's agent and substance of conversations broker had with such agent held admissible to show performance on part of broker, and that broker's contract had been neither abandoned nor rescinded, though agent's authority to act was not in writing.

9. Brokers 🔑85(1)—In action for broker's commission, recordation of deed from owner to purchasers was admissible (Code Civ. Proc. § 1951).

In action for broker's commission, recordation of deed from defendant owner to purchasers was admissible, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1951.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Upon trial before a jury, a verdict was rendered in plaintiffs' favor for the amount claimed to be due. Judgment was entered accordingly, and defendant took two appeals—one from the judgment, and the other from an order denying his motion for judgment in his favor notwithstanding the verdict. Summarized, defendant's grounds of appeal are that the evidence is insufficient in fact and in law to sustain the verdict or the judgment, and that the trial court erred in ruling upon the admissibility of evidence, and in refusing to give certain instructions proposed by defendant.

The complaint alleged that defendant entered into a written contract with Mrs. Pray, whereby he agreed that, if she would produce a purchaser for the house belonging to defendant in Hillsborough, San Mateo county, Cal., he would pay her a commission of five per cent. upon completion of the sale; that in pursuance of such contract she produced as purchasers Henry Duffy and wife, to whom defendant subsequently sold and conveyed the property, but that thereafter he refused to pay her the agreed commission. The substance of the evidence supporting the foregoing allegations is as follows:

Mrs. Pray had been engaged in the real estate business in Burlingame for a number of years, and through her agency defendant acquired the property in question, which he occupied as a home until he moved to Los Angeles. Thereafter the house remained vacant for a long time, and eventually, in 1920, he requested Mrs. Pray to find a buyer for it. In furtherance of such request he addressed a communication to her, reading in part as follows: "San Francisco, California, October 28th, 1920. Mrs. Pray, Burlingame, California—My Dear Mrs. Pray: If you will produce a customer for my house, who will purchase the house on terms satisfactory to me and at a price satisfactory to me, upon completion of the transaction, provided I complete the transaction, will pay you a commission of 5 per cent. * * * [Signed] Earle C. Anthony."

Thereafter Mrs. Pray made a number of efforts to interest prospective buyers in the place, but no definite price had been fixed, and in 1924 further correspondence was had between defendant and Mrs. Pray as to the price, and also with reference to the different articles of household furnishings which would or would not be included in the sale. Part of the correspondence consisted of a telegram reading as follows: "Los Angeles, Calif. Price of house $60,000 net to me unfurnished but including all draperies, carpets, linoleum, wall coverings excepting oriental rugs in studio and passage from studio and dining room. [Signed] Earle C. Anthony."

In 1925 defendant was traveling in Europe, but had directed his office manager in San Francisco, named Sahland, to act for him during his absence in the matter of the disposal of his house. During the month of August of that year Mrs. Duffy called at Mrs. Pray's office with a view to purchasing a home in that vicinity. She was accompanied by mutual friends, who had recommended Mrs. Pray's agency. Mrs. Pray immediately proposed the Anthony home, and drove with Mrs. Duffy to visit the premises. She pointed out certain attractive features of the property she thought would appeal to Mrs. Duffy, and also designated the numerous articles of household furnishings to be included in the sale. Mrs. Duffy, after expressing herself as being much pleased with the property, said that she would like to have her husband look it over, but stated that he would likely insist on carrying on the negotiations for its purchase directly with the owner. Mrs. Pray replied that such arrangement would be entirely satisfactory to her, but she explained that Mr. Anthony was then in Europe, and suggested that the matter be taken up with Mr. Sahland, and before leaving the premises that day Mrs. Pray instructed the caretaker, in Mrs. Duffy's presence, to allow the latter and her husband to inspect the same whenever they called. The next morning Mrs. Pray phoned Sahland's office to tell him of the prospective sale to the Duffys, and shortly afterwards Sahland phoned Mrs. Pray's office to the effect that he would do whatever he could to help Mrs. Pray consummate such sale. Thereafter Mrs. Duffy visited the property several times, and occasionally was accompanied by her husband. On one of these visits, when Mr. Duffy was present, they were shown about the property by a Mrs. Hart, an employee in Mrs. Pray's office, and on another occasion Sahland was there, and the Duffys explained to him that they were there through the agency of Mrs. Pray.

About this time the negotiations were suspended for several weeks, due to the fact that the Duffys were traveling. However, on October 8, 1925, Mrs. Pray mailed a letter to defendant at his San Francisco office, confirming her previous reports to Sahland regarding the negotiations carried on by her with the Duffys, and in this regard she stated: "I am waiting for them to return now, and hope to sell your property in Hillsborough to them as soon as I can." On October 14th she received a reply, written by Sahland on defendant's business stationery, acknowledging receipt of Mrs. Pray's letter and stating: "I note what you say about Mr. and Mrs. Duffy, and as I told you before I am sure they can be sold the Anthony Hillsborough property. I also understand that they have returned from the East. I am leaving this matter to you for the time being, and sincerely hope that you will be able to close them." A number of discussions took place thereafter between Mrs. Pray and Sahland about the prospective sale, particularly as to a reduction in the price of the property, and the information Mrs. Pray received was imparted by her to Mrs. Duffy. Finally Sahland told Mrs. Pray that they had gone as far as they could with the proposed sale in the absence of Mr. Anthony, and that immediately upon the latter's return from abroad they would communicate with her. Instead of doing so, however, and in November, 1925, Anthony and Sahland completed the sale with the Duffys, and in consummation thereof Anthony executed a deed conveying the property to them for a consideration of $52,000, and, as stated, thereafter he refused to pay Mrs. Pray the agreed commission.

[1] At the trial defendant objected to the introduction in evidence of the written authorization above mentioned, claiming that it was void under the statute of frauds (subdivision 6, § 1624, Civ. Code), in that it contained no description of the property, particularly as to the city, county, or state wherein it was situate. The trial court ruled adversely, however, holding in effect that the authorization furnished sufficient means for identifying the property referred to therein, and therefore allowed plaintiffs to introduce evidence for such purpose, which consisted in part of testimony to the effect that at the time the authorization was signed defendant owned no other house in California than the one described in the complaint, namely, the one belonging to him in Hillsborough, San Mateo county, Cal. We find no error in the ruling.

[2] As uniformly held by numerous decisions in this state upon the subject, the essential part of a contract to employ a real estate broker, so far as the statute of frauds is concerned, is the matter of the employment and consequently need not describe the land specifically, if the terms of the employment can be made definite without it. The description of the land and its identity are only incidental to the main purposes of the contract, and, since contracts of that nature do not purport to involve the title or right of possession of land, much greater liberality is allowed in construing and curing defective descriptions therein than in cases of executory contracts to convey land or in deeds of grant, for, as stated, so far as the statute of frauds is concerned, the terms of the employment are the essential parts. The well-established rule is, therefore, that broker's contracts are not to be declared void merely because of a defect, uncertainty or ambiguity in the description of the property to be sold, when such defect can be cured by allegations and proof of extrinsic facts or circumstances. Sanchez v. Yorba, 8 Cal. App. 490, 97 P. 205; Maze v. Gordon, 96 Cal. 61, 30 P. 962; Toomy v. Dunphy, 86 Cal. 639, 25 P. 130; Goodrich v. Turney, 44 Cal. App. 516, 186 P. 806; Tolosano v. Will, 62 Cal. App. 622, 217 P. 803; Anderson v. Wilstrup, 34 Cal. App. 771, 168 P. 1150; Cowing v. Wofford, 68 Cal. App. 538, 229 P. 883; Russell v. Ramm, 200 Cal. 348, 254 P. 532; Avis v. Rebhan (Cal. App.) 267 P. 898. Says the court in Anderson v. Wilstrup, supra: "The office of a description is not solely to identify the land but also to furnish a means of identification," and accordingly a contract to employ a broker to sell real estate will not be nullified merely because of a defect in the description of the property, but such defect may be cured though not created by parol evidence.

In Sanchez v. Yorba, supra, the memorandum referred to the property merely as the "Yorba ranch," and it was held that such reference furnished means for readily identifying the property, and that consequently parol evidence was admissible to aid in its identification. Here, as will be observed, the written authorization was signed by the defendant Anthony, in which he chose to designate the property merely as "my house," which was the equivalent of saying the "Anthony house," and such designation evidently furnished sufficient means for readily identifying the property, because all of the witnesses referred to the Hillsborough property as "the Anthony house." Both Mrs. Pray and Sahland had no difficulty in going upon the premises and pointing out to the purchasers the exact property to be sold; there was no dispute about the identity of the property at the time the sale was consummated, or when the deed was prepared and executed; and nowhere in his answer did defendant aver, nor did he claim at the trial, that there was any misunderstanding as to the identity of the property referred to in the memorandum. As aptly said in Russell v. Ramm, supra, in dealing with a like situation: "From all these considerations it is clear that nobody connected with the transaction was at any time misled or under any misapprehension or uncertainty as to the particular properties referred to" in the memorandum.

[3] On this appeal defendant challenges the legal sufficiency of the testimony tending to show that at the time the authorization was signed defendant owned no other house in California than the one mentioned in the complaint; but, as in the case of Russell v. Ramm, supra, at the trial he made no attempt to question the truth of such testimony, nor did he pretend that on the date of the authorization he was the owner of any other property. Consequently, standing uncontradicted and unimpeached, such testimony was legally sufficient to establish, prima facie, the fact sought to be proved thereby. As will be noted, there is no question here of the authorization having contained an express contract of employment, and we conclude, therefore, in view of the facts above set forth and the authorities herein cited, that the trial court was fully warranted in holding that the authorization sufficiently complied with the statute of frauds to allow parol evidence to be admitted to identify the property, and that the evidence received in that behalf was legally sufficient for the purpose mentioned.

[4] Defendant's second contention is that Mrs. Pray was not the procuring cause of the sale, but this contention is completely negatived by the evidence already set forth, for it appears therefrom that the seller and the buyer were brought together through the efforts of the broker, who had been duly employed as such; that while the contract of employment was still in force, never having been abandoned by the broker nor rescinded by the seller, the sale was consummated by the seller with the buyer the broker had procured, on terms and for a price acceptable to the seller. Under such circumstances the broker is entitled to the payment of the full commissions. Pryor v. McGuire, 59 Cal. App. 234, 210 P. 532; Sessions v. Pacific Improvement Co., 57 Cal. App. 1, 206 P. 653; Bail v. Glantz, 78 Cal. App. 49, 248 P. 258, and cases cited therein.

[5, 6] Nor was the authorization terminated by lapse of time, as defendant claims. True, approximately five years elapsed between the time it was given and the date of the sale; but the authorization contained a cancellation clause granting defendant the right to cancel the agency upon giving two weeks' notice, and admittedly no such notice was ever given. Furthermore, it is apparent that defendant at all times prior to his return from Europe considered the authorization in full force, and led Mrs. Pray to believe so, because in 1924 he was still carrying on negotiations with her regarding the purchase price and the amount of personal property to be included in the sale; and in 1925 his representative, Sahland, acting under Anthony's instructions, actively co-operated with Mrs. Pray in carrying on negotiations with the Duffys, which the defendant subsequently ratified by consummating the sale with them; and, lastly, upon this point, the sale by Anthony doubtless amounted to an acceptance by him of the benefit of Mrs. Pray's services in initiating and carrying on the negotiations, which estops him, in our opinion, from making the claim that the authorization had lapsed.

[7] Defendant further contends that Mrs. Pray acted as agent for both seller and buyer without the knowledge of the other, and consequently forfeited any commissions due from the seller. This contention is utterly without merit. While Mrs. Pray was testifying on direct examination, counsel for defendant made the statement, in interpreting one of her answers, "You mean your client, Mrs. Duffy," to which Mrs. Pray replied, "It was my client after Mrs. Kolster introduced her," and on cross-examination she stated that she "supposed" she was acting for both the Duffys and Anthony. But it is plain that each answer amounted to no more than the legal conclusion of the witness, which, of course, is wholly insufficient to establish an agency, and, moreover, all of the facts and circumstances show beyond question that she was not the agent of the Duffys. As was said in Hicks v. Wilson, 197 Cal. 269, 240 P. 289, to hold otherwise would be to erroneously declare that, whenever a person desiring to buy real estate enters the office of a realty broker to make inquiry concerning the same, and the broker submits property to him, an agency is created, giving rise to an obligation on the part of such persons to compensate the broker for services performed under such employment.

[8, 9] We are also unable to sustain defendant's claim that the court erred in admitting in evidence Sahland's letter of October 28, 1925, and the substance of the conversations Mrs. Pray and Mrs. Hart had with him during the Duffy negotiations, for it appears from Sahland's deposition, which was the only evidence in the case on this point (Anthony having testified neither in person nor by deposition), that Sahland was authorized by Anthony to take care of the matter of the sale during the latter's absence, and in this connection the evidence shows that Sahland's activities were fully ratified by Anthony upon his return. The evidence mentioned was not offered or received for the purpose of establishing any part of the contract of employment, as defendant seems to contend, but to show performance on the part of Mrs. Pray and that said contract had been neither abandoned nor rescinded. For the latter purposes the evidence was admissible, even though Sahland's authority to act was not in writing. The recordation of the deed from Anthony to the Duffys was also admissible. Code Civ. Proc. § 1951. The rule stated in the cases cited and relied upon by defendant on this point became obsolete by virtue of the amendment to said Code section in 1889. St. 1889, p. 45.

The objections made to the court's refusal to give certain instructions proposed by defendant are not of sufficient importance, nor are they presented in such manner, as to require special attention. The record discloses that the jury was fairly and fully instructed on all material issues, and it is evident that the few instructions the court refused to give on behalf of defendant, either did not correctly state the law, or were not pertinent to the issues, or the substance thereof was covered in the court's charge, and therefore were properly refused.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

JOHNSTON v. WOLF et al. (Civ. 6419.) *

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 14, 1929.

1. Appeal and error 🔑32—Whether appeal lies to appellate court from superior court's judgment, affirming, modifying, or reversing judgment of municipal court, depends on whether cause of action arose in city where municipal court was located (Const. art. 6, § 4b, as amended in 1928).

Under Const. art. 6, § 4b, as amended in 1928 (see St. 1927, p. 2386), whether an appeal to District Court of Appeal lies from judgment of superior court affirming, modifying, or reversing judgment of municipal court, whose jurisdiction is established by Deering's Gen. Laws Consol. Supp. 1925–1927, p. 1607, depends on the place where cause of action arose, as disclosed by record, whether inside or outside limits of incorporated city wherein municipal court is situated.

2. Constitutional law 🔑22—Amendment to Constitution relating to appellate court jurisdiction became law on date people ratified it (Const. art. 18, § 1; art. 6, § 4b, as amended in 1928).

Amendment in 1928 to Const. art. 6, § 4b (see St. 1927, p. 2386), relating to appellate jurisdiction of District Courts of Appeal on appeal from superior courts, held to have become law on date it was ratified by the people, under Const. art. 18, § 1, providing that, if people shall approve and ratify amendment by majority of qualified electors voting thereon, amendment shall become part of Constitution.

3. Appeal and error 🔑32—In determining appellate court's jurisdiction, cause of action for nonpayment of trade acceptance is considered as arising at place designated for payment.

In determining whether District Court of Appeal had appellate jurisdiction on appeal from judgment of superior court, affirming judgment of municipal court in action on a trade acceptance, assumption is that cause of action arose at place designated in instrument for its payment.

4. Evidence 🔑10(2)—Judicial notice taken that Florence, Cal., is outside city of Los Angeles.

District Court of Appeal takes judicial notice of fact that Florence, Cal., is outside the city limits of the city of Los Angeles.

5. Appeal and error 🔑32—Original jurisdiction of action on trade acceptance payable at Florence was in superior court, instead of Los Angeles municipal court, and appellate jurisdiction in District Court of Appeal (Const. art. 6, §§ 4b, 5, as amended in 1928).

Where trade acceptance for less than $1,000 was made payable at Florence, Cal., cause of action arose there, and original jurisdiction in action thereon for nonpayment was in superior court, instead of municipal court of Los Angeles, where action was instituted, and appellate jurisdiction thereof in District Court of Appeal, under Const. art. 6, §§ 4b, 5, as amended in 1928 (see St. 1927, p. 2386).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County.

Action by R. G. Johnston against Robert Wolf and Louis Wolf, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of the Wolf Cabinet & Furniture Manufacturing Company. Judgment for plaintiff was affirmed by the superior court, and defendants appeal. On motion to dismiss appeal. Motion denied.

Andreani & Haines, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Goudge, Robinson & Hughes, of Los Angeles, and David A. Sondel, for respondent.

THOMPSON, J. This is a motion to dismiss an appeal on the ground that this court has no jurisdiction to entertain it. The facts are as follows:

The respondent commenced an action in the municipal court of Los Angeles, in which he sought to recover from the defendants the sum of $680.75. Judgment was rendered in his favor on the 21st day of June, 1928, in the amount prayed for, and on July 19, 1928, the defendants and appellants took an appeal therefrom to the superior court. On November 28, 1928, the last-named court rendered its decision, affirming the judgment of the municipal court. On December 12, 1928, appellants filed a notice of appeal from the judgment of the superior court to this court.

At the last general election, held November 6, 1928, the people ratified a constitutional amendment, proposed by the Legislature (see St. 1927, p. 2386), containing, among other things, an amendment to section 4b of article 6, which, so far as pertinent to the question here involved, reads: "The District Courts of Appeal shall have appellate jurisdiction on appeal from the superior courts except in cases in which appellate jurisdiction is given to the Supreme Court in all cases at law in which the superior courts are given original jurisdiction. * * *" Section 5 of the same article of the Constitution, amended at the same time, now states in part as follows: "The superior courts shall have original jurisdiction in all civil cases and proceedings except as in this article otherwise provided, and except, also, cases and proceedings in which jurisdiction is or shall be given by law to municipal or to justices' or other inferior courts. * * * The superior courts shall have appellate jurisdiction in such cases arising in municipal and in justices' and other inferior courts in their respective counties or cities and counties as may be prescribed by law." Sections 983, 984, 985 (added by St. 1925, p. 942, and amended by St. 1927, p. 118, §§ 1–3, and sections 986, 987, 988, 988a–988h, of the Code of Civil Procedure (added by St. 1927, p. 118, §§ 4–14), provide for appeals from the municipal to the superior courts, and a comprehensive mode of procedure for the hearing and disposition thereof. Section 29 of the act authorizing the establishment of municipal courts, etc. (Deering's Gen. Laws Consol. Supp. 1925–1927, p. 1607), provides that municipal courts shall have exclusive original jurisdiction of all cases at law in which the demand exclusive of interest amounts to $1,000 or less arising in the city where the court exists, and concurrent jurisdiction with the superior and justices' courts of causes of like amount arising outside the city but within the county in which the court is situated. Finally, section 13 of article 6 of the Constitution, also amended at the last election, gives to the Legislature the right to fix by law the jurisdiction of the municipal courts and concludes with this language: "Any action heretofore taken by the Legislature in fixing exclusive jurisdiction of municipal courts in cases at law is hereby ratified and confirmed."

[1] It would seem that nothing had been overlooked which would make it clear and inevitable that the superior courts, and the superior courts only, should have appellate jurisdiction of causes tried in the municipal courts, where the last-named courts have exclusive original jurisdiction. It must be manifest, however, from the language of section 4b of article 6 that the Constitution vests in the District Courts of Appeal appellate jurisdiction of all appeals from the superior court, where the latter possesses original jurisdiction, and not merely in those cases where the original jurisdiction is exercised. The words employed are "all cases at law in which the superior courts are given original jurisdiction." It cannot be gainsaid that they are given original jurisdiction of cases in excess of the jurisdiction of justices' courts and under $1,000 arising outside the limits of an incorporated city which has a municipal court but within the county. Over such causes they have concurrent original jurisdiction with the municipal courts. Whether an appeal to this court lies from a judgment of the superior court affirming, modifying, or reversing a judgment of the municipal court, therefore, depends upon where the cause of action arose as disclosed by the record—whether inside or outside the limits of the incorporated city where the municipal court is situated.

[2] In our discussion of the problem we have assumed that the constitutional amendment embodying the changes we have mentioned went into effect on November 6, 1928, the date when it was ratified by the people. That it may not be thought we have overlooked this feature of the case, we now assert that to be the law. The closing sentence of section 1 of article 18 of the Constitution, in referring to amendments submitted by the Legislature, says: "If the people shall approve and ratify such amendment or amendments, or any of them, by a majority of the qualified electors voting thereon, such amendment or amendments shall become a part of this Constitution." In Livermore v. Waite, 102 Cal. 113, 122, 36 P. 424, 427 (25 L. R. A. 312), it is said that it is beyond the power of the Legislature to submit an amendment "that will not, upon its adoption by the people, become an effective part of the Constitution, nor is it authorized to propose an amendment which, if ratified, will take effect only at the will of other persons, or upon the approval by such persons of some specific act or condition." And in Kingsbury v. Nye, 9 Cal. App. 574, 99 P. 985, the court aptly states: "It is beyond dispute that the amendment went into effect upon its adoption and ratification." A similarly succinct statement is found in San Francisco v. Pac. Tel. & Teleg. Co., 166 Cal. 244–252, 135 P. 971, 975, as follows: "The amendment, which is by its own terms * * * self-executing, was adopted at an election held on November 8, 1910, and became a part of the organic law on that date."

[3-5] But one question remains. Where did the cause of action arise? The affidavit supporting this motion says that the complaint alleges "that defendants accepted a trade acceptance in the sum of $680.75, payable at the Florence National Bank, Florence, Cal., to Brents' Furniture Company." For the purposes hereof we must say that the cause of action arose at the place designated in the instrument for its payment. The breach must be held to have occurred at the place the appellants were bound by their promise to pay. Raphael v. People's Bank of Benicia, 45 Cal. App. 115, 187 P. 53. We take judicial notice of the fact that Florence, Cal., is outside the city limits of Los Angeles, and for that reason conclude that original jurisdiction of the action was given to the superior court, and appellate jurisdiction to this court.

Motion denied.

OLIVER v. SPERRY et al. (Civ. 3674.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 16, 1929.

1. Executors and administrators ⟹315(5)—Under decree distributing property to person for life, with remainder to others, estate vested in remaindermen in existence at time of decree (Civ. Code, § 694).

Under decree of distribution distributing property to S. for life, and, upon her death, the remainder to F. and M., an estate vested in M., under Civ. Code, § 694, where both F. and M. were in existence at time of entry of decree.

2. Appeal and error ⟹1170(12)—Order in action for partition, if error, held harmless, where judgment found ownership of property in parties as law directs (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

In action for partition of real property, that plaintiff sued himself as an administrator of estate of deceased wife and afterwards court entered order of dismissal as to plaintiff as a party defendant, as administrator, if error, held harmless, under Const. art. 6, § 4½, where judgment of court found ownership of property in parties just as law directs and just as law gives to them.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Miller, Judge.

Action for partition of real property by J. E. Oliver against Carrie Evelyn Sperry, Charles Elmer Miller, and others. From the judgment, second defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

A. H. Carpenter, of Stockton, for appellant.

Louttit & Stewart and Louttit & Marceau, all of Stockton, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. This action was instituted to secure a decree of partition of certain real property, the plaintiff, J. E. Oliver, claiming an undivided one-quarter interest therein as surviving husband and heir at law of Harriett A. Oliver (née Miller), deceased.

[1, 2] The complaint sets forth that, at the time of her death, Harriett A. Oliver (née Miller) was the owner of an undivided one-half interest in and to the property described in the complaint; that the appellant, Charles Elmer Miller, was the surviving son and only child of the said Harriett A. Oliver; that the plaintiff and respondent, J. E. Oliver, was the surviving husband of the deceased; the property involved in this action was originally owned by Charles Sperry, deceased; that the said Charles Sperry died testate, leaving a will in which he devised his property to his surviving widow, Lydia J. Sperry, for and during the natural term of her life, and, upon her death, to Frank Sperry and Harriett A. Miller (at the time of her death Harriett A. Oliver). The decree of distribution in the estate of Charles Sperry, deceased, reads as follows: "That there be, and hereby is distributed to the said Lydia J. Sperry, for and during the natural term of her life, and upon her death, the remainder to Frank Sperry and Harriett A. Miller (née Sperry) forever, said remainder to be held by said Frank Sperry and Harriett A. Miller from the time of the death of said Lydia J. Sperry, as tenants in common, in equal proportions forever." Harriett A. Oliver (née Harriett A. Miller, née Harriett A. Sperry) died on the 12th day of July, 1917, leaving her surviving as heirs at law her husband, J. E. Oliver, and appellant, Charles Elmer Miller, her only surviving child. Lydia J. Sperry, the holder of the life estate, died on the 19th day of August, 1925.

The claim of the appellant is that no estate vested in Harriett A. Oliver (née Harriett A. Miller, née Harriett A. Sperry) at the time of the death of Charles Sperry, and that no estate was confirmed and vested in her by reason of the decree of distribution entered in the estate of Charles Sperry, deceased, which we have herein set forth. This contention of the appellant, however, was decided adversely in the case of Miller v. Oliver, 54 Cal. App. 495, 202 P. 168. The questions presented upon this appeal were also decided adversely to the appellant in the case of Hall v. Wright, 17 Cal. App. 502, 120 P. 429, and also in the matter of the Estate of De Vries, 17 Cal. App. 184, 119 P. 109. Were these cases not in existence, section 694 of the Civil Code determines the correctness of the judgment of the trial court in this case. That section reads: "A future interest is vested when there is a person in being who would have a right, defeasible or indefeasible, to the immediate possession of the property, upon the ceasing of the intermediate or precedent interest." It requires only a reading of the paragraph of the decree of distribution set out herein to conclusively demonstrate that there were two persons in existence at the time of the entry of the decree, to wit, Frank Sperry and Harriett A. Miller (Harriett A. Oliver at the time of her death), who would immediately succeed to the possession and enjoyment of the estate in which Lydia J. Sperry was given a life tenure. We do not need to elaborate further upon this question, as the Code provision and the two cases cited are conclusive.

It appears that the plaintiff sued himself as an administrator of the estate of Harriett A. Oliver, deceased, and afterwards the court entered an order of dismissal as to the plaintiff as a party defendant, as administrator. Whether this order was regular or irregular, valid or void, cannot affect the merits of this case or in any way prejudice the appellant, for the simple reason that the judgment of the court finds the ownership of the property in the parties just as the law directs, and just as the law gives to them. Therefore section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution applies, and no reversal can be had for an error, if admitted to be error, where no injury or prejudice has resulted.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

Where loans were made to borrower of $2,000 and $3,500, and borrower gave notes for $2,500 and $5,000, respectively, loans of money actually made were legal, and recoverable as such, though portion of loan above amount of cash received, together with interest at 12 per cent., was illegal and void under Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii).

3. Payment 🔑16(1), 67(4)—Note is not payment of debt, but evidence thereof, which may be rebutted in equity by proof of total failure of consideration.

Note given is not payment of debt, but merely evidence of debt, and such evidence may be rebutted in equity action by proof of total failure of consideration.

4. Usury 🔑76, 79—Plaintiffs, executing notes for debt in excess of amount actually received, could not avoid entire transaction for usury, but excess amounts would be voidable (Usury Law).

Where plaintiffs received cash loans of $2,000 and $3,500, and executed notes therefor for $2,500 and $5,000, each note was merely evidence of debt, susceptible of refutation, and in equitable action excess over actual amounts received would be voidable, independent of Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii), and hence plaintiffs could not have entire transaction declared void for usury.

5. Usury 🔑137—Excess amounts recited in notes over amounts received held not amounts "paid" for interest, and not basis for recovering treble damages (Usury Law).

Where plaintiffs received cash loans of $2,000 and $3,500, and executed notes for $2,500 and $5,000, excess amounts of $500 and $1,500 over amounts actually received cannot be considered as amounts "paid" for interest, under Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii), since they were never in fact paid, but were always under control of plaintiffs, as to repudiation for lack of consideration, and could not be made basis for recovery of treble damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Paid.]

6. Usury 🔑140—Borrower, receiving interest from another which he transmitted to lender, could not recover treble amount of illegal interest.

Where plaintiff, borrowing money of defendants, received interest therefor from another, and transmitted such interest to defendant, plaintiff could not recover treble amount of illegal interest, since merely transmitter of funds.

7. Usury 🔑140—Action to recover illegal interest or treble interest is maintainable only by actual payee, not transmitter of funds.

Action to obtain refund as illegal interest, or to treble such interest, would lie only on behalf of actual payee, and not by transmitter of funds.

8. Usury 🔑142(3)—Complaint held to show that $8,500 note was additional security for $10,000 note, precluding borrower from claiming $8,500 note was bonus, or from recovering treble damages for illegal interest (Usury Law).

Complaint alleging that plaintiff borrowed $10,000 from defendants, and gave as security for payment thereof $10,000 note and deed of trust, together with trust deed and note for $8,500, showed that $8,500 was given only as additional security, and precluded plaintiff from subsequently claiming such note was bonus for making of loan, in violation of Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii), and did not authorize trebling such bonus as damages for exaction of illegal interest.

9. Usury 🔑137—Borrower, not paying alleged bonus note given for obtaining loan, could not recover treble amount of bonus as damages for illegal interest (Usury Law).

Where alleged bonus for securing loan, evidenced by note recited to be additional security for loan, was never paid, and would probably never be paid, borrower could not claim treble amount of bonus as damages for illegal interest, under Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii).

10. Usury 🔑142(3)—Borrower could not claim alleged notes were payment, because given by others, under complaint alleging notes were by accommodation makers for borrower (Usury Law).

Under complaint to recover treble amount of note, alleged to be security for loan, but claimed to be in effect bonus for securing loan, plaintiffs could not claim notes were given by persons other than themselves, and therefore should be considered as payment, so as to entitle them to treble damages under Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii), where claim was antagonistic to complaint, and complaint was not amended to change allegations that each of Appeals from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. D. Murphey, Judge.

Separate actions by George E. Duke and wife against Irving S. Levy and others. From the judgments, plaintiffs separately appeal. Affirmed in each case.

G. E. Duke, of Oakland, in pro. per.

Owen D. Richardson, of San Jose, for respondents Levy, Meyerfeld, Shaw, Federal Finance Co., and San Jose Abstract & Title Co.

WARD, Justice pro tem. The three cases involved herein were brought by G. E. Duke, as plaintiff, his wife, Margaret, joining as plaintiff in two of them, in which promissory notes were actually given by herself and husband, and executed by them jointly, the relief in all three cases being to adjudge certain promissory notes and trust deeds securing them void for usury, and general relief. The numbers of the cases in the lower court in which Duke and his wife were the actual makers of the notes involved were respectively 87,869 and 87,871, that in which third parties made the notes was numbered 87,870. Those numbers will be used for convenience herein. There were also three separate appeals taken from orders made subsequent to judgment, but these have been dismissed by stipulation, and need not be here considered. It is stipulated that the defendant Irving S. Levy is the real party in interest; that defendants Meyerfeld, Shaw, and Federal Finance Company are assignees without consideration and for collection; that the defendant San Jose Abstract & Title Company is merely the trustee in the several deeds of trust; that defendants Pitman and Saleneek were not served with process and did not appear.

Appellants contend that, because they received $2,000 and gave a note and trust deed for $2,500 (case 87,869), and received $3,500 and gave a note and trust deed for $5,000 (case 87,871), that they had "paid" in each case respectively $500 and $1,500, and therefore were entitled to have the sums trebled in the account stated by the court. The contention is also made that, because of the usurious exaction of these sums which they did not receive, the transaction should be declared void.

[1-4] The latter contention will be discussed first. Whenever a legal and illegal transaction are combined, but are severable without confusion, the legal transaction may be upheld. The respective loans made in cash of $2,000 and $3,500 are easily ascertainable; they were legal loans of actual money and are recoverable as such. 2 Kent's Commentaries, 467. That portion of the loan (in these several notes) above the amount of cash actually received by appellants, together with the rate of interest of 12 per cent., is illegal and void, as being in excess of the rate allowed by the Usury Act (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii). A note given is not a payment of a debt; it is merely evidence of a debt, and this evidence may be rebutted in an equity action by proof of total failure of consideration. In that kind of an action, the excess over actual amounts received would be voidable. Considering these excess amounts, therefore, in this light, aside from the Usury Law, it would appear that they were only evidence of debt susceptible of refutation, and concerning only the immediate principals; the makers parting with nothing tangible, nothing with life and vitality, should the makers themselves attack them. It remained merely with the makers to attack the excess over amounts actually received, independent of the Usury Act.

[5] Viewed from the standpoint of the Usury Act, these excess amounts of $500 in the one case, and $1,500 in the other, may not be considered as amounts "paid" for interest, because, in point of fact, they were never paid, and were always under the control of plaintiffs as to repudiation for lack of consideration. The case of Haines et al. v. Commercial Mortgage Co., 200 Cal. 609, 254 P. 956, 255 P. 805, 53 A. L. R. 725, is the last word upon the subject by our courts and is determinative of the issues and contentions noted above in this: "Even a casual reading of the statute itself shows that the legislative intent was not to declare the whole contract void, but only the portion thereof relating to interest. * * * The contention that the principal debt is forfeited is wholly inconsistent with merely deferring the collection of the debt. * * * No authority has been cited and none can be found holding the principal debt forfeited under such provision of a statute." In that case the note involved provided for a stipulated sum to be paid monthly, and segregated as to principal and interest. An item had been included in the principal sum of the note, and was in reality a bonus and usurious. The lower court trebled this in its account stated, but the court on appeal said: "The item of $1,020 simply becomes surplusage, and not only cannot be collected, but cannot be the basis of apportionment for either principal or interest, and the payments on account of principal will serve to reduce the net principal, and will not be construed as a payment of said charge of $1,020, either in whole or in part. To authorize the infliction of the penalty the interest must, of course, be paid." Coulter v. Collins, 71 Cal. App. 381, 235 P. 465, cited.

This disposes of the contentions in actions 87,869 and 87,871.

Case numbered 87,870 in the superior court shows that the plaintiff Duke borrowed $10,000 from certain of the defendants, as the second amended complaint avers; that he gave as security for the payment thereof a $10,000 note and a deed of trust upon Merced county property from the Pitman defendants, but running directly to defendant Meyerfeld, and not to himself, together with a trust deed and note for $8,500 from the defendant Saleneek, running not to himself, but to defendant Meyerfeld. Both of these notes bore 7 per cent. interest and no more.

[6, 7] The defendants Pitman, who were not served or brought into court at all, paid to the plaintiff as interest $358.25, and plaintiff, in turn, transmitted it to the lender. In this action plaintiff asks that this $358.25 be trebled, and the trial court properly refused either to allow or to treble it, upon the ground that plaintiff was a mere transmitter, and had not himself paid the money out of his own funds. This is a correct view. A transmitter is not permitted to obtain a refund as illegal interest, or to treble such interest. An action such as this will only lie on behalf of the actual payee.

[8, 9] It is to be noted from the second amended complaint that each of these two notes of $10,000 and $8,500, respectively, bore 7 per cent. interest, and that "as security for the payment of the said principal sum of $10,000 and interest specified and mentioned in the first promissory note executed" that Duke caused a deed of trust to be made by the Pitmans to the defendant Meyerfeld. Further on plaintiff alleged in his complaint "that, as security for the payment of the said principal sum of $10,000 and interest specified and mentioned in the promissory note" of the Pitmans, Duke caused a deed of trust to be made by defendant Saleneek. It appears from these allegations that the delivery of the two notes and the two deeds of trust was merely as security for the payment of the original $10,000 note and its 7 per cent. interest. After these allegations there is found another of a contradictory nature, to wit: "The difference between the said sum of $10,000 so received by plaintiff as aforesaid and the aggregate sum of $18,500 represented by the two promissory notes and two deeds of trust hereinafter alleged, to wit, the sum of $8,500, represents, was, and is a value and sum taken and charged by said defendants, and each of them, for the said loan of $10,000 made to plaintiff as hereinbefore alleged, in exclusion of the interest mentioned in said promissory notes, contrary to the provisions * * * of * * * the Usury Law." Thereupon plaintiff asked that this $8,500 be trebled.

There is some evidence that plaintiff Duke was to split this $8,500, and receive $4,250 as his part of a bonus. However, the complaint is entirely silent as to any $4,250 portion of said $8,500 note and deed of trust being assigned or given as a bonus, and no further amendment of the complaint appears to have been made to make it conform to the evidence. The trial court confined itself in its findings to the allegations referred to herein of the second amended complaint and found "that, as security for the said principal sum of $10,000.00 and interest specified and mentioned in the first promissory note executed by the said" Pitmans, plaintiff caused a deed of trust to be made to lands in Merced county, and "that as additional security for said principal sum of $10,000 and interest specified and mentioned in said promissory note made" by said Pitmans, plaintiff caused defendant Saleneek to make a deed of trust for certain lands in Alameda county. It also made its decree that, considering both pieces as security for such principal sum and 7 per cent. interest of the first note, the Merced property be sold, and, if sufficient be not realized, that the Alameda piece be next sold. In the state of the pleadings, no other decision could have been given, as plaintiff had pleaded that the $8,500 was only "additional security, and by so alleging has foreclosed himself from afterwards claiming it as a 'bonus.'" However, even viewing the matter from the angle of the $4,250 of the $8,500 being a bonus, we come again to the interdiction of Haines v. Commercial Mortgage Co., supra, ruling. This $4,250 has not been paid in money. The $8,500 was only evidence of additional security. Under the ruling of the trial court that the second piece be sold to make up any deficiency after the first piece has been sold and applied to the $10,000 note, it will, we may safely say, never be paid. Plaintiff cannot, therefore, claim that it should be either allowed or trebled.

[10] Appellants point out that these notes were given by persons other than the plaintiff, and argues that therefore they should be considered as a payment, thereby taking it out of the rule in the Haines Case. Again the complaint is antagonistic to this theory, and it was not amended to change the allegations that each of these notes was made by accommodation makers for the plaintiff; so, in fact, they had no greater significance than if he had made them himself.

It follows that the judgment of the trial court must be affirmed in each of the three cases.

In addition to the three appeals dismissed, there are three appeals pending from an order in each case vacating a stay. Whether or not plaintiff was entitled to a stay becomes immaterial, upon the affirmance of the appeal on the judgment, and hence it is unnecessary to discuss at length these appeals, except to say that, from an examination of the record and the briefs submitted thereon, the orders appealed from should be affirmed.

Judgments and orders appealed from affirmed.

RODGERS v. BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. 6500.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Feb. 13, 1929.
Rehearing Denied March 15, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court April 11, 1929.

1. Municipal corporations 🔑218(6)—Civil service employee, when position ceased to exist, had right only to be returned to list of eligibles.

Under charter provisions providing that, if civil service appointee has not, at end of probationary period of not more than six months, been discharged, he is entitled to retain position so long as maintained unless he is removed, one who had been appointed to position of granite cutter had right only to be returned to list of eligibles when employment ceased.

2. Municipal corporations 🔑217(1)—Civil service employee, not having served continuously for twelve months, was not entitled to benefit of rule giving preference in re-employment to those so serving.

Civil service employee of city who had not continuously served for twelve months in his position was not entitled to benefit of rule giving preference in re-employment to those who had so served.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action for writ of mandate requiring reinstatement to civil service position by James F. Rodgers against the Board of Public Works of the City and County of San Francisco and others. From a judgment granting the writ, defendants appeal. Reversed.

John J. O'Toole, City Atty., and Thomas P. Slevin, Asst. City Atty., both of San Francisco, for appellants.

Joseph T. Curley and Marvin C. Hix, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. An appeal from a judgment granting a peremptory writ of mandate requiring the board of public works of the city and county of San Francisco to transmit to the civil service commission of the municipality a warrant representing an amount claimed by petitioner as wages, directing the commission to approve the same for payment, to reinstate petitioner's name on the official records of the commission as occupying the permanent position of granite cutter, and directing the board of public works, by virtue of and following such reinstatement, to admit him to the performance of the duties of the position.

The charter of the city and county makes provision for a system of civil service, and creates a civil service commission. The commission is required to classify in accordance with the duties attached thereto all places of employment in or under the offices and departments of the city and county not exempted, and to conduct examinations of applicants for places in the classified services. Petitioner on February 18, 1923, participated in an examination conducted by the commission for the purpose of establishing a list or register of those eligible for the position of granite cutter, as a result of which he was placed twelfth on the register prepared by the commission. The rules of the commission provided that after the lapse of four years the register so prepared should expire, and following another examination a new register of those eligible for the position should be prepared. Petitioner's first appointment was made in response to a requisition from the board of public works dated July 13, 1925, following which he was certified by the commission from the above list for appointment to the position of granite cutter. Thereafter, between July 29, 1925, and May 15, 1926, he worked 216 and a fraction days, being laid off on account of a lack of funds for the employment of granite cutters. Following this action, his name was returned to the register of those eligible for employment in that capacity. A like appointment following a similar requisition and certification was made on March 1, 1927, and petitioner was again employed between that date and September 30, 1927. During that period he worked 19 and a fraction days, his employment again ceasing by reason of a lack of funds. This register, under the rules of the commission, expired on March 14, 1927, and during that year another examination was held in which petitioner participated, and following which a new register was adopted on November 14, 1927. When requisitions for granite cutters were subsequently made, the commission certified the names of persons who, as the result of the last examination, ranked higher on the register of eligibles than petitioner, and for that reason he has not since been employed by the municipality.

The trial court found that from January 25, 1928, to March 6, 1928, the position of granite cutter was filled by a person not entitled thereto, who worked 30½ days; that, had the petitioner been employed, he would have been entitled to receive from the municipality the sum of $289.75.

Petitioner contends that, in view of the facts, his position under the provisions of the charter was permanent, and that his name should be carried on the records of the commission as a permanent civil service employee, having preference in re-employment whenever the services of a granite cutter are required.

The charter provisions and rules of the commission here material are as follows:

Charter, art. XIII, § 2: "The Commissioners shall classify, in accordance with duties attached thereto, all places of employment in or under the offices and departments of the City and County. * * * The Commissioners may grade, and from time to time regrade, the positions covered by any class, in accordance with salaries and duties, to the end that like salaries shall be paid for like duties. The Commissioners may from time to time provide by rule for the manner in which such positions shall be filled. * * * Any classification or grading may be amended or abolished by the Commission, and classes calling for similar qualifications may be consolidated, but persons who have been appointed from any such class shall retain any position lawfully held thereunder so long as such position is maintained unless removed in accordance with the provisions of Section 12. * * *"

Section 3: "The Commissioners shall make rules to carry out the purposes of this Article, and for examinations, appointments, promotions and removals. * * *"

Section 7: "* * * The Commissioners shall prepare a register for each grade or class of positions in the classified service of the City and County of the persons whose general average standing upon examination for such grade or class is not less than the minimum fixed by the rules of the Commissioners, and who are otherwise eligible. Such persons shall take rank upon the register as candidates in the order of their relative excellence, as determined by examination, without reference to priority of time of examination."

Section 9: "Whenever a position classified under this Article is to be filled, the head of the department or office controlling such position shall notify the Commission of that fact, and the Commission shall then certify to the appointing officer the name and address of one or more candidates in the discretion of the Commission, but not exceeding three, standing highest upon the register for the class or grade to which the position belongs. * * *"

Section 10: "* * * Such appointment shall be on probation for a period to be fixed by the rules of the Commissioners; but such rules shall not fix such period at exceeding six months. The Commissioners may strike off names of candidates from the register after they have remained thereon more than two years. At or before the expiration of the period of probation, the head of the department or office in which a candidate is employed may, by and with the consent of the Commissioners, discharge him upon assigning in writing his reason therefor to the Commissioners. If he is not then discharged his appointment shall be deemed complete. To prevent the stoppage of public business, or to meet extraordinary exigencies, the head of any department or office may, with the approval of the Commissioners, make temporary appointments, to remain in force not exceeding sixty days, and only until regular appointments, under the provisions of this Article, can be made."

Section 12: "No person employed in the classified civil service shall be removed or discharged except for cause. * * *"

Rules of the Commission:

Rule 19: "Probationary Period. Section 1. Applies to Permanent Position Only.—The probationary period provided for by Section 10, Article XIII, of the Charter may be served only in a position defined by Rule 33 as a permanent position. Persons appointed to a permanent position shall serve a period of six months consecutively, after which the appointment shall be deemed complete. An appointee who has served the probationary period as herein defined is entitled to hold the position as long as it exists and no change of title or salary shall be deemed to change his right to such position so long as the duties remain substantially the same as when such appointment was made. * * *"

Rule 33: "Permanent and Temporary Positions. All positions which are expected by the appointing power to exist for a period of six months or over shall be considered for the purposes of the rules of this Commission, as permanent positions. All other positions shall be considered as temporary positions, and appointments to temporary positions shall automatically expire at the end of four months. The probable period of employment must be specified by the appointing power in its requisition. This rule shall govern only appointments made after July 15, 1912."

Rule 22: "Reduction in Force. Section 1. Temporary Positions.—Persons appointed to temporary positions shall be 'laid off' or relieved from duty in the inverse order of their rank on the eligible list. Upon being laid off they shall resume their respective places upon the register of eligibles. Section 2. Permanent Positions.—Whenever it becomes necessary to reduce the number of employees in permanent positions in any department, the employee last appointed in such position in that department shall be laid off first; and he shall be returned to his place on the eligible register. Section 4. Hold-Overs.—Whenever, because of lack of work or lack of funds, or for purposes of retrenchment, a person who has served for one year, continuously under appointment in an original entrance position that is considered within the meaning of the rules of this Commission as a permanent position, is laid off or separated from such position, he shall, while so separated from such position, be termed a 'hold-over' and shall be preferred for reappointment in the first vacancy thereafter occurring in the class from which he was so separated; provided that if there be more than one such 'hold-over' in a class, the one having the longest service under permanent appointment for the period of two years next preceding the date of receipt of requisition shall be given the preference, and when ties exist in the service during such two-year period the person who was in line first for original appointment shall be preferred. When such 'hold-overs' have not been re-appointed to a permanent position within a period of two years from the date of their last lay-off, their eligibility for reappointment may be cancelled by the Commission. Persons appointed to positions considered as permanent under the rule who are laid off because of lack of work or lack of funds before having served one year continuously under such permanent appointment shall be returned to the existing list of eligibles according to the general average percentage they received in examination and shall be treated as new eligibles."

[1, 2] The question involved relates to the tenure and employment of civil service employees, and the further question of whether, when the employment of an appointee has ceased by reason of the discontinuance of the position or the completion of the work for which he was employed, he is entitled to a preference in re-employment when the need again arises for services of the character rendered by him. This question is primarily controlled by sections 2 and 10 of article XIII of the charter, and, secondly, by rules made by the commission under the power conferred by the civil service provisions of the charter. Under these sections, appointments are required to be on probation; the probationary period may not be longer than six months, and, if the appointee is not at that time or prior thereto discharged, he is entitled to retain such position so long as it is maintained (section 2), unless removed in accordance with section 12. These appointments are termed by the charter (section 10) "regular" appointments, as distinguished from "emergency" appointments of not exceeding sixty days' duration, authorized by the same section. This does not mean, however, that at the expiration of the probationary period the appointment becomes permanent in any sense other than that the appointee cannot be discharged except for cause and after trial, so long as there is work for him in his position, his only right under the provisions of the charter upon being relieved of his position through its abolition or the completion of the work for which he was employed being the right to be returned to the eligible list, and upon such return he is given no preference by reason of his previous employment, except in so far as the rules of the commission may accord it.

Under the power to make rules given to the commission by the charter for the purpose of carrying into effect the civil service provisions thereof, the commission has divided the positions classed by the charter as regular positions into permanent and temporary; the former being those positions which are expected by the appointing power to exist for a period of six months or over, the latter consisting of those which by the appointing power are expected to be of short duration (rule 33). The probationary period prescribed by the charter is applied by the commission (rule 19) only to the first-mentioned of these classes. By rule 22, §§ 1 and 2, it is provided that, whenever it becomes necessary to reduce the number of employees, the employees laid off shall be returned to their places on the eligible list, but by section 4 of said rule 22 it is further provided that, whenever such a person has served continuously for one year in a position that is considered within the meaning of the rules of the commission as a permanent position, he shall be termed a hold-over, and shall be preferred for appointment to the first vacancy occurring in the class from which he was relieved. The persons appointed to such positions who are laid off before having served one year continuously shall be returned to the existing list of eligibles according to the general average percentage they received in examination, and shall be treated as new eligibles.

By this rule 22 it will be perceived that there is a preference in the matter of re-employment accorded to former employees who theretofore have served continuously for one year. The petitioner in the present case had not served continuously for one year in his previous employment, and was therefore not entitled to this preference. His contention is that he had served continuously for more than six months, and, as the longest period of probation provided by the charter is six months, he held a permanent position, and is therefore entitled to the preference accorded by rule 22. The answer to this contention is that, while he held under a "regular" appointment which assured him undisturbed tenure so long as his position was maintained, yet upon his position ceasing to exist or, in the words of the charter, being no longer maintained, his only right was to be returned to the list of eligibles. Not having served continuously for twelve months in his position, he was not entitled to the benefit of rule 22 giving the preference in re-employment to those who had so served. In accordance with rule 22 he was then laid off, returned to his place on the list of eligibles, and, if he thereby found himself in competition with others on the list of higher rating, this is the exact position in which the charter placed him, and indeed the position in which he ought to be placed, if the spirit of the civil service provisions of the charter is to be given effect, which requires that vacant positions be filled by those highest on the eligible list.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is reversed.

HOLQUIN et al. v. ALLISON, County Clerk et al. (Civ. 6281.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 21, 1929.

Rehearing Denied March 22, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 22, 1929.

1. Time 🔑9(6)—New trial cannot be granted after expiration of two months' period even though last day is holiday (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 12, 660).

Court was without jurisdiction to grant motion for new trial after expiration of two months' period prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 660, even though the last day of such period fell on a holiday, the statutory period not being extended in such case by virtue of the provisions of section 12 authorizing the excluding of the last day in computing time in case such day is a holiday.

2. Mandamus 🔑4(3)—Mandamus lies from order granting new trial after expiration of statutory period, regardless of whether right of appeal exists (Code Civ. Proc. § 660).

Mandamus lies from order granting a new trial after expiration of statutory period of two months prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 660, regardless of whether or not a right of appeal exists, in that such an order constitutes an act without and in excess of jurisdiction of trial court.

Original application for writ of mandamus by Ildefonso Holquin and another against Harry L. Allison, County Clerk of the County of San Bernardino, and others. Writ granted.

Leo B. Ward, of Los Angeles, and A. S. Maloney, of San Bernardino, for petitioners.
Victor T. Watkins, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. On January 25, 1928, the petitioners herein were awarded a verdict in the sum of $4,000 damages against the respondents Daley Water Company, a corporation, and Augua Mansa Company, a corporation. On March 19, 1928, a motion for new trial was argued and submitted upon briefs, the plaintiffs being by stipulation allowed two days and the defendants one day thereafter in which to present their respective written arguments and authorities. It is alleged by petitioners, and is not denied, that on January 25, 1928, "judgment upon said verdict so rendered was thereupon entered in said cause in the presence of said parties and their respective counsel," and that "thereafter, and in due time, defendants in said action served upon the petitioners herein" a notice of their intention to move the respondent court for a new trial. On March 26, 1928, the respondent court made its order granting the motion for a new trial. Thereafter petitioners moved to set aside the order last mentioned, upon the ground, it is averred, that the court was without jurisdiction to rule thereon after the expiration of two months from the date of the verdict of the jury, and demanded an execution upon said judgment, which was refused. A writ of mandate is here prayed, directing the respondent superior court and the clerk thereof to issue execution upon the judgment theretofore entered.

Respondents contend that since the period of two months from January 25th expired Sunday, March 25, 1928, the motion for new trial was properly granted on the following day under the provisions of section 12 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The power of courts to grant new trials is fixed by section 660 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which reads, in part, as follows: "The power of the court to pass on motion for new trial shall expire within two months after the verdict of the jury or service on the moving party of notice of the entry of the judgment. If such motion is not determined within said two months, the effect shall be a denial of the motion without further order of the court."

Section 12 of the same Code provides that: "The time in which any act provided by law is to be done is computed by excluding the first day and including the last, unless the last day is a holiday, and then it is also excluded."

The respective parties have submitted exhaustive briefs embracing quotations from numerous decisions wherein these sections have been construed together prior to the amendment of section 660 reducing the limitation from three months to two months. Petitioners cite Shepherd v. Superior Court, 54 Cal. App. 673, 202 P. 466, which, upon the authority of Bidwell v. Sonoma County Trans. Co., 39 Cal. App. 330, 178 P. 722, held that: "The three months' period of limitation within which the court could determine the motion expired on Sunday, April 3rd, and was not extended by the fact that the last day, and all of the Saturday preceding, from 12 o'clock noon until 12 o'clock midnight, were holidays, and a nonjudicial period." They also rely upon Lancel v. Postlethwaite, 172 Cal. 326, 156 P. 486, wherein it was held that Saturday was not a holiday within the meaning of section 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure so as to require its exclusion in computing the period of time within which to perform judicial acts, under the provisions of section 12 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Respondents contend that in all such cases the precise point here presented was not directly raised, and that their language was in this respect mere dictum. In the case last mentioned this is true, and in Shepherd v. Superior Court, supra, the essential holding was that the superior court had no power to grant a new trial at the residence of the judge on Saturday afternoon, a legal holiday.

In Lancel v. Postlethwaite, supra, it was also held that Saturday cannot fairly be held to be a "holiday" within the meaning of section 10 of the Civil Code, and excluded, assuming for the purposes of that decision the applicability of section 12 to section 660 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It was there further said, however: "The trial court should determine a motion for a new trial regularly made, 'at the earliest possible moment,' and it is expressly made its duty to do so. It has the power to grant a new trial at any time 'within three months after the verdict of the jury or service on the moving party of notice of the decision of the court,' and also power to formally deny such motion within said time. Its failure to determine the motion at all within said time is a denial of the motion. In other words, a trial court is empowered to grant a new trial, upon a motion duly made to that end, at any time within three months after the verdict of the jury or service on the moving party of notice of the decision of the court, but not thereafter; and its failure to determine within such time any such motion regularly made is a denial of such motion and a 'determination in the trial court' within the meaning of section 939 of the proceedings on such motion."

[1] We think it clearly the intention of the Legislature, and the import of decisions construing the sections here in controversy, that a motion for new trial must be granted or denied within the statutory period prescribed by section 660 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that beyond the final date of such period, even though it be a holiday, the court shall be without jurisdiction to act thereon. If it be assumed that the language employed in each of the foregoing instances was dicta, the rule was stated as definitely applicable to the circumstances indicated, and was so invoked in Ransome-Crummey Co. v. Superior Court, 188 Cal. 393, 205 P. 446, upon application for a writ of mandate requiring the court to take jurisdiction of a motion for new trial after the expiration of the statutory period. It was held that since the petitioner had forfeited its corporate powers, it did not legally exist as a litigant, and could not receive or give notice in pending proceedings. The Supreme Court there again expressly held, however, upon the authority of previous enunciations:

"It was suggested upon the oral argument that the court in any event is now without jurisdiction to hear the motion because of the lapse of more than three months from the date of the purported notice of entry of judgment. It is true that a failure to pass upon such a motion within three months of the notice of entry of judgment is in effect a denial thereof. Code Civ. Proc. § 660, as amended in 1917 [Stats. 1917, p. 240]; Lancel v. Postlethwaite, 172 Cal. 326, 156 P. 486; San Francisco, etc., T. Rys. v. Superior Court, 172 Cal. 541, 157 P. 604."

We are convinced that section 660 of the Code of Civil Procedure is specific and controlling. In Bidwell v. Sonoma County Trans. Co., supra, the defendant appealed from the ruling vacating an order granting a new trial, under circumstances not unlike those here presented. The precise point to be there presented was argued and the Supreme Court denied a hearing after affirmance. The conclusion of the District Court of Appeal is apt: "A careful consideration of the language of these two sections leads us to the conclusion that section 660 is not affected by the provisions of section 12, and that the three-month period during which a court has power to pass upon a motion for a new trial is not extended if the closing day thereof should fall upon a holiday."

[2] It is next insisted by respondents that the petitioners herein had a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy by appeal from the order granting a new trial, and are not properly before this court. Since said order constituted an act without and in excess of the jurisdiction of the trial court certiorari will lie. It appears to have been so held in Diamond v. Superior Court, 189 Cal. 732, 210 P. 36. In that case it was said that certiorari would lie, especially because of the fact that the act of the trial court had been in excess of its jurisdiction. The same is true in the instant case, and this regardless of whether or not a right of appeal exists.

The petition is granted.

WITT et al. v. KLIMM et al., Board of Health and Milk Inspection Service. (Civ. 6491.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 21, 1929.

Rehearing Denied March 21, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 22, 1929.

1. Municipal corporations ⚿592(1)—Law regulating production and sale of milk does not prohibit enactment of additional local regulations by cities (Pure Milk Law).

Pure Milk Law (St. 1927, p. 1944), prescribing certain general rules applicable to all cities and elsewhere in state, regulating the production and sale of milk for human consumption, does not prohibit enactment of additional local regulations by cities in keeping with purpose of state law, so long as requirements of municipal ordinances are not unreasonable or discriminatory.

2. Food ⚿1—Municipal corporations ⚿592(1)—Ordinance requiring that milk sold within city be pasteurized within city held valid exercise of police power, and not to conflict with statute (Pure Milk Law, §§ 4a, 5; Const. art. 11, § 11).

Ordinance of city of San Francisco, requiring that milk sold in city be pasteurized within city and county of San Francisco, does not conflict with Pure Milk Law, §§ 4a, 5 (St. 1927, pp. 1949, 1951), and is not unreasonable or discriminatory, but is a valid exercise of police power, under Const. art. 11, § 11.

Applications for writ of mandate by Albert Witt, Sr., and others against Frank J. Klimm and others, members of and constituting the Board of Health and Milk Inspection Service of the City and County of San Francisco, to compel respondents to issue permit to sell milk. Writ denied.

Chauncey Tramutolo, Maurice T. Dooling, Jr., F. A. Devlin, and Geo. M. Naus, all of San Francisco (Ruth Lange, of San Francisco, of counsel), for petitioners.

John J. O'Toole, City Atty., and Henry Heidelberg, Deputy City Atty., both of San Francisco (Arthur H. Barendt, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

PRESTON, Justice pro tem. This is an original proceeding in mandamus. The petitioners seek an order of this court compelling the board of health and milk inspection service of the city and county of San Francisco to issue to them a permit to distribute and sell in San Francisco milk produced, pasteurized and bottled in Colma, San Mateo county, Cal. The facts are not in dispute and are briefly these:

Petitioners are dealers in milk, which they produce, pasteurize, and bottle at Colma, San Mateo county, Cal. They have applied for a permit to sell "grade A pasteurized market milk" in the city and county of San Francisco, which has been refused by the department of health on the ground that San Francisco Ordinance No. 7025 (N. S.) requires such milk to be pasteurized within the city and county of San Francisco. The real and personal property used at Colma by petitioners in the conduct of their dairy business has a value in excess of $100,000, and includes dairy cows, a pasteurizing plant, cow barns, milking barns, etc. They produce and pasteurize not less than 800 gallons of "grade A pasteurized market milk" per day.

The Pure Milk Law of California (Stats. 1927, p. 1944) establishes uniform regulations for the production and sale of milk within the state. Section 4 (a) thereof provides for the establishment and maintenance of a milk inspection service and laboratory by counties, or groups of counties; cities, or groups of cities, or groups of cities and counties. Pursuant to this authorization, the county of San Mateo has established and now maintains in connection with its health department such a milk inspection service, which has been, and now is, approved by the director of agriculture of the state of California, in accordance with the authority granted to him by section 4 (d) of said Pure Milk Law of California.

The city and county of San Francisco maintains a similar approved milk inspection service. The milk produced by petitioners is produced under the supervision of the milk inspection service of San Mateo county. Section 5 of said Pure Milk Law of California provides that it shall be unlawful to sell guaranteed "grade A or grade B milk," except under the supervision of an approved inspection service, and further provides that milk so produced under such supervision may be sold "in territory within the jurisdiction of any other milk inspection service, if the consent of said other milk inspection service has been previously obtained."

The pasteurizing plant operated by petitioners in Colma is situated less than two miles from the south boundary of the city and county of San Francisco. The milk pasteurized and bottled at this plant can be transported across the county line and into San Francisco by automobile trucks in about 15 or 20 minutes. Petitioners now have customers in San Francisco to whom they are selling and delivering their milk in the aggregate quantity of 30 gallons per day, and contend that, in the event they are permitted to sell milk in San Francisco, they will be able to procure many additional customers.

As above stated, petitioners applied on May 6, 1928, for a permit to sell their pasteurized milk within the city and county of San Francisco, and on May 8, 1928, the board of health of said city denied petitioners' application for a permit on the sole ground that the pasteurized milk which petitioners desired to sell in San Francisco "was not and is not to be pasteurized within San Francisco as required by subdivision 10 of section 3 of said Ordinance No. 7025, which provides: '* * * All milk intended for human consumption, in San Francisco, that comes from cows that have not passed the tuberculin test, except when sold in bulk to the wholesale trade, shall be pasteurized in San Francisco in accordance with the method set forth herein.' * * *"

The milk pasteurized by petitioners in their plant at Colma is pasteurized according to the method outlined in the above ordinance, and the Colma plant is equipped as required in said ordinance, and the "grade A pasteurized market milk" produced by petitioners conforms to the standard established by the said Pure Milk Law.

Petitioners contend that the ordinance in question is unconstitutional for various reasons, among them being that it is unreasonable and unduly oppressive and makes an arbitrary discrimination against outside producers of milk. The ordinance in question is a health ordinance, prescribing, among other things, what is required of dealers in fourth-grade milk, in order to sell the same within the city and county of San Francisco, to wit, it must be pasteurized within the city and county of San Francisco and under the immediate supervision of respondents.

It is not denied by petitioners that the city and county of San Francisco has the power, under section 11 of article 11 of the Constitution, to enact police regulations and ordinances promoting considerations of public welfare, public morals, public health, and public safety, provided that such regulations and ordinances are not in conflict with general laws. It is also admitted that the charter of the city and county of San Francisco vests in the board of supervisors power to enact all those ordinances necessary for the protection of the public health, so long as such ordinances are not in conflict with the state law.

[1] As we have noted above, the Legislature has seen fit to enact the "Pure Milk Law of California," which prescribes certain general rules applicable in all cities and elsewhere in California, regulating the production and sale of milk for human consumption. This law, however, does not prohibit the enactment of additional local regulations by municipalities in keeping with the purpose of said "Pure Milk Law," so long as the requirements of the municipal ordinance are not in themselves pernicious, as being unreasonable or discriminatory. There may be different regulations without a conflict. Ex parte John, 17 Cal. App. 58, 118 P. 722; Ex parte Hong Shen, 98 Cal. 681. 33 P. 799; In re Murphy, 128 Cal. 29, 60 P. 465; In re Hoffman, 155 Cal. 114, 99 P. 517, 132 Am. St. Rep. 75; In re Iverson, 199 Cal. 582, 250 P. 681.

In Re Iverson, supra, the court said: "Where the legislature has assumed to regulate a given course of conduct by prohibitory enactments, a municipality with subordinate power to act in the matter may make such new and additional regulations in aid and furtherance of the purposes of the general law as may seem fit and appropriate to the necessities of the particular locality and which are not in themselves unreasonable."

[2] The provisions of the ordinance requiring that the milk be pasteurized within the city and county of San Francisco is simply a new and additional and more stringent regulation than that contained in the state law on the same subject. These requirements of the ordinance are not in themselves unreasonable or discriminatory and do not conflict with the state law, therefore, both may stand.

The ordinance is not destructive of petitioners' business. There is nothing in the ordinance to prevent petitioners from selling their milk in San Francisco; they only have to pasteurize their milk within the city and county of San Francisco, the same as all other outside dealers in milk are doing. It is an admitted fact that practically all of the pasteurized milk sold in San Francisco is produced from outside the said city, and is sent into the city for pasteurization before being sold for human consumption. Petitioners, like other producers outside of the city and county of San Francisco, must comply with this ordinance. This is not unduly oppressive on petitioners. A great deal of the milk comes from other counties into San Francisco, such as Alameda, Contra Costa, Marin, and even Sonoma, and all these producers conform to the ordinance, and petitioners live within two miles of the city limits, and are, therefore, more fortunately situated than a great many of the other outside dealers in milk. Furthermore, petitioners knew, or should have known, at the time they erected their plant at Colma, of the existence of the ordinance in question.

If petitioners' contention be sound, and the health department of the city and county of San Francisco be required to go to Colma and there inspect petitioners' pasteurization plant, there would be nothing to prevent all outside dealers in milk from requiring the same thing, and the health department would be called upon to make inspections of pasteurization plants in many of the other counties of the state, such as Alameda, Solano, Contra Costa, and possibly others. It goes without saying that such a requirement of the health department would not only be unreasonable and exceedingly expensive, but it would seriously impair, if not wholly destroy, the efficiency of the entire inspection service.

The matter of pasteurization of milk before being sold for human consumption has been the subject of ordinances in many of the large cities of the United States, and many of such ordinances have been reviewed by the courts of last resort in many of our sister states. The Supreme Court of Illinois, in the case of Koy v. Chicago, 263 Ill. 123, 104 N. E. 1104, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 67, in passing upon and holding valid an ordinance of the city of Chicago, requiring the pasteurization of all milk for human consumption, and that pasteurization plants be equipped in a certain way, used the following language which is particularly appropriate in the case at bar, to wit:

"There is no article of food in more general use than milk; none whose impurity or unwholesomeness may more quickly, more widely, and more seriously affect the health of those who use it. The regulation of its sale is an imperative duty which has been universally recognized. This regulation in minute detail is essential, and extends from the health and keeping of the cows which produce the milk, through all the processes of transportation, preservation and delivery to the consumer. Not only may laws and ordinances require that milk offered for sale shall be pure, wholesome and free from the bacilli of any disease, but they may and do, in order to produce this result, prescribe the manner in which such purity, wholesomeness and freedom from disease shall be secured and made to appear. The cows may be required to be registered with a designated public authority; the dairies to be conducted and managed according to prescribed regulations, and, together with the dairy utensils, subjected to inspection; the receptacles in which milk is contained to be of prescribed character and capacity; the labels to be placed according to fixed regulations and to contain certain required information; the milk to be prepared in the manner, at the times and by the means directed and at all times to be subject to inspection. These may be drastic restrictions upon a private business, but experience and the increasing knowledge of the causes of disease and the agencies of its propagation have demonstrated the necessity of such restrictions to the preservation of the public health. The object of all such restrictions is the preservation of the public health, and as a means to that end the protection of the general public against dishonest vendors of milk. They all impose inconveniences and expense upon the dealers in milk, but they are not on that account unreasonable, unjust or oppressive. Legislatures and city councils, in the exercise of the police power, may prohibit all things hurtful to the health and safety of society even though the prohibition invade the right of liberty or property of an individual. * * *"

Although we have not discussed in detail all the attacks made by petitioners upon said ordinance, we have, nevertheless, carefully considered them all and we are of the opinion that none of them is sufficient to invalidate the ordinance, and that a further detailed discussion is unnecessary. We think the ordinance in question is a valid exercise of the police power of the city and county of San Francisco, enacted and enforced in the interest of public health, and should be upheld.

The writ is denied.

J. B. ERRECA, Plaintiff and Respondent, v. LOS BANOS COTTON GINS, Inc. (a Corporation), Defendant and Appellant. (Civ. 3221.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 22, 1929.

Appeal by defendant from orders of the Superior Court of Merced County, E. N. Rector, Judge, denying motion to vacate judgment and refusing to grant motion for new trial. Affirmed and dismissed.

R. R. Sischo, of Merced, for appellant.
Frank C. Hale, of Merced, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The defendant appeals from the order denying its motion to vacate the judgment rendered against it in favor of the plaintiff on the 17th day of June, 1926, and also appeals from an order refusing to grant its motion for a new trial.

By the provisions of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, no appeal lies from the denial of a motion for new trial. The facts disclosed by the record in this case are identical with the facts which appear in the record in the case of Startzman v. Los Banos Cotton Gins, Inc., a Corporation, 82 Cal. App. 624, 256 P. 220. In that case the order of the trial court refusing to set aside the judgment was affirmed.

Upon the authority of the case just referred to, it follows that the order denying the motion to set aside the judgment in the action must be affirmed; and it is so ordered. The appeal from the order refusing to grant a new trial is dismissed.
